I am honoured to introduce the third edition of Directors in the Twilight Zone, a comparative study of the liabilities and duties of directors, officers and others and the risks they may be exposed to, during the "twilight zone". The first edition was published in 2001 and the second in 2005. This topic continues to be of critical importance to those who manage and advise corporations as well as to the policy makers. New developments have taken place in many countries covered in earlier editions. There was a demand to cover more countries. This edition was therefore very much needed. This edition covers 21 countries, including two new country chapters; Malaysia and Poland.

The current global economic downturn is a challenging time for all companies and their directors. While the concept of limiting liability for a company's financial failure to the company's assets coupled with providing protection to its directors and officers is one of the central tenets of economic development it cannot be limitless. Society is increasingly seeking to hold accountable those seen as responsible for an entity's failure. The number of financially distressed companies is steadily increasing and the primary focus of many directors is on keeping the company afloat. The directors and others responsible for the affairs of the companies have to often take difficult decisions. In doing so, they may expose themselves to the risks of personal liabilities and claims for acts carried out during the "twilight period". When a company is in financial difficulty, the directors inevitably focus on the future prospects for success. When things go wrong however, judges will judge them in retrospect. Despite these concerns, the courts and insolvency practitioners will not penalise directors who have acted prudently and protected the interests of the creditors.

This publication provides excellent insight into such issues and we sincerely hope that it will be a useful reference tool to all our members.

I would like to thank Gordon Stewart and Helen Pattinson of Allen & Overy LLP for once again assisting and supporting INSOL to bring this publication to this excellent standard. Their commitment during this period of extreme demands on professionals is very much appreciated. Neil Cooper of Zolfo Cooper also assisted with reviewing some of the chapters and we thank Neil for his assistance. I would also like to acknowledge those who contributed the chapters from various countries around the globe.

The Trustees of the Barbican Settlement, Artemis Trustees Limited have kindly provided a grant to assist with the production of this third edition, we greatly value and appreciate their continuing support of the work of INSOL International. INSOL also thanks, on behalf of it's members, the support of the Group of Thirty Six.

One of INSOL's unique abilities is bringing together professionals from across the world to network and to learn from each other. It occurred to me that one way of utilising this capability would be to produce a global comparative study of a particular area of practical difficulty to practitioners dealing with financially distressed companies. This was the genesis of the Twilight Zone project.

As to which particular area would be suitable for comparative study, I had often been struck by the different approaches across the world to what directors can or cannot do safely in that difficult period (what I dub the Twilight Zone) when a company runs into financial difficulty and it is not certain whether or not a formal insolvency will ensue or whether some form of consensual solution can be achieved among the stakeholders (the company, the debt and the equity). I had come across jurisdictions which had laws that threatened creditors by preventing them proving in a subsequent insolvency for credit afforded to an insolvent company. Some jurisdictions had strict criminal sanctions for directors. Other, more litigious cultures, which one might have expected to have a plethora of causes of action against directors, seemed in practice to have none. Finally there were the jurisdictions which seemed to focus on the reasonableness of the directors' conduct – a negligence test if you like. This fascinating disparity is the subject of this book, now in its third edition.

The first edition of the book covered thirteen jurisdictions from across the continents. The second edition added six countries and the third two countries, while updating the existing contributions. Many INSOL members have generously given of their time and expertise in writing about their jurisdictions.

The book has proved popular with INSOL members and I see no reason why in due course we won't add more jurisdictions and do a fourth edition.

Our aim in producing the Twilight Zone has never been to write a legal treatise on directors' duties in the chosen jurisdictions. Further, the factual situation of any company will have a huge impact on the advice professionals give to its directors. So, the structure is a series of questions focussing on the key difficult areas for directors, creditors and other stakeholders - such as potential liabilities for insolvent trading, clawbacks, ability to borrow/provide new credit (and get security for that new credit) with answers to these questions for each jurisdiction. The vision is of the INSOL member rushing to catch a flight to an unfamiliar jurisdiction, grabbing the CD Rom and using the question and answer system to orientate him or herself in respect of the regime they are about to encounter so that they know in general terms the pressures (if any) being felt by the various players in the drama. We hope INSOL members continue to find it useful.

Some major expressions of gratitude are necessary. Thank you indeed to the contributors of the material whose names are given in the table above – without their hard word and dedication we would literally have had no work product. Thank you to Neil Cooper, past President of INSOL, for his work as co-editor and also for his personal support for the project at all stages.

Finally, I would like to record by debt of gratitude to my colleague Helen Pattinson who updated the English version and shouldered the main burden of editing and organisation. Each contributor has stated his/her view of the position in his or her jurisdiction as at 1 January 2009.

Directors in the Twilight Zone

Overview by Philip R. Wood*

The world has come a long way since the notorious English case of Re Cardiff Savings Bank [1892] 2 Ch 100 where a director who was appointed to the board of the Cardiff Savings Bank at the age of six months and who attended only one board meeting in 38 years, was held not to be liable in negligence for mismanagement that had occurred.

The problem of officer liability for insolvency arises from the risks resulting from the separation of ownership and control. Directors manage other people's assets and so the law imposes duties on them to manage in the interests of the beneficiaries. As is so often the case, the real test of the credentials of a jurisdiction is on insolvency which is when legal doctrine really matters and when the law has to make a choice. Insolvency is a spoliator and destroyer and, since there is not enough to go round, the law has to choose between the victor and the victim. The shareholders have lost everything and the creditors have also lost much of their claims so it is not unnatural that those whose assets have been devastated in this way should look around for someone to blame. It is the task of the law to control these emotions in some common sense way which is proportional to the offence.

The main types of officer liability for insolvency are four in number as follows:

- Fraudulent trading, i.e. the intentional or reckless incurring of debts when the director knows that there is no prospect of paying, so that this is a fraud. The difficulties of proof make this liability unusual in the countries which have the rule, mainly because of the equivalents of the "silver-lining" or "sunshine" or "light at the end of the tunnel" tests exemplified in an English 1960 unreported case in which the court held that the directors were not liable if they genuinely believed "that the clouds will roll away and the sunshine of prosperity will shine on them": Re White & Osmond (Parkstone) Ltd.
- Negligent trading, i.e. incurring debts when objectively there is no reasonable prospect of paying them – a negligence standard on a balance of probabilities.
- Compulsory stoppage on percentage loss of capital, for example a duty to take appropriate action if there has been a 50% loss of capital or if the company is balance sheet insolvent or unable to pay its debts as they fall due.
- Business misjudgements leading to the insolvency e.g. borrowing beyond the capacity of the company to repay, committing the company to risky business ventures, inadequate budgeting, inadequate financial monitoring or supervision, inadequate insurance, unfunded capital investments, excessive dividends or imprudent investment in high risk securities or having too many employees.

The above areas of liability for causing the insolvency should be compared with other personal liabilities on directors for breach of company laws such as paying dividends out of capital, ultra vires transactions, misrepresentation in a prospectus or false or incorrect financial statements, self-interested transactions (such as personal loans by the company to the director or diversion of corporate opportunities to the director personally) and the like. Most jurisdictions impose civil or criminal liability or both for these violations of corporate law. One may also add personal liability for torts committed by the company and environmental pollution.

There is much overlap between these violations of company law and the personal liability for responsibility for the insolvency because the former company laws are often effectively intended to protect third parties against insolvency as that is when the delinquency often comes to light. Other examples of violations which are directly insolvency-related and which may give rise to personal liabilities include fraudulent transfers in breach of fraudulent preference rules and failures to account for taxes.

Pros and cons of personal liability of directors

The policies in favour of imposing personal liability for the insolvency include (1) early stoppage before it is too late with a view to protecting existing creditors from even greater losses and incoming creditors from getting embroiled, (2) controlling and disciplining management by the imposition of a tough sanction; and (3) an incentive on management to obtain competent professional advice when financial difficulties loom.

The disadvantages of the personal liability include (1) the possibility of a premature closure of the company and the shut down of viable businesses which could have survived; (2) the liability may inhibit the pursuit of workouts because directors are unwilling to trade out of difficulties - in this case the policy emphasis is on encouraging the use of judicial corporate rescue proceedings as self-protection to directors; (3) the liability erodes the veil of incorporation and weakens enterprise incentives: corporate enterprise is a powerful force for economic prosperity and productivity; too much risk may discourage directors; even if director and officer insurance can be paid for by the company, the cover is expensive and is often subject to wide exceptions; (4) the risk creates unpredictability by reason of the fact that the liability depends on particular circumstances and also the future attitudes of the courts; and (5) liability may increase the risk of unexpected liabilities for banks and others who are deemed to be de facto directors by reason of their involvement in the company, particularly at the time of the insolvency.

The personal liability of directors is essentially a feature of the "business judgment rule" which seeks to protect and promote the full and free exercise of the directors' managerial scope insulating their business decisions from judicial review and shielding directors from liability for those decisions, even if they subsequently turn out to be mistaken and lead to insolvency. At its most relaxed, all that is required from the business judgment rule is that the directors acted honestly with a view to what they thought were the best interests of the company and its creditors and with a fairly low standard of competence. In most countries the bar has now been raised but it is apparent that if a jurisdiction imposes liability for commercial mistakes, then almost invariably directors will be liable on insolvency since most insolvencies can be said to be attributable to some business misjudgement or supervision, as opposed to a cataclysmic external event which nobody could have foreseen or guarded against. The hindsight rule can take over – it is often easy to pinpoint the mistake after the event when it would not have been obvious in the usually hectic environment in which the decision was made. Also the court is invited to make the sort of commercial judgment which it is not appropriate for a court to make except in the case of obvious gross culpability.

Other issues

The incidence of the liability may depend in the first place on the type of company. In small or close companies, the directors will often be the same as the shareholders. In large companies, the management will usually be tiered between those who have overall management of policy and strategy (the board of directors, with or without a supervisory board, or non-executive directors) and those who have executive functions without being on the board, such as the executive, finance or marketing officers. In practice, the task of a board of a large company is to lay down matters of strategy, to approve large capital investments, budgets and financial commitments and to supervise executive management i.e. to see whether executive management is performing its functions and providing adequate information and reports. It is the task of the executives to implement the policy.

Where the management responsibilities are spread diffusely in this manner, there is an issue as to whether liability should be individual according to direct responsibility or whether the board stands or falls together under some theory of collective responsibility. It has often been held that a director is liable for failure to supervise an errant director where the supervision would have revealed a fraud or breach of duty by one delinquent officer.

International survey

An international survey is bound to be tentative and impressionistic. One may rank jurisdictions very broadly as follows:

High risk In France there is (or used to be) draconian personal liability of directors for serious business mistakes leading to the insolvency, e.g. risky ventures, imprudent borrowing, on failure to insure and often the bankruptcy of a major company has resulted in the near automatic bankruptcy of its directors.

It is said that the liability is high in Spain, Portugal and some South American countries – which impose a negligence standard but it would be necessary to meticulously compare the case laws.

Medium risk e.g. England, Ireland, Australia, New Zealand, Singapore, Hungary. Broadly, these countries adopt the principle of knowingly negligent liability for causing the insolvency. Thus, under Britain's Insolvency Act 1986, a director is personally liable if the company has gone into insolvent liquidation and the director "knew, or ought to have concluded that there was no reasonable prospect that the company would avoid going into insolvent liquidation". The director has the deemed competence of a "reasonably diligent person" of his function e.g. finance director, and has a defence if he "took every step with a view to minimising the potential loss to the company's creditors that he ought to have taken" e.g. advice or a petition for an administration. The provisions in Australia and Ireland are to a very similar effect. English case law has mitigated the liability. There are broad equivalents in the Netherlands, Belgium and Japan by case law.

Low risk e.g. United States. The personal liability of officers and directors for deepening the insolvency is very rare in the US, apart from special legislation imposing tougher liabilities on directors of insured financial institutions. In Delaware for instance, the business judgment rule is protective of directors and there are no express statutory provisions imposing liabilities on directors for deepening the insolvency on the lines of those found in Europe and English-based jurisdictions. Case laws rejected the concept. Nevertheless, in the United States, class actions against directors for causing loss to shareholders and creditors under plaintiff-oriented litigation rules are quite common (the actions are usually settled) and it has been argued that, as a result, the liability of directors in the US is not greatly different from that elsewhere. On the whole, however, it is suggested that the US is protective of directors and applies a very tolerant business judgment rule. Canada is generally low risk.

Outside the above cases, one may note that the duty of directors to petition for insolvency proceedings or to notify the court or call a shareholders' meeting if one-third or one-half of the company's capital is lost is common in the Napoleonic and Roman Germanic jurisdictions, i.e. those outside the common law group. Indeed, Article 17 of the EU Second Company Law Directive imposes a duty on directors to call a meeting if more than one-half of the capital is lost: the UK does not prescribe civil liability for violation, but Belgium and Sweden (for example) do.

It seems to be a near universal rule that the failure of directors to account for taxes, e.g. deductions from employee wages, attracts personal liability: the moral is that directors should not borrow from the Revenue.

In the end, any comparative survey should be supported by detailed statistics in order to ensure that impressions are corrected by the realities. Comparative statistics of this type are not easy to compile and compare because of the number of variables which are involved and also the differing levels of practical enforcement of the black letter rules.

Conclusions

It is probably true to say that over recent years, there has been a marked toughening of the law as regards those assuming the mantle of a director, greater risks and an insistence on a more exacting attention to duties and responsibilities.

A further trend is the increased priority given to judicial rescue proceedings as opposed to out-of-court work-outs and, in turn, the imposition of liabilities on directors in order to encourage this process.

Apart from these big picture drifts or trends, there are enormous differences at the more micro level in the approach between jurisdictions and fundamental disagreements on the policies. The result is that when one gets to the all-important level of detail, there appears to be much fragmentation, fissuring and splintering of legal systems.

QUESTION 1

1. The start and duration of the “twilight” period

What is the length of the period ending with formal insolvency proceedings during which transactions entered into by a company are vulnerable to attack or are liable to give rise to personal liability on the part of directors and/or others involved in the management of the company?

1.1 Overview

- 1.1.1 The “twilight” period is the time period which runs between the judicially decided date of commencement of insolvency and the judicial pronouncement of bankruptcy or liquidation proceedings (as defined by Argentina Bankruptcy Law 24.522¹, ABL 116). Under Argentinean insolvency law, the “twilight” period is not applicable to reorganization proceedings. However, in the case of an indirect liquidation proceeding (“quiebra indirecta”) which arises due to the frustration of a reorganization proceeding, the “twilight” period is applied according to 1.5.2.
- 1.1.2 The following transactions may be vulnerable to attack under ABL 118 and 119 if entered into during the two years prior to: (a) the pronouncement of the bankruptcy or liquidation proceeding (“quiebra”) or (b) the filing by the debtor of a then frustrated reorganization proceeding (“concurso preventivo”) (ABL 116):
- (a) gratuitous acts (ABL 118 1);
 - (b) the prepayment of debts payable only on the day of judicial pronouncement of bankruptcy or thereafter (ABL 118 2);
 - (c) any kind of security granted to secure an obligation not yet due (ABL 118 3);
 - (d) acts which cause damage to creditors if the other party was aware of the company’s insolvency at the time of the act (ABL 119).

Law 24760, 13 January 1997, (Factura de crédito. Régimen legal - su aprobación).

A full Spanish version – for both the original and the updated version of ABL – is currently available at the Ministry of Economy website: <http://www.infoleg.gov.ar/infolegInternet/verNorma.do?id=25379>. For the texts of all modifying laws, refer to: <http://www.infoleg.gov.ar/infolegInternet/verVinculos.do?modo=2&id=25379>.

1.2 Does it depend on whether a formal insolvency procedure is instituted?

- 1.2.1 Transactions entered into during the “twilight” period are vulnerable to attack by creditors. These attacks on the transactions’ efficacy may come under general (civil) law principles, under insolvency law, or under corporate law.
- 1.2.2 Attacks based on general (civil) law do not depend on the existence of formal insolvency proceedings; they should be based on Argentina Civil Code (ACC), ACC 961 to 971, or ACC 955 to 960.²
- 1.2.3 Under insolvency law, personal liability on the part of directors or officers – for transactions entered into during the twilight period may not be raised by creditors unless a formal insolvent liquidation – and not a reorganization – procedure follows.
- 1.2.4 Under corporate law, the directors may be held liable for claims by individual creditors on the ground of damages suffered to his/her personal estate (Argentina’s Corporation Law 19550³, ACL 59 and 279), irrespective of whether or not formal proceedings have been instituted.
- 1.2.5 Shareholders may also challenge transactions entered into during the twilight period, and this can give rise to personal liability on the part of directors, irrespective of whether or not formal proceedings have been instituted (ACL 279).

² Actions (acción revocatoria) based on ACC 961 aim at declaring void an act of the debtor in fraud (fraude) to its creditors. For this action’s success, ACC 962 requires: (i) the debtor to be insolvent, though not necessarily under formal insolvency proceedings, (ii) prejudice to creditors to be caused by the transaction or that the debtor was insolvent prior to the transaction, and (iii) the action to be exercised by a creditor with a claim prior to the voidable transaction. For the purpose of this action, fraud may be defined as provocation or aggravation of the debtor’s insolvency through acts or omissions, in prejudice to its creditors, deviating assets from its patrimony or estate.

Actions (acción de simulación) based on ACC 955 to 960 are directed towards declaring the transaction simulated, thus inopposable to creditors. This action may be instituted by creditors who are prejudiced or will suffer prejudice by the transaction, the insolvency of the debtor not being necessary.

A full Spanish version – for both the original and the updated version of ACL – is currently available at the Ministry of Economy website: <http://www.infoleg.gov.ar/infolegInternet/verNorma.do?id=25553>.

The following is a summary of laws which have amended the original ACL, as sanctioned by Law 19550 (laws are cited by law number, their publication date, and their Spanish short title:

Law 22903, 15 September 1983, (Sociedades Comerciales. Su Modificación).

Law 23576, 27 July 1988, (Títulos. Creación de un nuevo título de deuda. Obligaciones negociables de sociedades anónimas).

Law 26047, 03 August 2005, (Registros Nacionales. Sociedades - Asociaciones - Fundaciones - Disposiciones).

1.3 Does it depend on the nature of the transaction?

- 1.3.1 The length of the “twilight” period does not depend on the nature of the transaction. The objective of insolvency is to ensure fair (traditionally expressed as “equal”) treatment between all stakeholders. Accordingly, transactions concluded during the “twilight” period which are of the nature described in 1.1.2 (a) to (d) are vulnerable to attack by creditors.
- 1.3.2 Transactions referred to in 1.1.2 (a) to (c) above are automatically void against creditors - the instigation of legal proceedings by creditors or the síndico (the judicially appointed trustee or insolvency administrator) is not necessary. (ABL 118). Acts under 1.1.2 (d) require proceedings to be instigated by the síndico in order for a judicial decision to be reached declaring the act void vis-à-vis the creditors. The síndico must obtain previous authorization by the simple majority (more than a half) of the admitted unsecured liabilities (ABL 119). A creditor may also pursue the same action at its own cost and risk, but only after petitioning the síndico to do so, and waiting thirty days for the síndico to act (ABL 120). Under cases in ABL 118, 119 and 120, the result is that the transaction is void vis-à-vis the creditors, but remains valid between the parties. In addition, success in an action pursued by a creditor under ABL 120 results in the creditor obtaining reimbursement of its cost, and a priority being awarded to it, the priority is determined by the judge, and should be between a third and a tenth of the recovered assets value, with the limit on the creditor's claim against the estate.

1.4 Does it depend on whether the party to the transaction is connected or associated with the company?

- 1.4.1 The length of the “twilight” period does not depend on whether the party to the transaction is connected or associated with the company.
- 1.4.2 Nevertheless, the relationship between the party to the transaction and the company may be significant in determining whether the related party may be held personally liable upon the formal liquidation proceeding of the company. In this case, liability does not merely imply the transaction's avoidance, but may, on occasions, imply the counterparty's declaration of bankruptcy (ABL 161).⁴

1.5 Will any other circumstances lengthen or shorten the “twilight” period?

- 1.5.1 The “twilight” period is extended under two circumstances:
- 1.5.2 When the liquidation proceeding follows a frustrated reorganization proceeding, the two year limit (ABL. 116) runs from the filing of the petition for the reorganization proceeding.⁵ In fact, this is not properly a case of lengthening the twilight period, but of beginning its counting earlier.

- 1.5.3 When considering the personal liability of directors or officers to creditors (ABL 173), the “twilight” period is extended back one further year prior to the date of the judicial pronouncement of insolvency (ABL 174), thus encompassing actions entered into by directors up to three years prior to the commencement of insolvency proceedings. The action against directors or officers requires proceedings to be instigated by the síndico, who must obtain previous authorization by the simple majority (more than a half) of the admitted unsecured liabilities (ABL 174 and 119). Creditors have a subsidiary action in case the síndico does not seek or obtain authorization (ABL 176 and 120)⁶.

QUESTION 2

2. Actions potentially giving rise to liability for directors

- (a) In respect of which acts during the “twilight” period may a director be held personally liable or which may otherwise have adverse consequences for him?
- (b) In relation to each act identified in (a) above:
 - (i) is any resulting liability against a director civil, criminal or both?;
 - (ii) can a director be made personally liable in respect of the whole loss caused to the company or the deficit to creditors?
 - (iii) will liability attach to individual directors in proportion to their specific involvement?;
 - (iv) is there a specific period before commencement of a subsequent insolvency procedure within which the relevant act must have been undertaken in order for liability to attach to a director?; and
 - (vi) what defences, if any, will be available in relation to each offence?

2.1 General fiduciary duties

- 2.1.1 Directors are subject to certain general fiduciary duties imposed by statute. ACL establishes that, in performing their functions, directors are required to act in good faith and with the diligence of a good businessman (“buen hombre de negocios”) (ACL 59). This is understood to imply the duty of directors to administer the corporation, by performing a number of activities, being informed of the development of corporate trade, participating in board meetings, and observing decisions by the board or by creditor’s meetings which are contrary to ACL or bylaws provisions. Thus, directors are not responsible for their administration’s success, but for their loyalty and diligence in performing their duties. Their performance is assessed based on the circumstances at the time of their decision; the burden of proof is not on the director.

- 2.1.2 ACL 59 is designed so that directors focus on the best interests of the company and its shareholders. However, the general fiduciary duty owed to the company and its shareholders becomes subject to an overriding duty to have regard to the interests of the company's creditors in the event the company undertakes a reorganization proceeding (ABL 15 to 17). In such cases, ABL provides for the debtor's, and consequently its directors' and officers' duty to treat similarly situated pre-insolvency creditors in a similar fashion as regards their pre-insolvency claims. Such a duty may be seen as a consequence of the objective of insolvency proceedings to ensure fair treatment to stakeholders, in particular to pre-insolvency general creditors.⁷

General fiduciary duties to creditors when directors serve during debtor-in-possession administration in a reorganization proceeding may imply the director's personal liability for specific transactions entered into during administration. Liabilities may come under insolvency, corporate, criminal, tax, labor, and other laws.

2.2 Liability under ABL (Argentina's Bankruptcy Law 24.452)

- 2.2.1 Liability under Reorganization Proceedings ("concurso preventivo"). Where a company is subject to reorganization proceedings, failure to comply with the statutory provisions regarding the administration of the company and the treatment of creditors (ABL 15 and 16) may result in the separation of the debtor from the administration of the estate (ABL 17).⁸ Consequently, directors may be held liable for such actions. Statutory provisions provide a system of administration during reorganization proceedings according to the following principles: (a) freedom to enter into any transaction within the debtor's ordinary course of business⁹ ("administración ordinaria de su giro comercial"), (b) requiring judicial authorization prior to entering transactions that exceed the debtor's ordinary course of business (ABL 16, third paragraph),¹⁰ and (c) prohibition on performing gratuitous acts or acts affecting the pre-insolvency standing of creditors vis-à-vis other pre-insolvency creditors (ABL 16, first paragraph).
- 2.2.2 Liability under Liquidation Proceedings ("quiebra"). A director or officer may be held personally liable if, during the "twilight" period (see 1.5.3) he deliberately produces, facilitates, permits or aggravates the deterioration of the estate of the company or its insolvency. Liability is to compensate for the damage caused by the director (ABL 173, first part). The action should be brought by the síndico within two years of the judicial pronouncement of the liquidation proceeding (ABL 174). Creditors only have subsidiary or subordinated right to institute this action, when the síndico does not institute it (ABL 176 and 120)¹¹. Requirements for liability are: (a) action by a person

with capacity to represent the debtor¹², (b) entering transactions which (1) produce, (2) facilitate, (3) permit, or (4) aggravate the company's economic or financial situation, (c) performing the action deliberately (with "dolo"¹³), and (d) damage to the company or its creditors¹⁴.

2.2.3 A director or officer may also be held personally liable if, during the "twilight" period, or after formal declaration of bankruptcy, he knowingly participates in acts directed to, and having the effect of diminishing the company's assets or increasing its liabilities. (ABL 173, second part) Requirements for liability are: (a) action by any person regardless of the person's capacity to represent the debtor¹⁵, (b) participating in actions tending to diminishing the debtor's assets or exaggerating its liabilities, (c) performing the action deliberately (with "dolo"¹⁶), and (d) damage to the company or its creditors¹⁷. The action should be brought by the síndico within two years of the judicial pronouncement of bankruptcy (ABL 174). Creditors only have subsidiary or subordinated right to institute this action, when the síndico does not institute it (ABL 176 and 120)¹⁸. Liability extends to:

- (a) the restitution of goods still under the director's power;
- (b) the obligation to compensate for the damage caused; and
- (c) the loss of any right to claim against the insolvency estate. (ABL 173, second part), which includes the director's or officer's right as a creditor of the company.

2.2.4 Extension of Liquidation Proceedings to Directors. ABL 161 refers to the extension of liquidation proceedings in cases of (a) a person acting on behalf of the company but in his own interests - known as "actuación en interés personal"- (ABL 161.1), (b) abuse of control committed by a controlling person – known as "control indebido"- (ABL 161.2) and (c) a person having its assets and liabilities confused with those of the debtor under liquidation proceedings – known as "confusion patrimonial inescindible" (ABL 161.3).

2.2.4.1 Acting in the persons own interests is defined as: (1) any natural or legal person (2) appearing to act on behalf of the insolvent debtor (3) entering into transactions in his own interests and making dispositions of company's assets as if they were his own (4) in fraud to creditors (ABL 161.1).

- 2.2.4.2 Abuse of control is defined by ABL as the unlawful deviation of the controlled company's interest, subjecting it to a unified direction in the controller's interest or in the group's interest (ABL 161.2)¹⁹. A controller²⁰ is defined as: (a) any natural or legal person who directly or through another person has such participation in the debtor company with the necessary voting rights to dictate social decisions (ABL 161.2.a); and (b) each of the –natural or legal– persons that acting jointly have the participation described above (ABL 161.2.b).
- 2.2.4.3 Having assets and liabilities confused with those of the debtor under liquidation proceedings results in the extension of liquidation proceedings to: (1) any natural or legal person, (2) whose assets and liabilities, or the majority of them cannot be clearly divided from those of the insolvent debtor (ABL 161.3).
- 2.2.4.4 The sanction for breach of these offences (2.2.4.1. to 2.2.4.3) is to extend the insolvency proceedings to include the controlling party's own bankruptcy. Though the provision does not mention the controller's directors as liable under it, directors and officers may be reached when: (1) the definition of control is applicable to them, and (2) they have abused such control.
- 2.2.4.5 In such cases, the liquidation proceeding may be extended by the court, regardless of his/her personal solvency. This is known as "quiebra refleja" (as a "reflex" of the original bankruptcy) and may be either an independent insolvency proceeding with a separate estate²¹ or the formation of a single estate with assets from the original bankruptcy and the second bankruptcy²².

2.3 Liability under ACL (Argentina's Corporation Law 19.550)

- 2.3.1 ACL does not provide specific regulation about actions applicable to directors and officers in cases of insolvency. However, corporate actions, designed to be applied when the company is solvent, remain applicable during insolvency proceedings, regardless of whether such proceedings are reorganizations or liquidations. ACL establishes a number of actions for which a director may be found liable for corporate wrongdoing. These actions, set out below and described in ACL 276, 277 to 279, are actions based on liability, to which the general rules of the law of restitution apply. They may be brought regardless of the existence of insolvency proceedings. The general rule established by ACL art. 174 is that all directors will be held jointly and severally ("ilimitada y solidariamente") liable to the corporation, shareholders, and third parties, for:
- (a) any fraudulent or wrongful performance of their duties (ACL 59 and 274);
 - (b) any violation of the law, the company's articles of incorporation or by laws (ACL 274); and
 - (c) any other damage caused deliberately or arising from an abuse of their position (ACL 274).

²⁰ ACL 33 also defines control in its definition providing for both internal and external control. Definition of control by ABL 161.2 is considered to refer to internal control only. However, ABL 161.1 may be seen as encompassing cases of external control also.

Nevertheless, exceptions of personal liability by one or more directors may exist when there are personally assigned functions according to regulation by the company's articles of incorporation, by-laws or decision of the shareholders' meeting. In such cases, both the shareholders' decision and the assignment of personal functions must be registered at the Public Registry of Commerce ("Registro Público de Comercio") (ACL 274, second part).

- (a) ACL 276, first part, describes the action which may be brought against one or more directors of the corporation. It presupposes a detriment to the company's estate and must be approved at a shareholder's meeting. The decision of the shareholders has the effect of automatically removing the director from his/her position and requiring the appointment of a substitute. This action is brought on behalf of the corporation and by the corporation itself against the directors; but any shareholder may promote it if the action is not commenced by the appropriate corporate body within three months of the shareholder's meeting (ACL 277). In a liquidation, the síndico may continue the action (ACL 278 and ABL 175) or it may be continued by any interested party, including the shareholders (ABL 176 in fine).
- (b) ACL 276, second part, allows the above action to be brought by any shareholder who has objected to the approval of the directors' or officers' performance at the shareholders' meeting. Here again the action is brought on behalf of the corporation, but by a shareholder. As with the action in ACL 276, first part, in a liquidation, the síndico may continue the action (ACL 278 and ABL 175), or it may be continued by any interested party, including the shareholders (ABL 176 in fine).
- (c) ACL 277 allows any shareholder, to file an action described in ACL 276, first part, where the corporation has failed to do so and three months have expired since the approval of the shareholders was obtained²³. In this case, the shareholder acts in the place of the corporation.
- (d) ACL 279 states that both the shareholders and third parties always have an individual right of action against directors. The damage for this action being personal to the plaintiff and not corporate²⁴; consequently the action is brought by the shareholder or third party under its own interest and not on behalf of the corporation²⁵. This right of action arises from any loss caused to the shareholder's estate²⁶ or to the third party and does not depend on any previous corporate proceeding or decision having been brought. This right of action is not, therefore, affected by any approval of the directors' duty at the shareholders' meeting.

²⁴ Thus different from actions from ACL 276 first and second parts. See 2.3.2.a. and 2.3.2.b.

²⁶ For damage to the shareholder's estate is usually understood damage to the value of shares.

- (e) ACL 54 refers to the liability for damages to the company committed by a controlling person²⁷. It does not mention the controller's directors as being liable. Nevertheless, liability may be founded on the general principle of torts, under ACC 1109. There are two possibilities for actions under ACL 54. Requirements for ACL 54, first part to proceed are: (a) action by any controlling party, (b) which causes damage to the company, and (c) damage being the result of negligence or deliberation ("dolo"²⁸). Requirement for ACL 54, second part to proceed is the use by any controlling party of corporate funds or assets on the users of a third party's behalf. Restitution for this case implies restitution of the benefits obtained²⁹.

2.4 Liability under APC (Argentina's Penal Code)³⁰

2.4.1 The APC describes the criminal offences that may be committed by directors³¹ in the performance of their duties:

- (a) APC 173, inc. 7: abusive, unfaithful, or fraudulent administration. Although this is not a specific provision aimed at corporate directors, since it applies to any person in charge of goods or economic interests other than his/her own, directors may be charged with this offence and punished with imprisonment. The offence is either to impair the confided interests or to abusively obligate their owner, and requires the violation of the administrator's duties with the intention of causing damage or obtaining an undue advantage for him/herself or a third party.
- (b) APC 300, inc. 3: the publication, certification, or authorization of false or incomplete corporate documents. Directors may be charged with this offence and punished with imprisonment. The offence must have been committed deliberately and is punishable by imprisonment. The corporate documents to which this offence applies include balance sheets, inventories, and Board minutes.
- (c) APC 300, inc. 3: providing false information or failing to provide adequate information as to the company's financial situation. This offence must have been committed deliberately but regardless of the reason, and the false or inadequate information must have concerned important facts about the financial position of the corporation. It is punishable by imprisonment.
- (d) APC 301: directors deliberately consenting or participating in the performance of acts which are in violation of the law, articles of incorporation, and by-laws of the company, and which may cause damage. Punishable by imprisonment, the sanction is aggravated if the offence involves the issue of stock.

²⁷ This action is also applicable to damages caused to the company by its shareholders.

- (e) APC 176/178: fraudulent bankruptcy and bankruptcy caused by criminal negligence. Punishable by imprisonment, the sanction applies to directors and officers found guilty of co-operating or participating in acts of criminal negligence or fraud causing damage to the insolvent company's estate and/or to its creditors.

2.5 Penal liability under other laws

- 2.5.1 Various offences of a penal nature are described in specific statutes governing other areas of law, the most important being: tax violations in Penal Tax Law 24.769; environmental violations in Toxic Waste Law 24.051; social securities violations in Law 24.241; antitrust violations and violations to labour accident duties in Labour Risks Law 24.557.

QUESTION 3

3. Other persons involved with the company's affairs who may become liable in respect of their actions during the "twilight" period

- (a) In addition to the formally appointed directors of the company, can others be held liable in respect of the company's activities during the "twilight" period if the company were to become subject to a formal insolvency procedure?
- (b) In respect of which acts may other persons be held liable and to what extent does the liability of third parties differ from that for directors identified in question 2 above?
- (c) Will liability be limited to that resulting from involvement with a particular transaction or more generally in relation to the overall loss suffered by creditors?

3.1 Liability under ABL (Argentina's Bankruptcy Law 24.452)

- 3.1.1 The general rule³² is that any person involved in the affairs of a company may be found liable, as if he were a director, under ABL 173, second part, for having knowingly participated in acts directed to and having the effect of diminishing the company's assets or increasing its liabilities (as set out in 2.2.3). Parties entering into contracts with the company, necessary participants and the like are considered included in this provision, as are members of the company's supervisory body.

- 3.1.2 A more specific case is provided for under ABL 173, first part. Any officer or person representing the corporation may be found liable, as if he were a director, under ABL 173, first part, for transactions entered into during the twilight period which deliberately produce, facilitate, permit or aggravate the deterioration of the estate of the company or its insolvency (as set out in 2.2.2). To be included under this case, the person must have the capacity to represent the corporation or administer some or part of its assets. Officers and agents of the corporation are considered included under this case, while members of supervisory boards are considered excluded.
- 3.1.3 A creditor who, whilst aware of the corporation's insolvency during a reorganization proceeding, has entered into a transaction in breach of the administration rules (ABL 15 to 17) is vulnerable to attack through actions of fraud, or simulation brought under civil law (ACC 961 to 971 or ACC 955 to 960).
- 3.1.4 ABL 161 refers to the extension of liquidation proceedings to cases of: (a) persons acting on behalf of the company but guided by their own interests (ABL 161.1)³³, (b) abuse of control (ABL 161.2)³⁴, and (c) a person having its assets and liabilities confused with those of the debtor under insolvency proceedings (ABL 161.3)³⁵. Anybody who meets one of these criteria may suffer as sanction the extension of the insolvency proceedings. This is again known as "quiebra refleja"³⁶, which means the declaration of bankruptcy of the person involved with the company's affairs, regardless of the person's solvency.
- 3.1.5 ABL does not have a concept of de facto directors³⁷. However, persons acting in such circumstances could be reached by the application of the principles in 3.1.

3.2. Liability under ACL (Argentina's Corporation Law 19.550)

- 3.2.1 ACL establishes a general rule about corporate officials (gerentes) with duties in the company's administration or with ability to represent the company. In the performance of their duties, they may be held liable on the same terms and to the same extent as directors³⁸, but without in any way limiting the liability of the directors themselves (ACL 270).
- 3.2.2 Accordingly, officers are liable to the corporation and third parties for:
- (a) any fraudulent or wrongful performance of their duties (ACL 59 and 274);
 - (b) any violation of the law, the company's articles of incorporation or by-laws (ACL 274); and

³⁸ Under ACL 270, the Board of Directors may designate officers to serve in executive functions in the administration. Directors may hold these positions.

- (c) any other damage caused deliberately or arising from an abuse of their position (ACL 274).
 - 3.2.3 The actions which may be brought against directors, as set out in 2.3.2. are also applicable to corporate officials described under 3.2.1 (ABL 270).
 - 3.2.4 ACL establishes a general rule about the liability of members of the Supervisory Board. The provisions in ACL 273, 274, 275, 276, 277, 278 and 279 are also applicable to them. Members of the Supervisory Board are shareholders elected by the shareholder's assembly (ACL 280) with specific duties in the supervision of the Board of Director's performance (ACL 281).
 - 3.2.5 Companies can choose to have a private supervisor instead of the Supervisory Board. The supervisor will be liable for any breach of law or statutory duties. In addition, the supervisor may be held liable, together with directors, in circumstances where his/her conduct according to law or statute could have prevented the damage suffered by the corporation. (ACL 297) The role of the private supervisor is similar to that of the Supervisory Board (ACL 294).
 - 3.3 Liability under APC (Argentina's Penal Code)
 - 3.3.1 The conduct described in 2.4.1. is applicable in certain limited circumstances to other persons involved in the affairs of the corporation.
 - 3.3.2 APL 173, inc. 7, is, arguably, applicable to officers.
 - 3.3.3 APL 300, first and second parts, are applicable to members of the Supervisory Board and liquidators and, arguably, to officers.
 - 3.3.4 APL 301 is applicable to liquidators of the corporation and, arguably, to officers.
 - 3.3.5 APL 176/178 is applicable to the directors, members of the Supervisory Board, officers or managers (gerente de la sociedad o establecimiento) and the corporation's accountants.

QUESTION 4

- 4. Counterparties dealing with the company during the "twilight" period
- (a) From the point of view of a counterparty dealing with the company during the "twilight" period, what are the potential heads of challenge which may lead to transactions with the company being set aside?
 - (b) What defences, if any, to the areas of vulnerability identified above will be available to a counter-party seeking to protect a transaction from being attacked?

4.1 General rule

- 4.1.1 The general rule for transactions entered into by the company during the "twilight" period is that they may be vulnerable to attack, under insolvency law, following commencement of liquidation proceedings (ABL 119).
- 4.1.2 A few transactions are automatically treated as void vis-à-vis creditors upon declaration of bankruptcy by the insolvency judge. In these cases, the judge may declare the transaction void without the need for a petition, and without any proceeding. Proceedings can also be brought by the síndico to challenge the specific transactions which will automatically be treated as void (i.e. not valid against creditors) upon a declaration of the insolvency judge. Proceedings to challenge the transaction need not be brought by a third party. Rights of appeal exist. These transactions are:
- (a) gratuitous acts;
 - (b) the early payment of debts which are not actually payable until the day of judicial pronouncement of bankruptcy or thereafter; and
 - (c) granting security of any kind to secure an originally unsecured obligation which was not yet due (ABL 118).

4.2 Reviewable transactions

- 4.2.1 Any transaction may be subject to challenge under the general rule set out in 4.1.1 if it impairs creditors' interests and the other party is aware of the company's insolvency at the time of the transaction. Proceedings must be brought by the síndico, with the prior approval of the majority of the verified creditors. The insolvency judge's decision is subject to appeal by the injured party.
- 4.2.2 Proceedings challenging a transaction on this basis may be brought by creditors of the company once formal insolvent liquidation proceedings have been commenced (ABL 120). The successful creditor obtains reimbursement of its cost, and a priority, determined by the judge, which should be established at between a third and a tenth of the recovered value, with a limit on the creditor's claim against the estate.
- 4.2.3 A creditor who, during the twilight period, was aware of the corporation's insolvency and entered into a transaction with the company, may not oppose the action by the síndico or the right of other creditors subsequently to challenge the transaction (See 1.1.2 (d)). The transaction will be challengeable if it caused damage to the creditors by deteriorating the insolvency estate (ABL 119).

4.3 Defences

- 4.3.1 It will be a defence to any challenge brought on the basis of the general rule - that the interests of creditors have been impaired - to show that no damage to creditors has actually been caused. The onus of proving the absence of damage is on the creditor who entered into the transaction, knowing of the company's insolvency (ABL 119).

- 4.3.2 There are no defences expressly provided for in the ABL for the transactions mentioned in 4.1.2, although clearly the transaction must fall within the terms of a 'gratuitous act', an 'early debt repayment' or the 'creation of a preference' in order for the transaction to be set aside.

QUESTION 5

5. Enforcement

By whom may action be brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3 above)?

5.1 General rule

- 5.1.1 In the case of a company against whom liquidation proceedings have been commenced, the authority and powers of the directors are taken over by the síndico (the office holder appointed to the company). (ABL 108 and 110) Consequently, in most cases, the power to bring actions against directors, officers, and others identified in question 3 lies in the hands of the síndico, who must obtain the authority of the majority of the verified creditors for that purpose (ABL 118 and 176).
- 5.1.2 A creditor can bring an action if the síndico fails to do so, or fails to obtain the authority of the majority of creditors.
- 5.1.3 The main exception to these general rules is in relation to criminal proceedings for the offences detailed in question 2. Any person, or the Public Prosecutor, may bring proceedings for criminal offences.

5.2 Corporate proceedings

- 5.2.1 Corporate actions during insolvency proceedings. During insolvency liquidation proceedings (quiebra), actions against directors, officers and members of the Supervisory Board, based on ACL 276 and 277³⁹, may be brought by the síndico, (ABL 175) though shareholders and third parties retain the right to claim for personal damage suffered by them (ACL 279)⁴⁰.
- 5.2.2 Pre-existing corporate actions during insolvency proceedings. ABL 175, second part, states that corporate actions commenced prior to the judicial pronouncement of insolvent liquidation proceedings may continue to be heard before the insolvency judge. For pre-existing actions commenced by the corporation, the síndico must decide whether to continue the pre-existing proceeding or bring an action based on the insolvency law. For pre-existing actions commenced by a shareholder, the síndico must decide whether to cooperate in the pre-existing proceeding or bring an action based on the insolvency law.

5.3 Bankruptcy proceedings

- 5.3.1 It is the síndico in liquidation proceedings who may bring proceedings in relation to: reviewable transactions (ABL 119), director's liability (ABL 173, first and second parts), corporate officials' liability (ABL 173, first and second parts), liability of members of the Supervisory Board ((ABL 173, second part), and others (ABL 173, second parts). The síndico must obtain the prior approval of the majority of verified creditors (ABL 120).
- 5.3.2 A creditor can bring the action if the síndico fails to do so (ABL 120) or if the síndico fails to obtain the required majority (ALB 119). The creditor does so at his own expense. However if successful, he may be reimbursed and awarded a priority, determined by the judge between a third and a tenth of the recovered value, with a limit on the creditor's claim against the estate (ABL 120).
- 5.3.3 Actions based on Civil Law, for a declaration of fraud in relation to a particular transaction may only be commenced or continued by a creditor when the síndico has failed to act within thirty days of being required to do so by the creditor (ABL 120, second and third part).
- 5.3.4 Either the síndico or a creditor may bring an action to extend the ambit of the liquidation proceedings (ABL 163)⁴¹ to:
- (a) persons who acted in their own interests and disposed of the debtor's assets while leading third parties/creditors to believe they were the insolvent debtor (ABL 161, 1);
 - (b) any person who controls the insolvent debtor and who has guided its conduct towards interests other than those of the insolvent debtor; in the controller's favour or in favour of another member of the corporate group (ABL 161, 2);
 - (c) any person whose assets and liabilities (patrimonio) are so co-mingled with those of the insolvent debtor that determination of each person's assets and debts is impossible. (ABL 161, 3).

The application to extend the liquidation proceedings must be brought to the insolvency judge (ABL 162), within the time limit set out by ABL 163.

QUESTION 6

6. Remedies: orders available to the domestic court

See response to question 2.

⁴¹ See discussion in 2.2.4.

QUESTION 7

7. Duty to co-operate

- (a) To what extent are directors (and others identified in question 3 above) obliged to co-operate with an investigation into the company's affairs following its insolvency?
- (b) Are any human rights laws applicable in the domestic jurisdiction in relation to any such obligations (e.g. in the UK and other European jurisdictions Article 6 of the European Convention of Human Rights may apply if domestic law compels a person to provide potentially self-incriminating information at the request of the office-holder appointed under the relevant insolvency procedure adopted)?

7.1 Duty to co-operate

- 7.1.1 ABL 17, 102, 274 and 275 establish general rules of co-operation throughout insolvency proceedings.
- 7.1.2 In liquidation proceedings, the directors, corporate officials and representatives of the insolvent company are obliged to co-operate with the sindico (office holder) and with the court, to provide information about the situation of the estate and/or the company's liabilities and assets. The court has the power to enforce this duty to co-operate. Accordingly, any person failing to fulfill her/his duty to attend before the court to provide information may be arrested (ABL 274 inc. 1 and 275 inc. 3). However, although the court may enforce attendance, it may not force the director to incriminate him/herself (See description in 7.2.1.)
- 7.1.3 In reorganization proceedings, any director who fails to provide the information required by the court and/or by the sindico (office holder) may be removed from office by the court.

7.2 Human rights

- 7.2.1 Article 18 of the National Constitution establishes that "no one is obliged to incriminate him or herself". Accordingly, in insolvency proceedings this provision may be invoked as a ground for refusing to provide information that could be considered as self-incriminating. This provision would be applicable, for example, where information requested of a person involved in insolvency proceedings could potentially bring a criminal proceeding against him or her.

QUESTION 8

8. Appeals and limitation periods

- (a) What limitation period, if any, will apply to actions brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3) in connection with the offences identified in question 2?

See answers to questions 1 and 2.

- (b) Please indicate whether an appeal is available from the decision of the lower courts.

8.1 Limitation periods

- 8.1.1 The limitation period for actions brought under ABL intending to declare certain acts void vis-à-vis the creditors⁴² is three years from the declaration of bankruptcy (ABL 124). Personal liability actions brought under ABL 173, first⁴³ and second part⁴⁴ have a limitation period of two years from the judicial pronouncement of liquidation proceedings (ABL 174). Actions brought under ABL 161 have a limitation period equivalent to the time between declaration of bankruptcy and six months following the general report⁴⁵ by the sindico (ABL 163).
- 8.1.2 The general rule is that no limitation period applies to criminal proceedings unless stipulated by statute.

8.2 Appeals

- 8.2.1 In civil and/or penal proceedings, an appeal is always available against the decision of a court of first instance. In insolvency proceedings, the rule is inapplicability unless the statute explicitly indicates otherwise (ABL 273.3).
- 8.2.2 Lower court decisions in actions brought under insolvency law intending to declare certain acts void vis-à-vis the creditors under ABL 118, 119 and 120 are subject to appeal (ABL 124). Lower court decisions on personal liability actions under ABL 173, first and second part may be subject to appeal depending on non-insolvency local procedural rules for ordinary proceedings (ABL 174). Lower court decisions extending insolvency under ABL 161 are subject to appeal as any other declaration of bankruptcy (ABL 88).

⁴⁵ The general report by the sindico (ABL 39) includes, among other legally-required contents: a description of the causes leading to the debtor's financial situation, inventory of its assets and an assessment of their value, account of the debtor's liabilities, report on the accounting books kept by the debtor, the sindico's opinion as regards the estimated date when the debtor became insolvent, and the list of transfers that may be voidable (ABL 118 and 119).

QUESTION 9

9. Foreign corporations

Do the legal provisions and procedures outlined above apply to both domestic and foreign corporations and companies?

9.1 General rule

- 9.1.1 The legal provisions outlined above apply to companies subject to liquidation proceedings in Argentina. In a liquidation context, provisions by ABL would apply. However, ACL provisions would remain applicable, though a company under liquidation proceedings in Argentina is bound to be wound up (ABL 235).
- 9.1.2 ACL 121 establishes that representatives of foreign companies have the same responsibilities and liabilities as directors and officers of domestic companies.

QUESTION 10

10. Insurance

Is directors' and officers' insurance available in your jurisdiction? If so, to what extent will the availability of such insurance provide effective protection to directors against personal liability which may arise in connection with the issues raised in questions 1-9 above?

- 10.1 There is no widely/extended insurance available to provide effective protection for directors against personal liability which may arise in connection with the liabilities discussed above.

QUESTION 11

- 11. How safe is it for directors and others to incur further credit during the twilight period?
 - 11.1 Can an unconnected third party rely on the validity of transactions entered into by the company (in particular guarantees and securities) during the twilight period?

Actions potentially giving rise to liability for directors are discussed under question 3, and for other persons involved in the company are discussed under question 4. Those discussions provide the overall system for directors and officers liability during the twilight period. Neither ACL nor ABL include specific provisions on financing obtained during this period, so accordingly the rules discussed above should apply.

An unconnected third party providing credit to a company during the twilight period should take ABL 119⁴⁶ into account. If the third party knows that the company is insolvent though not legally declared as such, the provision of credit may be rendered void vis-à-vis the creditors in a future liquidation proceeding⁴⁷.

AUSTRALIA

QUESTION 1

1. The start and duration of the “twilight” period

What is the length of the period ending with formal insolvency proceedings during which transactions entered into by a company are vulnerable to attack or are liable to give rise to personal liability on the part of directors and/or others involved in the management of the company?

1.1 Background

1.1.1 Division 2 of Part 5.7B of the Corporations Act (“Voidable transactions”) deals with those company transactions which are vulnerable to attack during the period preceding formal insolvency. The start and duration of the “twilight” period depends on the nature of the transaction and the identity of the parties to it.

1.1.2 A number of concepts central to Part 5.7B are described below.

(a) Insolvent transactions

A transaction is an insolvent transaction if it is either an unfair preference given by the company or an uncommercial transaction, and either the company was insolvent at the time or became insolvent because of the transaction (s. 588FC).¹

(b) Unfair preferences

A payment by the company will be an unfair preference if it results in a creditor receiving more than the creditor would have received in respect of an unsecured debt if that creditor were to prove for the debt in the winding up of the company (s. 588FA).

(c) Uncommercial transactions

A transaction will be deemed “uncommercial” where a reasonable person in the company’s circumstances would not have entered into the transaction, having regard to the benefits and detriment to the company, and the benefits to other parties, of entering into the transaction (s. 588FB).²

² An officer of the company may also contravene s. 596(b) by making a transfer or gift of company property with intent to defraud the company, shareholders or creditors.

(d) Unfair loans

A loan to the company will be deemed “unfair” if the interest or charges were extortionate at the time the loan was made or have since become extortionate because of a variation (s. 588FD).

(e) Unreasonable director-related transactions

A transaction where a company makes, or incurs an obligation to make, a payment, a transfer of company property, or an issue of the company's securities to a director or a close associate of a director, is an unreasonable director-related transaction if a reasonable person in the company's circumstances would not have entered into the transaction, having regard to the benefits and detriment to the company, and the benefits to other parties, of entering into the transaction (s. 588FDA).

(f) Relation-back day

The time period in which transactions are vulnerable to attack is determined by reference to the “relation-back day”.³ In the majority of cases the relation-back day will be the day upon which the application for the winding up of the company is filed with the court.⁴

1.2 What time frames are involved?

1.2.1 Where a company is being wound up, past transactions may become voidable transactions pursuant to section 588FE.

1.2.2 Section 588FE also provides the relevant time frames in which the transaction must have occurred in order for it to be voidable.⁵

⁴ If the company was in voluntary administration or subject to a deed of company arrangement when the winding up order was made, then the relation-back day will be determined by reference to the day on which the administration began (s. 513C).

⁵ In addition to the items in the below table ss. 588FE(2A) and (2B) prescribe voidable transactions in relation to transactions of companies that are under Administration or subject to a Deed of Company Arrangement immediately before being wound up, where such transactions, being either an uncommercial transaction, unfair preference, unfair loan or unreasonable director-related transaction, are entered into without the authority of the Administrator or Deed Administrator. Such transactions must have been entered into between the start of the relation-back day and the date the company was wound up.

TYPE OF TRANSACTION	Length of time prior to relation-back day	Section
Insolvent transaction (with non-related entity)	6 months (or after the relation-back day but on or before the day when the winding up began)	588FE(2)
Insolvent and uncommercial transaction (with non-related entity)	2 years	588FE(3)
Insolvent transaction to which a related entity ⁶ of the company is a party	4 years	588FE(4)
Insolvent transaction entered into for the purpose of defeating, delaying, or interfering with, the rights of any or all of the company's creditors	10 years	588FE(5)
Unfair loan	No time limit until start of winding up (which may be after the relation-back day)	588FE(6)
Unreasonable director-related transaction	4 years (or after the relation-back day but on or before the date when the winding up began)	588FE(6A)

1.2.3 The following diagram⁷ illustrates the meaning of “voidable transaction” in the Corporations Act.

- 1.2.4 The following timeline summarises the start and duration of the “twilight” period and the length of time following formal insolvency proceedings during which creditors and others can take action against directors and company officers.⁸

No time limit until start of winding up	Unfair loan (s. 588FE(6))
10 years	Insolvent transaction to defeat creditors (s. 588FE(5))
4 years	Insolvent transaction with a related entity (s. 588FE(4)); Unreasonable director related transaction (s. 588FE(6A))
2 years	Insolvent and uncommercial transaction (with non-related entity) (s. 588FE(3))
6 months prior to relation-back day until start of winding up	Insolvent transaction (with non-related entity) amounting to an unfair preference (s. 588FE(2))
	Relation-back day (see note in 1.2.5)
3 years after the relation-back day or within such longer period as the court orders on application by the liquidator within those 3 years (s. 588FF(3))	Proceedings brought in respect of voidable transactions pursuant to sections 588FE and 588FF
6 years from relation-back day	Actions against directors by the (Deputy) Commissioner of Taxation (s. 588FGA), actions against directors for compensation for insolvent trading (s. 588M), actions against persons (including directors) with respect to agreements or transactions entered into to avoid employee entitlements (s. 596AB), an action against a holding company for loss resulting from insolvent trading (sections 588V and 588W)

- 1.2.5 Note: relation-back day is defined in section 9 of the Corporations Act. If the company was in voluntary administration or subject to a deed of company arrangement when the winding up order was made, the relation-back day is determined by reference to the day on which the administration began (e.g. appointment of administrator) (s. 513C). In other cases (e.g. where a creditor applies to the court to wind up the company), the relation-back day will be the day on which the application for the winding up of the company is filed with the court (s. 513A).

1.3 Floating charges

- 1.3.1 Any floating charge on the property of the company which was created in the six months ending on the relation-back day (or after that day but on or before the day when the winding up began) is (with some exceptions – see 11.2.3) void against the company's liquidator unless the company was solvent immediately after the charge was created (s. 588FJ).

QUESTION 2

2. Actions potentially giving rise to liability for directors

- (a) In respect of which acts during the “twilight” period may a director be held personally liable or which may otherwise have adverse consequences for him?
- (b) In relation to each act identified in (a) above:
 - (i) is any resulting liability against a director civil, criminal or both?;
 - (ii) can a director be made personally liable in respect of the whole loss caused to the company or the deficit to creditors?;
 - (iii) will liability attach to individual directors in proportion to their specific involvement?;
 - (iv) is there a specified period before commencement of a subsequent insolvency procedure within which the relevant act must have been undertaken in order for liability to attach to a director?; and
 - (v) what defences, if any, will be available in relation to each offence?

2.1 Acts during the “twilight” period for which a director may be held personally liable or suffer other adverse consequences⁹

The following are the principal acts set out in the Corporations Act (there are others referred to in other legislation and the common law):¹⁰

- (a) failing to prevent the company from incurring a debt while insolvent (insolvent trading) (s. 588G);¹¹

⁹ At common law directors may, in addition, owe duties to creditors where the company is insolvent: Walker v Wimborne (1976) 137 CLR 1 (but now see Spies v The Queen [2000] HCA 43 where the High Court indicated agreement with those commentators who doubt that the court in Walker v Wimborne was suggesting that directors owe an independent duty direct to creditors, rather than a mere restriction on the right of shareholders to ratify breaches of the duty owed to the company).

- (b) failing to exercise powers and discharge duties with care and diligence (s. 180);¹²
- (c) not acting in good faith (s. 181);¹³
- (d) misuse of position (s. 182);¹⁴
- (e) misuse of company information (s. 183);^{15]}
- (f) entering into an agreement or transaction to prevent or significantly reduce the recovery of employee entitlements (s. 596AB);¹⁶
- (g) causing or allowing the company to make a payment of money to the Commissioner of Taxation that is later found to be a voidable transaction under section 588FE (s. 588FGA); and
- (h) falsification of books; false and misleading statements and information (ss. 1307-1309).¹⁷

2.1.2 The Corporations Act (s.197) provides that where a trust deed of which a company is trustee excludes the trustee's right of indemnification from the trust assets, the directors of the corporate trustee have personal liability for the debts incurred by it.

2.2 Liability for insolvent trading under section 588G

- (a) Liability of a director may be:
 - (i) civil (s. 588G(2) or s. 588M) which may also involve:
 - a compensation order (s. 1317H); or
 - a civil pecuniary penalty order¹⁸ (s. 1317G); or
 - (ii) criminal if dishonesty and suspicion of insolvency are involved (s. 588G(3)).¹⁹

¹² Liability is imposed on directors and other officers.

¹⁵ See above, footnote 14. This duty continues after the person stops being an officer or employee of the company.

¹⁸ Certain contraventions of the Corporations Act involve breaches of "civil penalty provisions" for which a compensation order (s. 1317H) and/or a civil penalty order (being payment of a fine to the Commonwealth of up to $200,000; s. 1317G) is imposed. Such breaches are provable according to the civil standard, that is, on the balance of probabilities. Other contraventions of the Corporations Act are classed as "offences" and are effectively criminal breaches in the strict sense. They carry penalties of imprisonment or financial penalty and are provable according to the criminal standard of proof – i.e. beyond reasonable doubt (e.g. s. 588G(3) – insolvent trading to a criminal degree; s. 184 – lack of good faith, misuse of position or information to a criminal degree). Certain offences and contraventions of civil penalty provisions may also give rise to disqualification from managing a company and therefore holding the position of director (see sections 203B and 206A-206F).

There is to be no double recovery in actions for insolvent trading under section 588M (s. 588N).²⁰

Civil penalty proceedings are not to be taken, or are to be dismissed, if criminal proceedings resulted in a conviction: sections 1317M and 1317N. However, criminal proceedings may be taken after civil penalty proceedings regardless of outcome (s. 1317P).

- (b) Whether a director can be made personally liable in respect of the whole loss caused to the company or the deficit to creditors depends, in non-criminal proceedings, upon who makes the application for recovery.
 - (i) If the liquidator (under s. 588M(2)) or a creditor (under s. 588M(3)) applies, the liability of the director is limited to the loss or damage suffered by the creditor.
 - (ii) If the ASIC²¹ applies (under s. 1317J), the director may be liable for the loss or damage to the company (including profits made by anyone as a result of insolvent trading) pursuant to a compensation order, or may be liable to pay a fine to the Commonwealth of Australia pursuant to a pecuniary penalty order.
 - (iii) If the company²² applies (under s. 1317J), the director may be liable for the loss or damage to the company (including profits made by anyone as a result of insolvent trading) pursuant to a compensation order.

In criminal proceedings, the compensation that the court may require the director to pay to the creditor (under s. 588K) is equal to the creditor's loss.

- (c) Liability does not attach to individual directors in proportion to their specific involvement but attaches to all directors on the basis of joint and several liability (although a director may have a particular defence that lessens or absolves civil or criminal responsibility).
- (d) There is no specified period before commencement of a subsequent insolvency procedure within which the relevant act must have been undertaken in order for liability to attach to a director. The company must, however, have been insolvent at the time.
- (e) The defences available are:²³
 - (i) in relation to civil liability under sections 588G(2) and 588M – expecting solvency on reasonable grounds, including reasonable reliance on a qualified person for advice; illness or other good reason preventing director from managing the company at the time; or having reasonably tried to prevent the debt being incurred (s. 588H);

²⁰ Section 588N states: "An amount recovered in proceedings under section 588M in relation to the incurring of a debt by a company is to be taken into account in working out the amount (if any) recoverable in any other proceedings under that section in relation to the incurring of the debt".

²³ Note that the "business judgment rule" in s.180(2) does not provide a defence to an insolvent trading claim (see below, n 28 and accompanying text, and note to s. 180(2)).

- (ii) in relation to criminal liability – lack of dishonesty or lack of suspicion of insolvency, which, while not being explicit defences, would mean that the elements of the offence are not satisfied (ss. 588G(3)(c) and 588G(3)(d)); and
- (iii) in relation to penal liability²⁴ – lack of material prejudice to the company or shareholders' interests and to the company's ability to pay its creditors, together with lack of seriousness of the contravention.²⁵ In addition, the above mentioned defences available in civil proceedings (s. 588H) apply here as well.²⁶

Note 1: Division 5 of Part 5.7B (ss. 588V-588X) provides that a holding company can be liable for the insolvent trading of a subsidiary. However, the Corporations Act does not make the directors of the holding company personally liable.

Note 2: A person managing a company while disqualified from acting as a director (under s. 206A) may become personally liable for the company's debt (s. 588Z).

2.3 Failing to exercise care and diligence: section 180

- (a) Liability of a director may be both civil (s. 1317H) and criminal (s. 1311), and there is liability for a pecuniary penalty order under section 1317G.²⁷

Civil penalty proceedings are not to be taken, or are to be dismissed, if criminal proceedings resulted in a conviction: sections 1317M and 1317N. However, criminal proceedings may be taken after civil penalty proceedings regardless of outcome (s. 1317P).

- (b) A director can be made personally liable in respect of the whole of the loss caused to the company (including profits made by anyone as a result of insolvent trading). A director may also have to pay a fine to the Commonwealth.
- (c) Liability will attach to specific directors in the sense that it will be imposed on the particular director(s) in breach.
- (d) There is no specific period before commencement of a subsequent insolvency procedure within which the relevant act must have been undertaken in order for liability to attach to a director. Further, it is not necessary to show that the company was insolvent at the time.

²⁶ Further, a director who has contravened a civil penalty provision may seek relief from liability if he or she acted honestly and ought fairly to be excused: s. 1317S (see also s. 1318 which provides similar relief, but is not restricted to breaches of civil penalty provisions).

²⁷ That is, a quasi-penal order.

(e) The defences available to a director are:

- (i) proper “business judgment”²⁸ exercised: section 180(2); and
- (ii) reliance on proper delegation: section 190 (see also s. 189 – reliance on information or advice provided by others).

In addition, in civil penalty proceedings, lack of material prejudice to the company’s or shareholders’ interests and to the company’s ability to pay its creditors, together with lack of seriousness of the contravention, is the way in which the requirements of section 1317G might not be satisfied, and hence a civil penalty order not imposed (but a compensation order may still be imposed under s. 1317H).²⁹

2.4 Not acting in good faith, misuse of position and misuse of company information: sections 181-183

- (a) Liability of a director may be both civil (s. 1317H) and criminal (s. 184), and there is liability for a pecuniary penalty order under section 1317G.³⁰

Civil penalty proceedings are not to be taken, or are to be dismissed, if criminal proceedings resulted in a conviction: sections 1317M and 1317N. However, criminal proceedings may be taken after civil penalty proceedings regardless of outcome (s. 1317P).

- (b) A director can be made personally liable in respect of the whole of the loss caused to the company (including profits made by anyone as a result of insolvent trading). A director may also have to pay a fine to the Commonwealth.
- (c) Liability will attach to specific directors in the sense that it will be imposed on the particular director(s) in breach.
- (d) There is no specific period before commencement of a subsequent insolvency procedure within which the relevant act must have been undertaken in order for liability to attach to a director, although the matter is covered by the general legislation, which imposes limitation periods. Further, it is not necessary to show that the company was insolvent at the time.
- (e) Reliance on proper delegation is a defence available to a director under section 190 (see also s. 189 – reliance on information or advice provided by others).

²⁸ This will occur where the directors have acted in good faith and for a proper purpose, had no material personal interest, properly informed themselves, and had a rational belief that they acted in the interests of the company (s. 180(2) – the “business judgment rule”). Note that this defence is only available in proceedings under s. 180; in particular, it is not a defence to an insolvent trading claim (see note to s. 180(2)).

³⁰ That is, a quasi-penal order.

In addition, in civil penalty proceedings, lack of material prejudice to the company's or shareholders' interests and to the company's ability to pay its creditors, together with lack of seriousness of the contravention, is the way in which the requirements of section 1317G might not be satisfied, and hence a civil penalty order not imposed (but a compensation order may still be imposed under s. 1317H).³¹

2.5 Entering into an agreement or transaction to avoid employee entitlements in breach of section 596AB³²

(a) Liability of a director may be:

- (i) civil (s. 596AC); and
- (ii) criminal (s. 588G(3))³³ if insolvent trading to a criminal degree is also involved, or s. 1311 otherwise).

There is to be no double recovery (ss. 588N and 596AD).

(b) Whether the liquidator or an employee³⁴ applies, the director is personally liable in respect of the loss suffered by the employee.

Note that section 596AB is not a civil penalty provision, so ASIC cannot apply for relief.

If insolvent trading is involved and criminal proceedings are taken under section 588G(3), the compensation that the court may require the director to pay to the creditor (who may be the employee) under section 588K is equal to the creditor's loss.

- (c) Liability does not attach to individual directors in proportion to their specific involvement. Each director can be ordered to pay the whole amount, although an individual director may have a particular defence that lessens or absolves civil or criminal responsibility.
- (d) There is no specified period before commencement of a subsequent insolvency procedure within which the relevant act must have been undertaken in order for liability to attach to a director. Further, it is not necessary to show that the company was insolvent at the time.
- (e) Defences are only available if a linked contravention of s. 588G is also present, and they are the same as for the breach of s. 588G (see above, p 23).

³² A person may incur a liability under s. 596AB and under s. 588G from the one breach, in which case the contraventions of the two provisions are defined as "linked" (sections 9 and 596AB(4)), and no double recovery is possible (see sections 588N and 596AD).

³⁴ Under s. 596AC(3) as permitted by s. 596AF or s. 596AH (and not prevented by s. 596AI).

2.6 Causing or allowing the company to make a payment of money to the Commissioner of Taxation that is later found to be a preference under section 588FE: section 588FGA

- (a) Liability of a director is civil (s. 588FGA).
- (b) The director can be made liable for the whole of the loss or damage suffered by the Commissioner as a result of the payment to the Commissioner being set aside under s. 588FF.
- (c) Liability does not attach to individual directors in proportion to their specific involvement but attaches to all directors on the basis of joint and several liability (although a director may have a particular defence that lessens or absolves responsibility).
- (d) Liability only arises if the payment to the Commissioner of Taxation was made within a certain period (determined by reference to s. 588FE) before or after the relation-back day.
- (e) The defences available to a director are:
 - (i) expecting solvency on reasonable grounds, including reasonable reliance on a qualified person for advice (ss. 588FGB(3) and 588FGB(4));
 - (ii) illness or other good reason preventing director from managing the company at the time of payment to the Commissioner of Taxation (s. 588FGB(5)); and
 - (iii) reasonable steps taken to prevent the debt being incurred or the absence of reasonable steps that could have been taken (s. 588FGB(6)).

See also section 588FG, which provides defences to the Commissioner of Taxation against an order setting aside the company's tax payment. Briefly, the provisions protect an innocent person who either received no benefit as a result of the tax payment, or received a benefit in good faith without grounds to suspect the company's insolvency. If the Commissioner of Taxation successfully argues one of these defences, the payment is not set aside and the director is not personally liable.

2.7 Falsification of books; false and misleading statements and information: sections 1307-1309

- (a) Liability of a director is criminal (s. 1311).
- (b) Since liability is criminal, the penalty does not depend on the damage caused.
- (c) Liability will attach to specific directors in the sense that it will be imposed on the particular director(s) in breach.

- (d) There is no specific period before commencement of a subsequent insolvency procedure within which the relevant act must have been undertaken in order for liability to attach to a director. Further, it is not necessary to show that the company was insolvent at the time.
- (e) Depending on the particular offence, the following defences may be available:
 - (i) lack of intention to falsify books (s. 1307(3));³⁵
 - (ii) acting honestly;
 - (iii) lack of knowledge that information is false or misleading; and
 - (iv) having taken reasonable steps to ensure the statement was not false or misleading.

QUESTION 3

3. Other persons involved with the company's affairs who may become liable in respect of their actions during the "twilight" period

- (a) In addition to the formally appointed directors of the company, can others be held liable in respect of the company's activities during the "twilight" period if the company were to become subject to a formal insolvency procedure?
- (b) In respect of which acts may other persons be held liable and to what extent does the liability of third parties differ from that for directors identified in question 2 above?
- (c) Will liability be limited to that resulting from involvement with a particular transaction or more generally in relation to the overall loss suffered by creditors?

3.1 Others liable in respect of the company's activities during the "twilight" period

- 3.1.1 The Corporations Act specifies general duties of officers³⁶ of a company, which will apply, to their conduct during the "twilight" period.³⁷ Employees may also be liable for misuse of their position or information during and outside the "twilight" period.³⁸

³⁵ This is the only explicit defence. The others in this list are simply ways in which the elements of an offence might not be satisfied.

3.1.2 The Corporations Act also applies to a person who is not validly appointed as a director if:

- (a) he or she acts in the position of a director; or
- (b) the directors of the company are accustomed to act in accordance with his or her instructions or wishes.³⁹

This person will be deemed to be a director for the purposes of the Corporations Act.

3.1.3 Under section 596AB, a “person” may be liable for entering into an agreement to avoid or reduce employee entitlements. A “person” guilty of fraud, negligence, default, breach of trust or breach of duty in relation to a company may have imposed upon him or her any order that the court thinks appropriate if the corporation suffers or is likely to suffer loss or damage (s. 598).

3.1.4 Division 5 of Part 5.7B (ss. 588V-588X) provides that a holding company can be liable for the insolvent trading of a subsidiary.

3.1.5 A person managing a company while disqualified from acting as a director may become personally liable for the company’s debt (s. 588Z).

3.1.6 Some sections of the Corporations Act create liability not only for those contravening a provision (e.g. directors if the provision imposes requirements on directors), but also for persons involved in the contravention.⁴⁰

3.1.7 Finally, third parties may be held liable to repay the liquidator any benefit they received as a result of an act of the company during the “twilight” period (s. 588FF(1)).

3.2 Acts in respect of which other persons may be held liable

3.2.1 A person who is deemed to be a director may be held liable for any of those acts identified in question 2 above, that is, acts which may give rise to personal liability on the part of directors.⁴¹

3.2.2 An officer of a company will be subject to the duties contained in sections 180-183.⁴² An officer performing an act in contravention of those duties will therefore be liable. An officer will also be criminally liable for obtaining credit for the company by fraud (s. 596(1)(a)), transferring company property with intention to defraud (s. 596(1)(b)), concealing or removing any property of the company after or within 2 months before the date of any unsatisfied judgment against the company (s. 596(1)(c)), various offences under section 590⁴³, falsification of books (s. 1307⁴⁴) and furnishing misleading information (s. 1309). Liability will be the same as it would be for a director.

⁴¹ That is, their liability will be the same as for a validly appointed director.

- 3.2.3 Liability of a “person” involved in another person’s contravention of sections 181, 182 or 183 (i.e. failure to act in good faith, misuse of position or misuse of information) is the same as it would be for that other person.
- 3.2.4 A third party may be liable to repay the company’s liquidator if the liquidator seeks orders that certain transactions entered into by the company with the third party during the “twilight” period are voidable.⁴⁵ The court may make a variety of orders;⁴⁶ including that the third party pay an amount equal to some or all of the money the company has paid under the transaction (s. 588FF(1)(a)) or an amount which fairly represents some or all of the benefits the person has received because of the transaction (s. 588FF(1)(c)).
- 3.2.5 Under section 596AB, a “person” may be liable for entering into an agreement to avoid or reduce employee entitlements. A “person” may also be criminally liable for producing (or contributing to) misleading documents (s. 1308). Liability is the same as it would be for a director. Liability of a “person” (under s. 598) for fraud, negligence, default, breach of trust or breach of duty is entirely within the court’s discretion, but may be related to the corporation’s loss or damage.
- 3.2.6 Division 5 of Part 5.7B (ss. 588V-588X) provides that a holding company can be liable to compensate loss or damage caused by the insolvent trading of a subsidiary.
- 3.2.7 A person managing a company while disqualified from acting as a director may become personally liable for the company’s debt (s. 588Z).

3.3 Limitation of liability

- 3.3.1 Whether liability will be limited to that resulting from involvement with a particular transaction, or relates more generally to the overall loss suffered by creditors, will depend upon the particular provision of the Corporations Act under consideration.
- 3.3.2 For example, a person who has received an unfair preference may be ordered to pay to the company an amount equal to some or all of the money that the company has paid under the transaction (s. 588FF(1)(a)). The person’s liability will then be limited under section 588FF(1)(a) to the loss resulting from that particular transaction.
- 3.3.3 In an action for breach of a civil penalty provision (such as s. 588G(3) or ss. 180-183), liability pursuant to a compensation order is for an amount up to the loss or damage resulting from the particular contravention, including profits made by anyone as a result of the contravention (s. 1317H).

- 3.3.4 In an action against a director (or a deemed director)⁴⁷ for breach of his or her duty to prevent insolvent trading, a liquidator may recover from the director as a debt an amount equal to the amount of the loss or damage resulting from the company continuing to trade whilst insolvent (s. 588M(2)). Recovery in this case is limited to a particular transaction, but in practice liquidators pursue claims relating to several (though not necessarily all) transactions at the same time. This has the effect of allowing recovery of overall loss suffered by some or all creditors from the point in time when the director is found to have allowed the company to continue to trade whilst insolvent.
- 3.3.5 The same reasoning applies to liability of a holding company for its subsidiary's insolvent trading under sections 588V-588X.
- 3.3.6 Similarly, liability for breach of section 596AB is limited to the loss to a single employee resulting from a particular transaction. However, where action is taken by a liquidator, claims relating to several employees and transactions may be pursued at the same time.
- 3.3.7 Liability (under s. 588Z) of a person who manages the company while disqualified is within the court's discretion but is connected to the company's debts and liabilities. The court is likely to impose liability that bears some relation to (but may not be equal to) those debts and liabilities incurred by the company while the person was disqualified and managing the company.
- 3.3.8 Liability (under s. 598) of a person guilty of fraud, negligence, default, breach of trust or breach of duty is also within the court's discretion. One of the possible orders is the order for repayment of the loss or damage suffered by the corporation as a result of the fraud, negligence, default or breach.
- 3.3.9 Where liability is criminal or a pecuniary penalty order is made, a fine is payable to the Commonwealth. At best, the loss resulting from the particular contravention may be indirectly taken into account when setting the amount of the fine.
- 3.3.10 Sections 181-183 impose liability on a person who is involved in another person's contravention. The first person's liability will normally be limited (if at all) in the same way as the liability of that other person.

QUESTION 4

4. Counter-parties dealing with the company during the "twilight" period
- (a) From the point of view of a counter-party dealing with the company during the "twilight" period, what are the potential heads of challenge which may lead to transactions with the company being set aside?

⁴⁷ Because the definition of "director" in s. 9 includes deemed directors, the liability of a deemed director will always be the same as the liability of a validly appointed director would be in the same circumstances.

- (b) What defences, if any, to the areas of vulnerability identified above will be available to a counter-party seeking to protect a transaction from being attacked?

4.1 Heads of challenge which may lead to counter-party⁴⁸ transactions being set aside

- 4.1.1 A creditor may be ordered to repay an unfair preference that occurred during the six month period ending on the relation-back day or after that day but on or before the day when the winding up began. This time period is increased to four years if a related entity is involved and 10 years if the purpose of the payment was to defeat creditors.⁴⁹ A creditor may be ordered to forego the benefit of an uncommercial transaction during the two years ending on the relation-back day.

The challenge can only be made if the company is insolvent.

- 4.1.2 A loan to a company at any time on or before the day when the winding up began may be determined to be unfair (s. 588FD) and set aside.
- 4.1.3 In any of these cases the court may make a range of orders under section 588FF, including the payment of money and the transfer of property.
- 4.1.4 The benefit of a voidable transaction that discharges a liability of a related entity can be recovered from that entity by the liquidator.⁵⁰
- 4.1.5 A floating charge created within six months before the relation-back day (or after that day but on or before the day the winding up began) is void against the company's liquidator except in so far as it secures certain advances (see 11.2.3), unless the company was solvent immediately after the charge was created.⁵¹
- 4.1.6 A general law claim may be made against a counterparty where it received the benefit of a transaction undertaken by the directors of an insolvent or near insolvent company in breach of their duty to that company.

4.2 Defences available to a counter-party seeking to protect a transaction from being attacked

- 4.2.1 Defences to orders against voidable preferences are contained in section 588FG:
- (a) a non-party is not to be the subject of an order materially prejudicing its interests if that party received no benefit, or the benefit was received in good faith and there were no reasonable grounds to suspect the company's insolvency; and

⁵¹ Section 588FJ. See further the answer to question 11(b).

- (b) a party (other than the recipient of an unfair loan) is not to be the subject of an order materially prejudicing its interests if it acted in good faith, there were no reasonable grounds to suspect the company's insolvency, and the party provided valuable consideration or changed its position in reliance on the transaction.

QUESTION 5

5. Enforcement

By whom may action be brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3 above)?

5.1 The company

- 5.1.1 Whilst not exclusively relevant to the "twilight" period, the company is the appropriate applicant for any breach of the statutory duties of directors and other officers and employees described in answer to questions 2 and 3 above, or for any breach of the general law duty of directors to exercise their powers in the best interests of the company as a whole. The liquidator has power by reason of section 477(2)(a) of the Corporations Act to bring proceedings in the name of the company.
- 5.1.2 The company is also the appropriate applicant for relief where the claim is in respect of a breach of the general law duty of directors of companies which are insolvent, near insolvent or of doubtful solvency to exercise their powers having regard to the interests of that company's creditors.⁵²
- 5.1.3 Finally, the company may apply for a compensation order if a civil penalty provision has been breached: (s. 1317J(2)).

5.2 The liquidator

- 5.2.1 In the event that the court exercises its power under section 474(2) to vest property of the company (including the company's claims, e.g. against the directors) in its liquidator, the liquidator may bring proceedings on account of the company's claims in the liquidator's own name.
- 5.2.2 It is the liquidator, rather than the company, who may bring a claim against a director for breach of the duty to prevent insolvent trading⁵³ and for causing the company to undertake a transaction which has the purpose of defeating claims by employees to their entitlements.⁵⁴
- 5.2.3 The liquidator also has a statutory right to make an application to the Court against those guilty of fraud, negligence, default, breach of duty or breach of trust in relation to the company.⁵⁵

⁵⁵ Section 598(2). See also definition of "eligible applicant" in s. 9.

- 5.2.4 It is also the liquidator of the company who may seek recovery from an entity related to the company (which may be a director) in respect of that entity's liability discharged as the result of a voidable insolvent transaction.⁵⁶

5.3 Shareholders

- 5.3.1 Proceedings for breach of duty to a company are generally only available to the company itself, which is separate from its shareholders – this is referred to as the rule in Foss v Harbottle.⁵⁷ No relevant exception to the rule applies in the particular circumstance of a breach of duty by a director of the company, or some other person concerned in its management, during the “twilight” period in circumstances where a liquidator or other external administrator has been appointed to the company.

5.4 Creditors

- 5.4.1 As with shareholders, it is generally the case that creditors (including employees) may not bring proceedings for a breach of duty against directors of a company or others concerned in its management.
- 5.4.2 However, in certain circumstances, creditors may be entitled to bring proceedings against directors of a company for breach of the duty to prevent insolvent trading.⁵⁸
- 5.4.3 Employees may also make claims against a person who has caused the company to undertake transactions with the intention of preventing the company from discharging its obligations to those employees in respect of the employees' entitlements.⁵⁹
- 5.4.4 The Commissioner of Taxation may bring an action to recover from the director an amount paid to the Commissioner by the company, if that amount is later found to be a preference (s. 588FGA).

5.5 Government or regulatory authorities

- 5.5.1 The Commissioner of Taxation (a statutory officer under the Income Tax Assessment Act 1936 (Cth) (Tax Act)) may recover his losses in an insolvency administration by bringing claims against directors as a result of the failure on the part of the company to remit certain taxes.
- 5.5.2 Most claims will be brought under a regime established by the Tax Act. In essence the operation of those provisions requires:⁶⁰
- (a) a failure by the company to remit the amount of taxes which it has deducted from payments made by the company (group tax);

⁵⁸ Sections 588R, 588S, 588T and 588U.

⁶⁰ See Division 9 of Part VI (sections 222ANA-222AQD) of the Tax Act.

- (b) the service upon the directors of the company of notices requiring them to either remedy that default or take other prescribed action, including putting the company into some form of insolvency administration; and
 - (c) a failure on the part of the directors to comply with that notice within 14 days.
- 5.5.3 Further, where the director causes or allows the company to make a payment of money to the Commissioner of Taxation that is later found to be voidable under section 588FE such that an order under section 588FF is made by a court against the Commissioner for repayment of the money to the liquidator, the director can be liable to indemnify the Commissioner for his loss under section 588FGA.
- 5.5.4 Whilst it is not finally resolved that the incurring of liabilities for taxes and duties can involve a breach of the duty to prevent insolvent trading, if it does, then the revenue authorities, as is the case with other creditors, may be able to bring proceedings under section 588M(3) for unpaid taxes and duties.
- 5.5.5 Beyond these particular circumstances, government and regulatory authorities are limited to the prosecution of criminal and quasi-criminal proceedings against directors.
- 5.5.6 For example, in relation to contraventions of civil penalty provisions, ASIC may apply for a declaration of contravention, a pecuniary penalty order or a compensation order.⁶¹ ASIC may also make an application to the Court against those guilty of fraud, negligence, default, breach of duty or breach of trust in relation to the company.⁶²
- 5.5.7 In relation to an alleged contravention of a minor offence, ASIC may issue a penalty notice requiring the alleged offender, within a specified time of at least 21 days, to pay a penalty and (if applicable) stop committing the offence. If the recipient complies with the notice, no criminal proceedings are issued.⁶³

6. Remedies: orders available to the domestic court

In respect of the offences identified in questions 2, 3 and 4 above, what remedies are available in the domestic court?

- 6.1 In respect of contraventions committed during the “twilight” period, the remedies are:

- (a) for the liquidator – recovery in respect of the loss or damage suffered by the creditor(s) (s. 588M(2)), employee(s) (s. 596AC(2)) or the company⁶⁴ (s. 1317J); recovery from a related entity (s. 588FH(2)), a holding company (s. 588W) and a person managing the corporation while disqualified (s. 588Z); recovery from a chargee where a void floating charge was discharged (s. 588FJ(6)); orders in respect of voidable transactions (s. 588FF);
- (b) for the creditor – recovery in respect of its loss or damage (s. 588M(3));
- (c) in respect of an employee – compensation equal to the employee's loss or damage (s. 596AC(3))⁶⁵; and
- (d) for the ASIC - compensation equal to the loss or damage (ss 588J and 1317J), a pecuniary penalty (s. 1317J), a declaration of contravention of a civil penalty provision (s. 1317J) or a disqualification order (s. 206C).

In respect of a claim by the Commissioner of Taxation under section 588FGA, section 588FGA(4) allows an order to be made for indemnity by the directors in respect of the Commissioner's loss or damage, which is recoverable as a debt due to the Commonwealth.

ASIC or the Director of Public Prosecutions may lay charges where a criminal offence is alleged. Remedies are generally fines and/or imprisonment.⁶⁶

QUESTION 7

7. Duty to co-operate

- (a) To what extent are directors (and others identified in question 3 above) obliged to co-operate with an investigation into the company's affairs following its insolvency?
- (b) Are any human rights laws applicable in the domestic jurisdiction in relation to any such obligations (e.g. in the UK and other European jurisdictions Article 6 of the European Convention of Human Rights may apply if domestic law compels a person to provide potentially self-incriminating information at the request of the office-holder appointed under the relevant insolvency procedure adopted)?

7.1 Extent to which directors are obliged to co-operate with an investigation into the company's affairs following its insolvency

- 7.1.1 Directors and certain other persons connected with the company are required to provide a liquidator with a report as to the company's affairs as at the date of its winding up. That report is, in essence, a listing of the company's assets and liabilities. A further obligation exists to provide such additional information as the liquidator requires by notice in writing given to the relevant persons.⁶⁷
- 7.1.2 There is also a positive obligation on officers of the company to deliver books and records to the liquidator, and to give any information and assistance reasonably required by the liquidator.⁶⁸
- 7.1.3 Whilst a breach of those obligations is punishable as an offence (s. 1311), as a matter of practice, if a liquidator wishes to pursue information, she or he will rely upon the examination provisions of the Corporations Act which allow a court to summon a person for examination about a company's affairs.⁶⁹
- 7.1.4 Where a prosecution in respect of an offence under the Corporations Act has been instituted against a person, ASIC may require any person who is or was a partner, employee or agent of the defendant to assist in the prosecution by giving "all assistance in connection with the prosecution that the person is reasonably able to give" (s. 1317(1), and see also s. 1317R, which applies both to criminal and quasi-penal proceedings, and imposes requirements on a wider range of persons).
- 7.1.5 Finally, section 1310 prohibits a person from obstructing or hindering (without lawful excuse) ASIC or anyone else in the performance or exercise of a function or power under the Corporations Act.

7.2 Applicable human rights laws

- 7.2.1 The discussion here is limited to the privilege against self-incrimination.
- 7.2.2 Australia is a signatory to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR). Under Article 14.3(g) of the ICCPR, a person charged with a criminal offence shall not "be compelled to testify against himself or to confess guilt". This right may be relied upon by directors under question during investigation of the company. The ICCPR, "while having no force [as law] in the Australian municipal law, nevertheless provides an important influence on the development of Australian common law".⁷⁰
- 7.2.3 Under Australian law the privilege against self-incrimination is not considered to be merely a rule of evidence governing the admissibility of evidence in judicial or quasi-judicial proceedings. In the words of Mason CJ and Toomey J in Environmental Protection Authority v Caltex Refining Co Pty Ltd (1993) 178 CLR 477:

"The privilege in its modern form is in the nature of a human right, designed to protect individuals from oppressive methods of obtaining evidence of their guilt for use against them."

⁷⁰ Environmental Protection Authority v Caltex Refining Co Pty Ltd (1993) 178 CLR 477.

- 7.2.4 The privilege does not apply during ASIC investigations, a person cannot rely on it in refusing to provide information or a document. However, where the person claims privilege in respect of any incriminating information or document before providing it to ASIC at the investigation, the information or document is not admissible as evidence against the person in a criminal proceeding or a proceeding for the imposition of a penalty (except for proceedings concerned with the falsity of such information or document).⁷¹
- 7.2.5 Similar rules apply in relation to examining a person about a corporation under section 597. Examinees are obliged to answer any question put to them in the context of such examinations notwithstanding that the answers may tend to incriminate them (s. 597(12)). However, for so long as privilege is claimed in relation to any such answers, those answers may not be used in criminal proceedings (or proceedings for the imposition of a penalty) against the examinee other than proceedings concerned with the falsity of any such answer (s. 597(12A)).⁷²
- 7.2.6 It is settled law in Australia that the privilege is not available to artificial entities such as corporations.⁷³

QUESTION 8

8. Appeals and limitation periods

- (a) What limitation period, if any, will apply to actions brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3) in connection with the offences identified in question 2?
- (b) Please indicate whether an appeal is available from the decision of the lower courts.

8.1 Limitation periods applying to actions brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3) in connection with the offences described in question 2

- 8.1.1 Any proceeding brought with respect to voidable transactions pursuant to section 588FF must be commenced before three years after the relation-back day or 12 months after the first appointment of a liquidator in relation to the winding up of the company or within such longer period as the court orders on an application by the liquidator within the three years (s. 588FF(3)).
- 8.1.2 It appears that actions against the directors by the Commissioner of Taxation pursuant to section 588FGA (action for a debt) must be commenced within six years, being a period commonly prescribed by state laws.

⁷¹ Section 68 of the Australian Securities and Investments Commission Act 1989 (Cth). Note that the protection given by s. 68 does not apply in civil proceedings.

- 8.1.3 Actions against directors by either a creditor or liquidator for recovery of compensation for loss resulting from insolvent trading must be commenced within six years after the beginning of the winding up (s. 588M(4)).
- 8.1.4 Actions against persons who breach section 596AB (agreements or transactions entered into to avoid employee entitlements) must be made within six years after the beginning of the winding up (s. 596AC(4)).
- 8.1.5 An action against a holding company for recovery of loss resulting from a subsidiary's insolvent trading pursuant to section 588V may only be commenced within six years after the beginning of the winding up (s. 588W(2)).
- 8.1.6 If a civil penalty provision is breached, proceedings for a pecuniary penalty order or a compensation order may only be started within six years after the contravention (s. 1317K).
- 8.1.7 Criminal proceedings may be instituted within five years after the act or omission said to constitute the alleged offence or at any later time with the consent of the Minister (s. 1316). Penalty notices for alleged contraventions of minor offences⁷⁴ must also be issued within this time (s. 1313(2)(b)).

8.2 Appeal from the decision of lower courts

- 8.2.1 The Corporations Act does not provide any time limits for appeals in penal, civil, criminal or disqualification proceedings.
- 8.2.2 The court in which the proceeding is decided will be determined by reference to the particular section of the Corporations Act pursuant to which the proceeding is brought. For example, where the relevant section of the Corporations Act refers to Court with a capital "C", that Court is defined in the Corporations Act (s. 58AA) as meaning any Federal Court, Supreme Court or Family Court (i.e. superior Court). Where the relevant section of the Corporations Act refers to court with a small "c", that court means any court exercising "the jurisdiction of this jurisdiction".⁷⁵
- 8.2.3 If a matter is decided in the Supreme Court of a particular State or Territory, the time limit for any appeal would be governed by the rules of that particular Court. For example, in Queensland a party has 28 days after the date of a Supreme Court decision to file a Notice of Appeal (unless the Court of Appeal orders otherwise).⁷⁶
- 8.2.4 In the Federal Court, a party has 21 days after the date on which the judgment was pronounced, or alternatively the date on which leave to appeal was granted, or such further time as the Court may allow, to file and serve a notice of appeal.⁷⁷

⁷⁶ Rule 748 of the Uniform Civil Procedure Rules.

⁷⁷ Order 52, Rule 15 of the Federal Court Rules.

- 8.2.5 A person who is disqualified from managing corporations may apply to the court for leave to manage a corporation, provided that the person was not disqualified by ASIC. However, before bringing the application for leave to manage the corporation, the person must lodge a notice in the prescribed form with ASIC at least 21 days before commencing the proceedings.⁷⁸

QUESTION 9

9. Foreign corporations

Do the legal provisions and procedures outlined above apply to both domestic and foreign corporations?

- 9.1 The provisions dealing with transactions in the “twilight” period⁷⁷ apply to both foreign and domestic companies.⁸⁰
- 9.2 A “foreign company” (as defined in s. 9) must not carry on business in Australia unless it is registered or has applied to be registered (s. 601CD), but if a foreign company does carry on business in Australia, it is liable to be wound up by order of the Australian courts (s583).

QUESTION 10

10. Insurance

Is directors’ and officers’ insurance available in your jurisdiction? If so, to what extent will the availability of such insurance provide effective protection to directors against personal liability that may arise in connection with the issues raised in questions 1-9 above?

- 10.1 Directors’ and officers’ liability insurance is available in Australia. Policies offer cover for “wrongful acts”, typically failing to exercise diligent control over management and thus failing to safeguard against losses caused by reckless decisions and embezzlement. Cover is also available to the company itself if it pays out under an indemnity it grants to the director or officer.
- 10.2 Companies may pay the premium for policies taken out to cover directors’ and officers’ liabilities as long as cover is not provided for, among others, the following (other than for legal costs – see below):⁸¹

⁷⁹ This encompasses all the provisions of the Corporations Act considered above, but may not necessarily include relevant provisions from other legislation.

⁸¹ Sections 199A and 199B of the Corporations Act.

- (a) a liability owed to the company (which may arise due to breaches of other duties);
- (b) conduct resulting in a pecuniary penalty or compensatory order;⁸²
- (c) conduct not in good faith;
- (d) wilful breaches of duty in relation to the company; and
- (e) conduct involving improper use of position or information.⁸³

- 10.3 Legal costs may be advanced to directors and officers facing proceedings involving allegations of these types. However, the costs must be repaid should there be a finding of fact against the director or officer (s. 199A(3)).⁸⁴ Directors may pay their own premiums to insure themselves against those liabilities against which the company is unable to insure.
- 10.4 In general, directors' and officers' policies do not specifically deny indemnity to companies or directors for liabilities arising from insolvent trading. However, on the ground of public policy, the policies do not allow for insurance against liabilities arising from directors' or officers' deliberate fraudulent acts or omissions, wilful breaches of legislation and criminal acts. Arguably, insolvent trading that involves the directors in personal liability could come within these general exclusions, so that directors are not insured.

11. How safe is it for directors and others to incur further credit during the "twilight" period?

11.1 Overview

- 11.1.1 Insolvent trading provisions apply to "directors", defined to be persons:
- (a) who are occupying, or acting in, the position of a director; or
 - (b) at whose directions or instructions the directors are accustomed to act.
- 11.1.2 In incurring further credit on behalf of the company during the "twilight" period, directors tread a very fine line. While they have a duty not to incur debts while the company is insolvent (s. 588G), insolvency is determined on a cash flow basis and the ability to raise further credit is an issue to be considered in that context.

⁸⁴ See also s. 212(2)(c)(ii).

- 11.1.3 In *Sandell v Porter*⁸⁵ the High Court of Australia stated that, in determining solvency, courts should take into account the debtor's ability to sell assets or borrow money within a relatively short time period.⁸⁶ The question of what time period is acceptable will depend on the circumstances of the case. In determining cash flow insolvency the courts have also made a distinction between insolvency and a temporary lack of liquidity.⁸⁷
- 11.1.4 It is a defence to an action for insolvent trading that the directors had reasonable grounds to expect and did expect that the company was solvent at the time and would remain solvent if it incurred the relevant debt (s. 588H(2)).
- 11.2 Can an unconnected third party rely on the validity of transactions entered into with a company (in particular guarantees and securities) during the "twilight" period?
- 11.2.1 Generally, a third party is protected where the company obtains a genuine commercial benefit from the transaction. For instance, if security for debt is given at the time of incurring the debt, the security cannot be challenged later, but if the security is given for an earlier debt, this can be challenged by the liquidator.
- 11.2.2 Similarly, a floating charge which is created on the property of the company during the six months ending on the relation-back day (or after that day but on or before the day when the winding up began) is void against the company's liquidator unless the company was solvent immediately after the charge was created (ss. 588FJ(1) and (3)).
- 11.2.3 However, section 588FJ(2) provides that any such charge is not void in so far as it secures any of the following:
- (a) an advance paid to the company, or at its direction, at or after the time the charge was created and as consideration for the charge;
 - (b) interest on such advance;
 - (c) the amount of a liability under a guarantee or other obligation undertaken at or after the creation of the charge on behalf of, or for the benefit of, the company;
 - (d) an amount payable for property or services supplied to the company at or after the creation of the charge; or
 - (e) interest on an amount so payable.

⁸⁶ Note that the Corporations Act defines a person to be "insolvent" when he or she is not solvent (s. 95A(2)), and a person is defined to be solvent "if, and only if, the person is able to pay all the person's debts, as and when they become due and payable" (s. 95A(1)).

⁸⁷ Sandell v Porter (1966) 115 CLR 666, per Berwick CJ at 370. See also Hymix Concrete Pty Limited v Garrity (1977) 13 ALR 321 where it was held that a company's whole financial position must be considered and a temporary lack of liquidity does not necessarily mean insolvency.

APPENDIX

Summary of Australian insolvency procedures and commercial issues

1. Summary of insolvency regime in Australia

1.1 The insolvency regime in Australia is divided into:

- (a) Insolvency of natural persons – see Bankruptcy Act; and
- (b) Insolvency of corporations – see Corporations Act.

1.2 Despite the split, disqualification and liability of directors of failed corporations is dealt with in the Corporations Act. The Act sets out the duties and liabilities of directors. Significantly, if the company has traded whilst insolvent, directors can be personally liable for debts incurred by the company when the company had no reasonable likelihood of being able to pay all its debts. In addition, taxation legislation imposes personal liability on directors for some of their company's unpaid tax debts, subject to the protection that directors can obtain by putting the company into administration or liquidation.

1.3 Directors of failed companies can also be disqualified from becoming directors for a period of time, which varies according to the circumstances. A common period is one to two years.

1.4 Summary of insolvency procedures for corporations

1.4.1 Voluntary administration

If, in the opinion of its directors, a company is insolvent (i.e., unable to pay all of its debts as and when they fall due) or is likely to become insolvent, they may resolve to appoint an administrator. The administrator is required to call meetings of creditors and report to them. On the basis of those reports, the creditors vote on three options:

- (a) enter into a deed of company arrangement with the creditors of the company, which may allow the continued operation of the company and provide scope for considerable flexibility in allowing the company to restructure its affairs;
- (b) be wound up (also known as “liquidation”); or
- (c) return control of the company to the directors (this is rare).

No court involvement is required, although any interested party such as the administrator or a creditor can apply to the court for a wide range of supervisory orders.

1.4.2 Liquidation of the company

This is also known as winding up. This can be by a voluntary process instigated by the shareholders or the creditors, or by an involuntary process through court order. Through each of these processes a liquidator is appointed whose role is to realise the assets of the company and distribute proceeds to creditors in accordance with statutory priorities. A liquidator has the right to avoid some transactions entered into before winding up.

1.4.3 Receivership

Secured creditors stand outside voluntary administration and winding up. While the right of secured creditors to realise their security might be temporarily delayed by a voluntary administration or a winding up, they do not lose that right. A secured creditor usually appoints a receiver to an insolvent company with first right over the assets of that company until the debt of the secured creditor is paid in full. The court also has power, separately from a secured creditor, to appoint a receiver where the court considers it appropriate to do so.

2. Summary of commercial issues

- 2.1 Directors of companies in liquidation can be exposed to personal liability.
- 2.2 Relatively few actions are taken against directors for insolvent trading.
- 2.3 One reason why such actions are not commonplace is that they are expensive to run and can become complex, for example, in that insolvency of the company at various times needs to be proved by expert evidence. Another reason is that actions for insolvent trading are available only where a company is in liquidation. One major purpose of the voluntary administration procedure is to avoid liquidation.
- 2.4 On the other hand, litigation insurance is available to insolvency practitioners who have minimal or no funds in the administration. This can increase the threat to directors. The Commissioner of Taxation is increasingly more ready to pursue his own remedies against directors of failed companies.
- 2.5 There are recent examples of the Australian Securities and Investments Commission (ASIC – the corporate watchdog) itself pursuing high profile directors where companies have failed.
- 2.6 ASIC is also active in taking steps to disqualify directors, although this action usually takes place well after the winding up has concluded.
- 2.7 The courts have generally been realistic in the retrospective review of the conduct of directors. They understand that business involves risk and they are reluctant to stifle entrepreneurship on the part of directors.
- 2.8 At the same time, the courts have shown no tolerance for passive directors who leave the hard work to others and claim that they did not know what was happening.

- 2.9 Liquidators have demonstrated an aggressive attitude to litigation, in particular with litigation insurance available. Preference actions are commonplace (in Australia there is no requirement to prove an intention to prefer a creditor). These do not, however, universally result in a net return to creditors.
- 2.10 After the liquidator's remuneration, secured creditors and priority creditors (for example employees) are paid, returns to unsecured creditors are minimal or (if the company's assets have been completely depleted) non-existent. Thus unsecured creditors are generally supportive of the voluntary administration procedure, which is intended to keep the business trading. The return from such a procedure is often better than that which would be achieved in a winding up.

1. The start and duration of the “twilight” period

What is the length of the period ending with formal insolvency proceedings during which transactions entered into by a company are vulnerable to attack or are liable to give rise to personal liability on the part of directors and/or others involved in the management of the company?

1.1 Overview

- 1.1.1 Bermuda law provides statutory remedies in relation to ‘clawback’ provisions. Generally the key issue is whether the company was ‘insolvent’ at the time (or as a result) of the relevant transaction.

“Insolvent” for these purposes means the moment at which the company becomes unable to pay its debts as they fall due - the “cash-flow” test.

- 1.1.2 It is important to note that a director’s general duty to act in the best interests of the company has a different content when a company is ‘insolvent’. In that context the word “insolvent” means that the liabilities of a company exceed its assets). In these circumstances, the directors must exercise their powers and discharge their duties with a view to minimizing the potential loss to creditors as opposed to acting in the best interests of the collective body of shareholders.

- 1.1.3 The “twilight period” generally ends when a formal insolvency procedure commences¹.

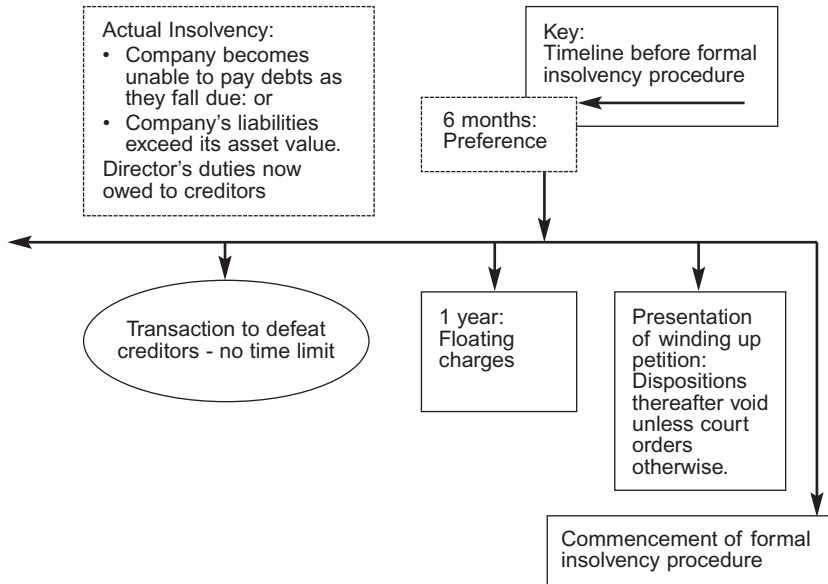

- 1.1.4 The various vulnerability periods for the Bermuda law clawbacks, being periods prior to the commencement of a formal insolvency, are as follows:

- (a) preferences (eg. security, charges) - 6 months, s237;
- (b) voidable floating charges - 12 months, (s239);
- (c) transactions at an undervalue (eg. guarantees) - two years (s36A,) Conveyancing Act 1993;
- (d) dispositions after winding up petition - from date of petition (s. 166).

Whilst these provisions are considered in more detail in reply to question 4, we set out below a “time line” summarising the statutory provisions mentioned above.

¹ This will generally be the date on which the winding up petition was issued upon which the court ultimately made an order that the company enter the insolvency procedure involved or, in the case of a voluntary procedure, the date on which a resolution was passed by the company to pursue that voluntary procedure.

1.2 Summary

- 1.2.1 If a company is balance sheet or cash-flow insolvent and within a vulnerability period (usually six months) and enters a formal insolvency procedure (e.g. liquidation), transactions such as new charges, guarantees or sales of assets at less than market value may be vulnerable to attack by the liquidator.

QUESTION 2

2. Actions potentially giving rise to liability for directors

- (a) In respect of which acts during the “twilight” period may a director be held personally liable or which may otherwise have adverse consequences for him?
 - (b) In relation to each act identified in (a) above:-
 - (i) is any resulting liability against a director civil, criminal or both?;
 - (ii) can a director be made personally liable in respect of the whole loss caused to the company or the deficit to creditors?;

- (iii) will liability attach to individual directors in proportion to their specific involvement?;
- (iv) is there a specified period before commencement of a subsequent insolvency procedure within which the relevant act must have been undertaken in order for liability to attach to a director?; and
- (v) what defences, if any, will be available in relation to each offence?

2.1 Fraudulent trading²

- (a) This applies where a company is being wound up and it is shown that the business of the company has “been carried on with intent to defraud creditors of the company or the creditors of any other person or for any fraudulent purpose”. The elements of the concept are therefore, as follows:
 - (i) there has to be an insolvent liquidation in progress;
 - (ii) there has to have been dishonesty in the running of the business as
 - (iii) that is the meaning of defrauding creditors or carrying on a business for a fraudulent purpose;
 - (iv) as dishonesty is involved, the standard of proof is that of ‘beyond reasonable doubt’, even in a case of civil liability;
 - (v) it applies to persons who are “knowingly parties” to the fraudulent trading.
- (b) (i) Liability may be criminal or civil.
 - (ii) The court enjoys a wide discretion to compensate for the loss caused to the company by the director’s conduct. The section provides that a person found liable shall be personally responsible, without any limitation of liability, for all or any of the debts or other liability of the company as the Court may direct.
 - (iii) There is no specified period.
 - (vi) The main defence is that the party concerned was not dishonest. In practice, the party may be able to admit to incompetence, imprudence or even folly as long as he honestly believed that, for example, any new credit incurred would ultimately be repaid in full. It is worth noting that it is rare for persons to be found liable for fraudulent trading.

2.2 Fraud by officers of companies which have gone into liquidation³

If any person, being at the time of the commission of the alleged offence an officer of a company which is subsequently ordered to be wound up by the Court or subsequently passes a resolution for voluntary winding up, -

- (a) has by false pretence or by means of any other fraud induced any person to give credit to the company;
- (b) with intent to defraud creditors of the company, has made or caused to be made any transfer of or charge on, or has caused or connived at the levying of any execution against, the property of the company; or
- (c) with intent to defraud creditors of the company, has concealed or removed any part of the property of the company since, or within two months before, the date of any unsatisfied judgment or order for payment of money obtained against the company, shall be liable to either on indictment to imprisonment for a term of two years, or on summary conviction to imprisonment for a term of twelve months.

- (b) If any of (a) - (c) above are satisfied:
 - (i) Liability is criminal.
 - (ii) A person guilty of this offence is liable to imprisonment.
 - (iii) The gravity of the wrongdoing will be reflected in the length of imprisonment. In exercising its punitive jurisdiction under this section the court is not seeking to compensate the company.

2.3 Offences by officers of companies in liquidation⁴

According to section 243 (1) of the Companies Act, if any person, being a past or present officer of a company which at the time of the commission of the alleged offence is being wound up, whether by the Court or voluntarily, or is subsequently ordered to be wound up by the Court or subsequently passes a resolution for voluntary winding up:—

- (a) does not to the best of his knowledge and belief fully and truly discover to the liquidator all the property, real and personal, of the company, and how and to whom and for what consideration and when the company disposed of any part thereof, except such part as has been disposed of in the ordinary way of the business of the company; or
- (b) does not deliver up to the liquidator, or as he directs, all such part of the real and personal property of the company as is in his custody or under his control, and which he is required by law to deliver up; or

⁴ Section 243 (1) Companies Act.

- (c) does not deliver up to the liquidator, or as he directs, all books and papers in his custody or under his control belonging to the company and which he is required by law to deliver up;
- (d) within twelve months next before the commencement of the winding up or at any time thereafter conceals any part of the property of the company to the value of three hundred dollars or upwards, or conceals any debt due to or from the company; or
- (e) within twelve months next before the commencement of the winding up or at any time thereafter fraudulently removes any part of the property of the company to the value of fifty dollars or upwards; or
- (f) makes any material omission in any statement relating to the affairs of the company; or
- (g) knowing or believing that a false debt has been proved by any person under winding up, fails for the period of a month to inform the liquidator thereof; or
- (h) after the commencement of the winding up prevents the production of any book or paper affecting or relating to the property or affairs of the company; or
- (i) within twelve months next before the commencement of the winding up or at any time thereafter, conceals, destroys, mutilates or falsifies, or is privy to the concealment, destruction, mutilation or falsification of, any book or paper affecting or relating to the property or affairs of the company; or
- (j) within twelve months next before the commencement of the winding up or at any time thereafter makes or is privy to the making of any false entry in any book or paper affecting or relating to the property or affairs of the company; or
- (k) within twelve months next before the commencement of the winding up or at any time thereafter fraudulently parts with, alters or makes any omission in, or is privy to the fraudulent parting with, altering or making any omission in, any document affecting or relating to the property or affairs of the company; or
- (l) after the commencement of the winding up or at any meeting of the creditors of the company within twelve months next before the commencement of the winding up attempts to account for any part of the property of the company by fictitious losses or expenses; or
- (m) has within twelve months next before the commencement of the winding up or at any time thereafter, by any false representation or other fraud, obtained any property for or on behalf of the company on credit for which the company does not subsequently pay for; or

- (n) within twelve months next before the winding up or any time thereafter, under false pretence that the company is carrying on its business, obtains on credit, for or on behalf of the company, any property which the company does not subsequently pay for; or
- (o) within twelve months next before the commencement of the winding up or at any time thereafter pawns, pledges or disposes of any property of the company which has been obtained on credit and has not been paid for, unless such pawning, pledging, or disposing is in the ordinary way of the business of the company; or
- (p) is guilty of any false representation or other fraud for the purpose of obtaining the consent of the creditors of the company or any of them to an agreement with reference to the affairs of the company or to the winding up, he shall, in the case of the offences mentioned respectively in paragraphs (m), (n) and (o), of this subsection, be liable on indictment to imprisonment for a term of five years, or on summary conviction to imprisonment for a term of twelve months, and in the case of any other offence he shall be liable on conviction on indictment to imprisonment for a term of two years, or on summary conviction to imprisonment for a term of twelve months:

Provided that it shall be a good defence to a charge under any of paragraphs (a), (b), (c), (d), (f), (m), (n) and (o), if the accused proves that he had no intent to defraud, and to charge under any of paragraphs (h), (i) and (j), if he proves that he had no intent to conceal the state of affairs of the company or to defeat the law.

- (2) Where any person pawns, pledges or disposes of any property in circumstances which amount to an offence under subsection (1)(o), every person who takes in pawn or pledge or otherwise receives the property knowing it to be pawned, pledged or disposed of in such circumstances as aforesaid shall be liable to be punished in the same way as if he had committed an offence under subsection (1)(o).
- (3) For the purpose of this section "officer" shall include any person in accordance with whose directions or instructions the directors of a company have been accustomed to act.

2.4 Falsification of company's books⁵

If any officer or contributory of any company being wound up destroys, mutilates, alters or falsifies any books, papers or securities, or makes or is privy to the making of any false or fraudulent entry in any register, book of account or document belonging to the company with intent to defraud or deceive any person, he shall be liable on conviction on indictment to imprisonment for a period of five years.

2.5 General fiduciary duties owed to the company

(a) The common law as to general fiduciary duties has been codified in broad general terms under section 97 (1) (a) of the Companies Act 1981 which provides, "Every officer of the company in exercising his powers and discharging his duties shall ... act honestly and in good faith with a view to the best interests of the company." This provision does not replace the common law as to directors' fiduciary duties. Bermudian and English common law authorities are considered by the Bermuda Court when dealing with cases involving directors' fiduciary duties.

(b) It is an established rule that insofar as a director of a company is bound by fiduciary duties, those duties are owed to the company only. A number of general legal rules stem from the broad statement of principle set out in section 97 (1) (a) of the Companies Act. These rules vary greatly in the range of application and at many points overlap with each other. The duties include:

- (i) the duty to act bona fide in the interests of the company;
- (ii) the duty to act for proper purposes;
- (iii) the duties as trustee of company property which is in the hands or control of directors;
- (iv) the duty to avoid a conflict of interest and duty;
- (v) the duty to disclose interests in contracts at general law;
- (vi) the duty not to make secret profits.

Once the company is insolvent, however, the interests of the creditors over-ride those of the shareholders in the company. Thereafter the directors' duties are subject to an overriding duty to have regard to the interests of the general creditors of the insolvent company.

- (vii) Section 97 (5A) of the Companies Act provides that an officer shall not be liable for a breach of duty of fiduciary duty under section 97 (1) (b) of the Companies act if he relies in good faith upon:

- (a) financial statements of the company represented to him by another officer of the company; or
- (b) a report of an attorney, accountant, engineer, appraiser or other person whose profession lends credibility to a statement made by him.

In such circumstances:

- (i) Liability for breach of these duties is civil.
- (ii) Liability is for all loss to the company occasioned by the breach of duty subject to the usual rules of recoverability based on considerations of causation and remoteness of damage.
- (iii) An officer may be jointly and severally liable only if it is established that he “knowingly engaged in fraud or dishonesty.”⁶ In cases where fraud or dishonesty is not proved against the officer, but he is found liable, the Court determines the proportionate liability of each defendant and each of the other persons alleged to have caused or contributed to the plaintiff’s loss⁷. The officer shall only be liable for his proportionate share of liability. He shall not be liable to the plaintiff for any judgment entered against other parties or to other parties for judgments entered against them⁸.
- (iv) Subject to Statute of Limitation considerations there is no time limit within which action may be taken against a director.
- (v) Section 98 of the Companies Act permits companies to exonerate directors and to indemnify them either by contract or company bye-laws. However, any contract or bye-law provision that purports to exonerate or indemnify directors’ in respect of fraudulent or dishonest conduct shall be void. Bermuda company bye-laws typically contain some form of exoneration and indemnity provision for directors.
- (vi) The Court has discretion to relieve the director either wholly or partly from liability on such terms as it thinks fit if:
 - (i) he acted honestly;
 - (ii) he acted reasonably; and
 - (iii) he ought fairly to be excused from liability in all the circumstances⁹

2.6 Duties of skill and care

- (a) Similar to fiduciary duties, the common law as to duties of skill and care has been codified in broad general terms under section 97 (1) (b) of the Companies Act 1981 which provides, "Every officer of the company in exercising his powers and discharging his duties shall exercise the care, diligence and skill that a reasonably prudent person would exercise in comparable circumstances." Bermudian and English common law authorities are considered by the Bermuda Court when dealing with cases involving directors' duties of skill and care.

As with fiduciary duties, a director's common law duties are subject to an overriding duty to have regard to the interests of the company's general creditors once it becomes insolvent.

- (b) (i) Liability for breach of these duties is civil.
- (ii) Subject to paragraph (iii) below, the court will award damages to compensate the company for loss that has been suffered as a result of the director's breach of duty¹⁰.
- (iii) An officer may be jointly and severally liable only if it is established that he "knowingly engaged in fraud or dishonesty."¹¹ In cases where fraud or dishonesty is not proved against the officer, but he is found liable, the Court determines the proportionate liability of each defendant and each of the other persons alleged to have caused or contributed to the plaintiff's loss¹². The officer shall only be liable for his proportionate share of liability. He shall not be liable to the plaintiff for any judgment entered against other parties or to other parties for judgments entered against them¹³.
- (iv) Subject to Statute of Limitation considerations there is no time limit within which action may be taken against a director.
- (v) Section 98 of the Companies Act permits companies to exonerate directors and to indemnify them either by contract or company bye-laws. However, any contract or bye-law provision that purports to exonerate or indemnify directors' in respect of fraudulent or dishonest conduct shall be void. Bermuda company bye-laws typically contain some form of exoneration and indemnity provision for directors.

¹⁰ In West Mercia Safetytest v Dodd [1988] BCLC 250 the court of appeal upheld a judgment ordering a misfeasant director to repay the value of a transfer by way of fraudulent preference. In this case, the court effectively provided a "clawback" to recover the value of the amount wrongfully transferred.

¹³ Section 98B(4) Companies Act 1981.

- (vi) The court has discretion to relieve the director either wholly or partly from liability on such terms as it thinks fit if:
 - (i) he acted honestly;
 - (i) he acted reasonably; and
 - (iii) he ought fairly to be excused from liability in all the circumstances.

2.7 Standard of fiduciary and common law duties owed by executive and non-executive directors

2.7.1 In applying the standards required by the foregoing fiduciary and common law duties, no distinction is drawn between the position of an executive and a non executive director. However, the reference in the test set out in paragraph 2.13(a)(i) to "a reasonably prudent person in similar circumstances" does allow the Court to take into account such matters as, for example, the fact that a non-executive director's functions are discharged on a part-time basis.¹⁴

2.7.2 In the absence of an employment contract the non-executive director will clearly not owe any contractual duties of care to the company. It is accepted that the non-executive director may rely on his co-directors to carry out various tasks and functions. This does not, however, abrogate his responsibility to inform himself about the company's affairs and to join with his co-directors in supervising and controlling them. The non-executive may rely on a co-director to the extent that any matter lies within the co-director's sphere of responsibility given the way the business of the company is organised and there exist no reasons for supposing that this reliance is misplaced.

2.7.3 Section 97 (5A) of the Companies Act provides that an officer shall not be liable for a breach of duty of skill and care under section 97 (1) (a) of the Companies act if he relies in good faith upon:

- (a) financial statements of the company represented to him by another officer of the company; or
- (b) a report of an attorney, accountant, engineer, appraiser or other person whose profession lends credibility to a statement made by him.

2.8 Incurring further credit

2.8.1 The incurring of further credit may be the factual matrix for one of the grounds of liability discussed above, for example (and most probably) fraudulent trading. For further discussion please see answer to question 11 below.

¹⁴ Focus Insurance Company Limited v Hardy et al Focus Insurance Company Limited v Hardy and Others 1992 Civil Appeal No. 15 where the Bermuda Court of Appeal applied the test of directors' duties of skill and care established in the English case Re City Equitable Fire Insurance Company Limited [1925] 1 Ch 407 inconsidering the standard of care imposed by section 97 (1) (a) of the Companies Act 1981.

QUESTION 3

3. Other persons involved with the company's affairs who may become liable in respect of their actions during the "twilight" period

- (a) In addition to the formally appointed directors of the company, can others be held liable in respect of the company's activities during the "twilight" period if the company were to become subject to a formal insolvency procedure?
- (b) In respect of which acts may other persons be held liable and to what extent does the liability of third parties differ from that for directors identified in question 2 above?
- (c) Will liability be limited to that resulting from involvement with a particular transaction or more generally in relation to the overall loss suffered by creditors?

3.1 De facto directors

At both common law and under statute, Bermuda law has widened the scope of those who may be regarded as directors or treated in the same way as directors. In particular, the common law has developed the concept of "de facto" directors - directors who, notwithstanding that they may not have technically been properly appointed as directors as a matter of company law are, as a result of their actions and the functions they carry out, treated as directors.

- 3.2 A de facto director is one who acts as a director and is treated as such by the rest of the board even though he may never have been formally appointed a director or there is a defect in the technicalities of his appointment (for example he was appointed at a meeting at which a quorum was not present). "Director" is defined in section 5.2(1) of the Companies Act 1981 to include any person occupying the position of director, by whatever name called. Thus, if someone were to be called an "observer" on the board but in fact took director-type decisions, then the court may be prepared to conclude that that person is a de facto director.

- 3.2.1 De facto directors owe the same duties to the company as directors who have been formally appointed. However, they may be further liable if they dispose of company property because they are wrongdoers. Unless the shareholders in general meeting resolve to ratify the disposals, they are liable to compensate the company for the value of the assets wrongfully disposed of. This right of action vests in the company.

- 3.2.2 De facto directors are able to bind the company in making contracts with third parties acting in good faith. They are not personally liable under those contracts under principles of agency law, but may be liable in damages for breach of an implied warranty of authority if they can be deemed to have warranted that they had authority to act on behalf of the company when no such authority existed.

3.2.3 Liability of auditor or officer¹⁵

- (i) Where an auditor or an officer is found liable to any person for damages arising out of the performance of any function as such auditor or officer as contemplated by this Act, then the following provisions of this section shall apply.
- (ii) An auditor or officer may be liable jointly and severally only if it is proved that he knowingly engaged in fraud or dishonesty.
- (iii) In any case other than that contemplated by subsection (ii) hereof, the liability of the auditor or officer, as the case may be, shall be determined as follows—
 - (a) the Court shall determine the percentage of responsibility of the plaintiff, of each of the defendants, and of each of the other persons alleged by the parties to have caused or contributed to the loss of the plaintiff. In considering the percentages of responsibility, the Court shall consider both the nature of the conduct of each person and the nature and extent of the causal relationship between the conduct and the loss claimed by the plaintiff;
 - (b) the liability of the auditor or officer, as the case may be, shall be equal to the total loss suffered by the plaintiff multiplied by the auditor's or officer's, as the case may be, percentage of responsibility as determined under paragraph (a) hereof.

3.3 Other third parties who may be held liable

- 3.3.1 Liquidators may be found liable for misfeasance or breach of duty owed to the company¹⁶.
- 3.3.2 Third parties who receive property as a result of a preference or transaction at an undervalue will be liable to either return such property or provide such compensation as the court may order. In addition, where a company is being wound up by the court, any disposal of the company's property made without the court's approval after the winding up order has been made will be void.
- 3.3.3 It is also possible for any third party who has dishonestly assisted in a breach of duty by a director or other officer of a company or knowingly received property arising from such breach to be liable in respect of any loss arising¹⁷. The legal rules relating to knowing assistance and/or receipt of property are applicable in any circumstance and not only in respect of actions taken during the twilight period. The power of the Bermuda court to apply these rules arises under its general equitable jurisdiction.

4. Counterparties dealing with the company during the twilight period

- (a) From the point of view of a counterparty dealing with the company during the twilight period, what are the potential heads of challenge which may lead to transactions with the company being set aside?
- (b) What defences, if any, to the areas of vulnerability identified above will be available to a counter-party seeking to protect a transaction from being attacked?

which is in financial difficulty and the inequality of bargaining power that may have arisen.

4.1 Summary of heads of challenge

4.1.1 The potential heads of challenge which may lead to transactions being set aside relate to transactions:

- (a) which are at an undervalue;
- (b) which are preferences;
- (c) comprising floating charges given for past value;
- (d) in breach of the directors' fiduciary duties;

or which involve the following elements:

- (e) onerous property;
- (f) dispositions of the company's property made after the commencement of winding-up;

We look briefly at each head in turn.

4.2 Transactions at an undervalue¹⁸

Within certain limits, a disposition of property

- (a) made with the dominant intention of putting property beyond the reach of a person (or class of persons) who has a claim or may at some time have a claim against the transferor; and ¹⁸ Section 237 Companies Act 1981.

- (b) without adequate consideration is voidable at the instance of certain eligible creditors. This rule applies within or outside liquidation (and in fact a liquidator appears not to have standing in relation to this particular jurisdiction). Insolvency is not a prerequisite. A creditor will be an eligible creditor if it falls into one of the following categories: (a) person to whom on, or within two years after, the date of the transfer the transferor owed an obligation which obligation remains unsatisfied on the date of the action or proceeding; and (b) a person to whom, on the date the contingency has fallen in, with the liability remaining unsatisfied; or (c) a person to whom the transferor owed an obligation in consequence of a claim that he made against the transferor, where the cause of action giving rise to the claim occurred prior to, or within two years of, the transfer. See part IV A of the Conveyancing Act, 1983.

4.3 Preferences¹⁹

- 4.3.1 By way of overview, a preference is something which a company does, at a time when it is insolvent and it later goes into liquidation, to put a creditor in a better position than he would have been if the company had instead just gone into liquidation. The attack is made by a liquidator and, the court has a range of options to restore the position.

What is a preference?

- 4.3.2 Section 237(1) of the Act:

"Any conveyance, mortgage, delivery of goods, payment, execution or other act relating to property made or done by or against a company within six months before the commencement of its winding-up which, had it been made or done by or against an individual within the six months before the presentation of a bankruptcy petition on which he is adjudged bankrupt, would be deemed in his bankruptcy a fraudulent preference, shall in the event of the company being wound up be deemed a fraudulent preference of its creditors and be invalid accordingly.

The four conditions under this section are as follows:

- (1) The company must have been unable to pay its debts as they became due at the time that the transfer is made.
- (2) The transaction must have been in favour of a creditor or some person on trust for a creditor.
- (3) There must have been an intention to prefer a creditor, or a surety or guarantor for the debt due to creditor, a preference over its other creditors.
- (4) The disposition complained of must be made within six months of the commencement of the winding up.

Although the term fraudulent is used in the section, fraud in the strict common law sense need not be proved, although it may be present.

The onus will remain on those claiming to avoid the transaction to satisfy the court that the real intention was to prefer. In terms of proof it is enough that the liquidator proves facts which show that the intent to prefer is the most probable of the possible explanations.

Defences

- 4.3.3 The court shall not make an order under this provision in respect of a preference given to any person unless the company which gave the preference was influenced in deciding to give it by a desire to have the effect of giving a preference to that person. This is a question of fact - board minutes prepared when the relevant transaction was taken will be a starting point in this respect.

4.4 Avoidance of floating charges for past value²⁰

- 4.4.1 This provision, which is in addition to the law of preferences (above), is specifically aimed at preventing creditors obtaining floating charge security for past debts in certain circumstances. It is not designed to impugn security given for new credit

Conditions for setting aside

- 4.4.2 A floating charge is void under this provision if the following conditions are satisfied:
- (1) the company is in liquidation ; and
 - (2) the floating charge was created within 12 months preceding the commencement of the liquidation.
 - (3) the charge was given otherwise than for cash (see below); and
 - (4) the company was then unable to pay its debts or became unable to do so in consequence of the charge.
- 4.4.3 The cash must be for the charge and it must go to the company itself or in the reduction of the company's indebtedness.

Defences

- 4.4.4 There are no specific statutory defences available but, as discussed above, the charge will not be invalid to the extent that cash value is provided.

4.5 Disclaimer of onerous property²¹

- 4.5.1 When the company is being wound up, the liquidator may, with leave of the Court disclaim any onerous property and may do so notwithstanding that he has taken possession of it, endeavoured to sell it, or otherwise exercised rights of ownership in respect of it.

- 4.5.2 Onerous property is not a defined term but generally would include (a) any unprofitable contract; and (b) any other property of the company which is unsaleable or not readily saleable or is such that it may give rise to a liability to pay money or perform any other onerous act.
- 4.5.3 Only an executory contract (where neither party has wholly performed its obligations) can be disclaimed but there can be no disclaimer of an executed contract (one which has been wholly performed by one party but not the other).
- 4.5.4 The disclaimer does not affect rights and liabilities already accrued. It determines, as from its date, the future rights interests and liabilities of the company in or in respect of the property disclaimed. The disclaimer does not (except so far as necessary for the purpose of releasing the company from any liability) affect the rights or liabilities of any other person. Any such person sustaining loss or damage as a consequence is deemed to be a creditor of the company to the extent of such loss or damage and may prove as such.
- 4.6 Dispositions of the company's property made after the commencement of winding-up²²
- 4.6.1 In a winding up by the court, any dispositions of the company's property, and any transfer of shares, or alteration in the status of the company's members, made after the commencement of the winding up is void.
- 4.6.2 Commencement of the winding up backdates to the date of presentation of the petition for compulsory winding-up if an order is ultimately made. The voidness applies unless the court otherwise orders - so a company or a counterparty may seek a court validation order in respect of transactions in this period, when perhaps it is unclear whether the company will be able to pay off the petitioning creditor
- 4.7 Registration of charges
- 4.7.1 Bermuda law operates a system of registration of security created over certain property by Bermuda companies Failure to register a charge does not render it ineffective against a Liquidator. Non-Registration of a charge will affect the priority of the charge but will not affect the validity of the change against the company or a liquidator.

QUESTION 5

5. Enforcement

By whom may action be brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3 above)?

5.1 Introduction

In the event of a company going into liquidation, the authority and powers of the directors are generally superseded following such an appointment and taken over by the liquidator. The Liquidator is required to review the action taken by the directors and others during the twilight period and where relevant bring proceedings to obtain compensation for the benefit of creditors in respect of any loss caused to the company. Consequently, in most cases it is the Liquidator only who is empowered to bring actions against directors and others where there has been a breach of either the legal or fiduciary duties owed to the company. There are a few exceptions to this rule in respect of certain transactions/offences for which action may be brought by creditors or others directly. These are detailed in the table on 5.3.2.

- 5.1.2 However, where criminal proceedings are brought against directors or others in respect of some form of criminal action, such proceedings must be brought by the Director of Public Prosecutions ("DPP") on behalf of the relevant government department or authority.

5.2 Criminal proceedings

- 5.2.1 The following acts are criminal offences in respect of which the DPP may bring an action against the directors and others involved. The office holder (such as a liquidator) of a company is under a duty to bring any such offences to the attention of the DPP. Those who may be liable in respect of the following offences in addition to the directors are listed in question 3 above.

Offences

- (a) Fraud in anticipation of winding-up - section 245 of Companies Act
- (b) Misconduct in course of winding-up - section 243
- (c) Falsification of company's books - section 244
- (d) Fraudulent trading - section 246 of Companies Act

5.3 Civil proceedings

- 5.3.1 In relation to civil proceedings, the ability to bring actions against directors and others is primarily held by the liquidator. However, in respect of certain actions which have caused loss to the company and its creditors, the law allows a wider range of persons to bring action to recover funds for the benefit of the company's creditors. Where an action for a contribution to the company's assets is successful, even if the person bringing the action is not the office-holder, any recoveries made will be for the benefit of all creditors of the company and will be distributed amongst the creditors in accordance with the normal rules relating to priority.
- 5.3.2 The table below sets out those people who may bring an action against the directors and others in connection with certain transactions which the company has entered into.

Activity/transaction	Person able to bring proceedings
Misfeasance	Liquidator, Official Receiver, a creditor or, with leave of the court, a contributory
Fraudulent trading	Liquidator, Official receiver, a creditor or a contributory.
Transaction at undervalue	An Eligible Creditor. There is doubt whether a Liquidator has standing.
Fraudulent Preference	Liquidator

QUESTION 6

6. Remedies: orders available to the domestic court

In respect of the offences identified in questions 2, 3 and 4 above, what remedies are available in the domestic court?

Offence	Remedy Available
Fraudulent Trading	The penalty is up to two years imprisonment and/or a fine of two thousand five hundred dollars or both.
Fraudulent Trading	The director may be ordered to make such contribution to the company's assets as the court thinks fit. In exercising its discretion under this section the Court may include a punitive element as well as a compensatory element.
Fraud in anticipation of a winding up	If prosecuted on indictment the penalty is up to two years' imprisonment and, on summary conviction, a term of imprisonment of up to twelve months.
Falsification of Company Books	If tried by a jury the penalty is up to five years' imprisonment.
Misfeasance	This section provides a mechanism for summary trial and does not create any new category of liability. The Court may order the director to repay, restore or account for the money or the property or any part of it, with interest at such rate as the Court sees fit or to contribute such sum to the company's assets by way of compensation in respect of the misfeasance or breach of fiduciary or other duty as the Court sees fit.
Fiduciary Duties	The director may be ordered to compensate for any loss or damage caused by breach of his fiduciary duty, to restore to the company any property appropriated or acquired in breach of his fiduciary duty and to account to the company for any benefit obtained in breach of fiduciary duty.
Duties of skill and care	The director may be ordered to compensate the company for all loss and damage caused by breach of his fiduciary duty.
Transactions at an undervalue and preferences	The court may make such order as it thinks fit in order to restore the position to that which would have existed if the company had not entered into the impugned transaction. It may, for example, order: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> (a) that any property transferred as part of the impugned transaction be re-vested in the company; (b) that any property which represents the application of either the proceeds of sale of the property or money wrongfully transferred be vested in the company; (c) the release or discharge of any security given by the company; (d) require any person to pay such sums as represent the value of any benefits received by him from the company in breach of sections 237 of the Companies Act 1981 and Section 36A of the Conveyancing Act 1993;

	(e) provide for any surety or guarantor whose obligations to any person were released or discharged (in whole or in part) under the transaction, or by giving of the preference, to be under such new or revived obligations to that person as the court thinks appropriate; An order under these provisions cannot prejudice any interest acquired from a person other than the company which was acquired in good faith and for value. It cannot prejudice any interest deriving from such an interest. It must not require a person who received a benefit from the impugned transaction in good faith and for fair value to make payment except where that person was a party to the transaction with the company or was a creditor of the company at the time of the transaction.
Transactions defrauding creditors	The court may: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> (a) require that any property transferred as part of the transaction be vested in any person, either absolutely or for the benefit of all the persons on whose behalf the application for the order is treated as made; (b) require any property to be vested in any person's hands which represents either the proceeds of sale of property or of money so transferred; (c) release or discharge (in whole or part) any security given by the debtor; (d) require any person to pay to any other person in respect of benefits received from the debtor such sums as the court may direct; (e) provide for any surety or guarantor whose obligations to any person were released or discharged (in whole or part) under the transaction to be under such new or revived obligations as the court thinks appropriate; (f) provide for security to be provided for the discharge of any obligation imposed by or arising under the order for such an obligation to be charged on any property and for such security or charge to have the same priority as a security or charge released or discharged (in whole or in part) under the transaction. Any order made must not prejudice any interest in property acquired from a person other than the debtor which was acquired in good faith for value and without notice of the relevant circumstances. The court shall not require any person who derived a benefit from the impugned transaction in good faith without notice of the relevant circumstances, to pay any sum unless he was a party to the transaction.

Avoidance of a floating charge	The Court can declare that the floating charge is invalid in whole or in part.

QUESTION 7

7. Duty to co-operate

- (a) To what extent are directors (and others identified in question 3 above) obliged to co-operate with an investigation into the company's affairs following its insolvency?
- (b) Are any human rights laws applicable in the domestic jurisdiction in relation to any such obligations?

The following summarises the main statutory provisions which oblige directors and others to co-operate with an investigation into a company's affairs following its insolvency:

7.1 Statement of Affairs

- 7.1.1 Section 168(1) of the Companies Act 1981 requires that a detailed statement of the company's affairs in a prescribed form must be provided by one or more of the directors and its secretary. The section applies whenever a winding-up order has been made in respect of a company or a provisional liquidator has been appointed and, in either case, within 30 days of that event. The statement must be verified by affidavit and must include such things as particulars of the company's assets, liabilities, and details concerning the company's creditors.
- 7.1.2 The Official Receiver may stipulate that persons other than the directors (a promoter, an employee or an officer) must provide the statement. The court has the power to waive or vary the requirement. Rules 34 and following of the Companies (Winding-up) Rules 1982 stipulate additional provisions in relation to the statement of affairs including a provision enabling the Official Receiver to extend the time within which the statement is to be submitted.
- 7.1.3 A person who is required to but fails to comply with the requirement to provide a statement of affairs is liable to a default fine.

7.2 Delivery of the company's property

- 7.2.1 Section 186 of the Companies Act 1981 applies whenever a winding-up order has been made in respect of a company.

In such a case, where a person has any property, money, or books and papers to which the company is prima facie entitled, the court may require that person forthwith (or within such period as the court may direct) to pay, deliver, convey, surrender or transfer the property, books, papers or records to the liquidator. The section applies only to any contributory (generally a shareholder), trustee, receiver, banker, agent, or officer of the company.

- 7.2.2 Rule 54 of the Companies (winding-up) Rules 1982 provides that, unless the court orders otherwise, the powers of the court referred to above (under section 186) are to be exercised by the liquidator on behalf of and subject to the control of the court.

7.3 Power to summon persons

- 7.3.1 Section 195 of the Companies Act 1981 applies whenever a provisional liquidator has been appointed or a winding-up order has been made. In such a case, the court may summon to appear before it:

- (a) any officer of the company;
- (b) any person known or suspected to have in his possession any property of the company or supposed to be indebted to the company; or
- (c) any person whom the court deems capable of giving information concerning the promotion, formation, trade, dealings, affairs or property of the company.

- 7.3.2 Such a person may be required (a) to submit to an examination on oath concerning the matter referred to at 7.3.1(c) above and (b) to produce any books, papers or other records in his custody or power relating to the company.

- 7.3.3 If a person refuses to appear before the court when summoned the court may cause the person to be apprehended and brought before the court.

7.4 Public examination of officers

- 7.4.1 By virtue of section 196 of the Companies Act 1981,²³ where a winding-up order has been made, the Official Receiver may make a report stating his opinion that a stipulated person -

- (a) has been guilty of fraud or dishonesty;
- (b) is in default of any provision of law pertaining to companies; or
- (c) has shown himself to have acted in an improper, reckless or incompetent manner in relation to the company's affairs;

²³ See also section 244 of the Companies Act 1981 which creates the offence of, among other things, falsifying documents for the purpose of misleading any person.

- 7.4.2 The section applies to (a) a person who has taken part in the promotion, or formation of the company (b) an officer of the company.
- 7.4.3 In such a case, the court may direct that the person attend before the court to be publicly examined as to his conduct in relation to the company. The Official Receiver must take part in the examination and (if the Official Receiver is not the liquidator) the liquidator may also take part in the examination.
- 7.4.4 Under section 197 of the Companies Act 1981, a contributory suspected of (among other things) intending to abscond or to conceal property or avoiding examination may be arrested and his books and papers and other personal property seized.

7.5 Creditors' voluntary cases

- 7.5.1 Section 231 of the Companies Act 1981 enables the court to exercise any power which the court may exercise if the company were being wound-up by the court. This means that all of the court's powers referred to above in the event of a winding-up order being made may also be exercised where the company is being wound up under the creditors' voluntary procedure.

7.6 Enforcement – Sanction for failing to discover to the liquidator the company's property and papers when it is being wound up

- 7.6.1 Section 243 of the Companies Act 1981²⁴ stipulates that on any person, being a past or present officer of the company which is being wound up (by order or voluntarily), commits an offence if he (amongst other things):
- (a) fails to discover to the liquidator all the company's property and how any of it may have been disposed of (if other than in the ordinary course of business); or
 - (b) fails to deliver up to the liquidator all property or books and papers belonging to the company which are in his custody or control; or
 - (c) fails to inform the liquidator of any false debt which he believes has been proved by any person in the winding up; or
 - (d) after the commencement of the winding-up prevents production of books and papers relating to the company's property or affairs.

7.7 Human rights

- 7.7.1 No human rights laws are applicable in relation to any of the obligations referred to above. The constitution of Bermuda²⁵ does protect certain civil rights but none appears to have any bearing on the discussion in this part.

²⁴ See also section 244 of the Companies Act 1981 which creates the offence of, among other things, falsifying documents for the purpose of misleading any person.

QUESTION 8

8. Appeals and limitation periods

- (a) What limitation period, if any, will apply to actions brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3) in connection with the offences identified in question 2?
- (b) Please indicate whether an appeal is available from the decision of the lower courts.

8.1 Limitation periods

Limitation period for criminal proceedings

- 8.1.1 No limitation period applies to the criminal offences created by virtue of those provisions of the Companies Act 1981 referred to in question 2 which are indictable offences. In the case of those identified in the Companies Act 1981 as summary offences, the limitation period is 3 years from the time when the offence is committed.²⁶

Limitation period for cause of action for sum recoverable by statute

- 8.1.2 The Companies Act 1981 does not stipulate limitations periods in connection with the statutory doctrines referred to in question 2. Therefore the applicable limitations period in respect of any provision enabling the recovery of a sum of money is applicable. That limitation period is 20 years from the date the cause of action accrued.²⁷

Limitation period for civil actions in misfeasance, tort or contract

- 8.1.3 In relation to breaches of the director's fiduciary duties or for any common law duties in tort, or breach of contract, the limitation period is generally 6 years from the date on which the cause of action accrued²⁸. Where the cause of action is based on fraud or for the relief of any mistake, or any relevant act has been deliberately concealed by the defendant, the limitations period does not begin to run until the plaintiff discovers the fraud, mistake or concealment²⁹.

8.2 Appeals

- 8.2.1 Except in relation to interlocutory matters or orders for costs, an appeal may be made from any decision of the Supreme Court of Bermuda, being the lower court in relation to proceedings of the type described in question 2³⁰.

²⁶ Section 278 of the Companies Act 1981.

³⁰ Section 12 of the Court of Appeal Act 1964.

- 8.2.2 Appeals from decisions of the Court of Appeal to the UK Privy Council, being the highest court of appeal for Bermuda, are permitted as a matter of right from final decisions of the Court of Appeal where the sum at stake is in excess of $12,000 or in any case (final or interlocutory) where the Court of Appeal considers that the appeal should be heard by reason of its “great general of public importance or otherwise.”³¹

QUESTION 9

9. Foreign corporations

Do the legal provisions and procedures outlined above apply to both domestic and foreign corporations?

9.1 Introduction

- 9.1.1 Most of the doctrines outlined above at question 2 may be invoked by a liquidator of a company subject to winding-up proceedings. Therefore the application of these doctrines to a foreign company will generally depend upon the extent to which a foreign company may be wound up under the law of Bermuda. That topic is addressed below at 9.2.

9.2 Jurisdiction of Bermuda courts

- 9.2.1 The provisions of the Companies Act 1981 pertaining to insolvent liquidation generally apply to the following:
- (a) companies incorporated in Bermuda under the Companies Act 1981 and its predecessor legislation;
 - (b) overseas companies which are authorised to carry on business in Bermuda.³²
- 9.2.2 There is one judicial precedent supporting the proposition that the provisions pertaining to insolvent liquidation may also apply to an overseas company which carries on business in Bermuda illegally (i.e. without a permit).³³

³² Section 4(1) and section 4((1A) of the Companies Act 1981.

³³ Informission Group Inc. v. Convertix Corporation, Supreme Court of Bermuda, Civil Jurisdiction 1999 No 267, December 6, 2000 (Wade J.). The application was made ex parte and may or not be followed in subsequent cases.

QUESTION 10

10. Insurance

Is directors' and officers' insurance available in your jurisdiction? If so, to what extent will the availability of such insurance provide effective protection to directors against personal liability which may arise in connection with the issues raised in questions 1-9 above?

- 10.1 It is permissible for a director to take out insurance pursuant to Section 98A and the company may lawfully pay the premiums.

Section 98A – Insurance of officers

A company may purchase and maintain insurance for the benefit of any officer of the company against any liability incurred by him under section 97(1)(b) in his capacity as an officer of the company or indemnifying such an officer in respect of any loss arising or liability attaching to him by virtue of any rule of law in respect of any negligence, default, breach of duty or breach of trust of which the officer may be guilty in relation to the company or any subsidiary thereof and nothing in this Act shall make void or voidable any such policy.

- 10.2 The insurance policy cannot enable the director to insure against his own wilful or fraudulent wrongdoing as it will be struck down on grounds of public policy in this regard.

QUESTION 11

- 11. How safe is it for directors and others to incur further credit during the twilight period?

11.1 Overview

- 11.1.1 The details of directors' duties are considered above at question 2. Directors, when their company is insolvent or is likely to become insolvent, must put the interests of the creditors of their company before those of the shareholders.
- 11.1.2 Bermuda law therefore seeks balance the need to prevent directors continuing to operate companies when it is clear that creditors will not get paid and, on the other hand, not putting undue pressure on directors to cease trading when the undertaking is still feasible and merely going through a difficult time.

11.1.3 Directors should get independent professional help on the legal and accounting sides to bolster any decision they make to continue in business. They should monitor closely the financial position of the company. Directors can prepare a reasoned plan of recovery with their accountants and seek the support of their main creditors (often banks and major suppliers). Lawyers will usually assist in ensuring that board meetings are held regularly to consider responsibly and objectively the company's position and its prospects and document these in the minutes of the meetings to ensure that a "reasonable" view is taken of the prospects of recovery.

11.2 Can an unconnected third party rely on the validity of transactions entered into by the company (in particular guarantees and securities) during the twilight period?

11.2.1 The risk of dealing with a company which is or may become insolvent is that most legal systems, and Bermuda law is no exception, have a vulnerability period reaching back from the moment the formal insolvency procedure commences. In Bermuda, the main periods are six months for preferences and two years for transactions at undervalue. Other heads of attack have no such time limit, for example, fraudulent trading - or cases where directors have been acting in breach of duty and this is something of which a counterparty dealing with the company is fully aware. We look at the two main statutory clawback provisions.

11.3 Preferences

11.3.1 The law here is concerned with the clawback of payments and the overturning of security.

11.3.2 From a prospective of a creditor doing business with a company the position is likely to be that they should enter into a transaction to accept payment or the grant of security and wait and see what happens. There have been no successful claims of fraudulent preference in Bermuda since its introduction. A liquidator will not show the intention of the Company and except in exceptional circumstances the transactions are in the usual course of business and necessary to allow the company to continue its business.

11.4 Transactions at an undervalue

It is only eligible creditors who can attack such a transaction. Insolvency of the Company entering into the transaction is not a prerequisite to an offence being committed. A Creditor could attempt to make inquiries into the circumstances of the transferor however these are strictly protections to a transferee. The protections include if a transaction is reversed that costs of the transferee can be reserved in full and the transferee has a security interest in the asset to the extent of the claim. The burden is on the eligible creditor to show that the transferee did not act in good faith.

APPENDIX

Summary of primary Bermuda insolvency procedures

LIQUIDATION PROCEDURES

Three separate liquidation procedures are available. These are:

- (A) Voluntary winding-up;
- (B) Winding-up under the supervision of the court (also known as compulsory winding-up);
- (C) The implementation of a scheme of arrangement under section 99 of the Companies Act, 1981.

As well as being available as a separate procedure, the scheme of arrangement may also be used in combination with one of the two winding-up procedures.

Each of these procedures is described below.

(A) VOLUNTARY WINDING-UP

A members voluntary winding up is the usual procedure used to liquidate a solvent company. It should be distinguished from a creditors voluntary winding up which is appropriate only when a company is insolvent. The phrase voluntary winding up in this discussion paper refers to a members voluntary liquidation.

A majority of the directors of the company must swear declarations of solvency. These declarations state that the directors have made full inquiry into the affairs of the company and believe that the company will be able to pay its debts in full within a period of twelve months from the date of the declaration. An up-to-date balance sheet is attached to the declaration which shows all assets and liabilities (actual, future and contingent).

Usually a board meeting is held and the directors review the declarations and resolve to recommend to the shareholders to vote in favour of a voluntary winding up and authorise the secretary to file the declarations of solvency with the Registrar of Companies in Bermuda. The directors call a special general meeting of the shareholders. At that meeting the shareholders pass a resolution in favour of the voluntary winding up and appoint a liquidator.

The liquidator advises the Registrar of Companies of his appointment and places advertisements in the local press inviting creditors to file their claims and notice of the resolution to wind up and the appointment of the liquidator.

Following the appointment of the liquidator the powers of the directors cease, except so far as the shareholder in general meeting of the liquidator sanctions the continuance of those powers.

Similarly, after the shareholders pass the resolution to wind up the business of the company must cease, except as far as may be required for the beneficial winding up of the company.

If at any time the liquidator is of the opinion that the company will not be able to pay its debts within the twelve-month period mentioned in the declarations of solvency he must call a meeting of creditors and advise them of the position.

The liquidator will take steps to collect in all of the assets of the company and after payment of all liabilities will distribute assets to the shareholders. If the bye-laws of a company contain provisions governing the distribution of the surplus assets the liquidator must have regard to these provisions.

After all assets are collected and liabilities settled and surplus assets distributed that liquidator will call a final general meeting of the shareholders. The shareholders will approve the statement of account of the liquidator and pass a resolution to dissolve the company.

There is no automatic stay of proceedings in a voluntary winding up. The liquidator is able to apply to the Supreme Court for directions on any matter. The rules governing proofs of debt and the valuation of claims within a liquidation apply in a voluntary winding up.

(B) WINDING-UP BY THE COURT

A winding-up by the court commences following the filing with the court of a petition presented by the company, its directors, one or more creditors or contributories, a combination of these or the Registrar of Companies. The court has jurisdiction to grant a winding-up order on a number of separate grounds including:-

- (a) that the company has resolved that the company shall be wound-up by the court;
- (b) that the company is unable to pay its debts, taking into account contingent and prospective liabilities; and
- (c) that the court is of the opinion that it is just and equitable that the company be wound-up.

Where the winding-up procedure is commenced at the instance of the directors, the simplest procedure is to call a meeting of the shareholders for the purposes of resolving that the company be wound-up by the court. An affidavit may then be filed in support of the petition attaching a copy of the resolution of the shareholders and, where applicable, providing financial information demonstrating that the company is unable to pay its debts (taking into account contingent and prospective liabilities).

Upon the presentation of a winding-up petition, a court may immediately appoint a provisional liquidator who may be the Official Receiver or any other fit person. There are no licensing requirements or prescribed qualifications for liquidators, although the practice is to appoint chartered accountants specialising in insolvency. The powers of a provisional liquidator are determined by reference to the order appointing him.

Upon the granting of a winding-up order, the provisional liquidator must summon separate meetings of the creditors and contributories of the company for the purpose of determining:-

- (a) whether an application should be made for an order appointing a permanent liquidator (or joint liquidators); and
- (b) as a practical matter, the identity of a person or persons they wish to be appointed.

An application may then be made for an order giving effect to the wishes of the creditors and contributories. If the wishes of the creditors appear inconsistent with those of the contributories, the court must resolve the difference (normally in favour of the creditors).

All of the necessary steps in relation to a compulsory liquidation can be accomplished quite quickly, as follows:-

- (a) A resolution of the shareholders can be passed as soon as the meeting may be convened.
- (b) The petition for the winding-up of a company may be prepared and filed within a matter of days after the passing of a resolution of the shareholders.
- (c) An application for an order appointing a provisional liquidator (if necessary) may be made as early as the same day as the filing of the petition.
- (d) An application for a winding-up order would normally take place as early as three or four weeks after the filing of the petition.
- (e) The meetings of the creditors and contributories are normally held within four to six weeks from the granting of the winding-up order.
- (f) An order appointing a permanent liquidator (or joint liquidators) would normally be made within about 2 weeks from the holding of the meetings.

It is noteworthy that, once the winding-up order has been made or a provisional liquidator has been appointed, an automatic statutory stay of proceedings comes into force with the result that no proceedings may be commenced or continued against the company except with the leave of the court.

(C) SCHEME OF ARRANGEMENT

A scheme of arrangement ("a scheme") is a statutory arrangement (effectively a contract) between a company and its creditors (or any class of them). The scheme becomes legally binding on all creditors to whom it is intended to apply, if:-

- (a) a majority in number representing three-fourths in value of all those in the affected class vote in favour of the scheme at a meeting of creditors convened by the court; and
- (b) the court then approves the scheme.

As mentioned earlier, a scheme may be implemented either within the liquidation context or as a alternative to liquidation.

This part will summarise the procedure for implementing a scheme and review some of the advantages of implementing a scheme in the insurance context.

(a) Procedure

Where a scheme of arrangement is proposed, the company, or its liquidator, must apply to the court for an order convening a meeting of the creditors (or class of creditors) to be bound by the scheme. The first step, therefore, is to make application for an order convening a meeting of creditors. The meeting is then convened in the usual way. In order for the scheme to become effective and binding, a resolution to approve it must be passed by a majority in number representing three-fourths in value of the creditors (or class of creditors) present and voting either in person or by proxy at the meeting. If the statutory majority is obtained, the scheme then has to be sanctioned by the court. Once an order approving the scheme has been obtained, a copy of the order must be submitted to the Registrar of Companies for registration, whereupon the scheme becomes effective.

(b) Advantages of a Scheme

Without a scheme, the affairs of an insurance company in liquidation in Bermuda must be administered in accordance with the statutory regime governing company liquidation, and this regime is not well-suited to insurance. The statutory framework entails the appointment of a liquidator who must conduct “just estimates” of contingent and unliquidated claims, and must permit creditors to file new claims (and revise existing claims) at any time prior to the final distribution of any significant dividends until all claims are fully ascertained (that is, until all reserves for incurred but not reported claims evolve into liquidated claims). If he is prepared to pay dividends prior to the development of pro-rata basis to creditors based on his “just estimates” of those claims.

The primary advantage of a scheme is that it can in effect establish a new regime, overriding many of the practical and legal restrictions which otherwise apply in an insurance liquidation. Under a scheme, the administrator is not dealing with constantly “moving targets” and has assurances under the scheme that, provided he acts responsibly and in accordance with the scheme, he will not be as exposed to criticism as a liquidator would be if, for example, he underestimates the reserves.

A scheme may be used to enable the administrator to pay distributions on claims as and when they develop and to hold back reserves to deal with contingent and unliquidated claims as those develop. This type of scheme is sometimes referred to as a “reserving scheme”, which is now the most common type used in the context of insurance liquidation. An alternative form is a “cut-off” or “valuation” scheme which may provide for a binding final claims filing deadline enabling a final evaluation of claims, a distribution of assets based on those estimates and provisions preserving the rights of the company against reinsurers. This type has the advantage of dramatically shortening the liquidation.

BRAZIL

1. The start and duration of the “twilight” period

What is the length of the period ending with formal insolvency proceedings during which transactions entered into by a company are vulnerable to attack or are liable to give rise to personal liability on the part of directors and/or others involved in the management of the company?

- 1.1 Under Brazilian law, the insolvency of merchants and business companies is regulated by Law 11,101/2005, which provides for bankruptcy and judicial and extra-judicial restructuring proceedings.

Where a court declares a merchant debtor to be bankrupt, it shall establish the date of the bankruptcy, upon which the insolvency period will be deemed to have commenced.

- 1.2 This date will be retroactive from the date of the protest of an executory document, or the filing of a judicial restructuring request or a bankruptcy request. This legal bankruptcy time frame (called the “suspect period”) is established by the court, but it may not extend more than 90 (ninety) days before the company becomes insolvent as described above. Some acts are deemed to be ineffective if practiced within this time frame, even when performed in good faith.

In addition, any gratuitous acts (such as donations (or debt pardons)) or renunciations of inheritance performed two years before the declaration of bankruptcy, are held to be ineffective, regardless of proof that they were performed with the intention of defrauding creditors.

Any fraudulent transactions entered into by and between the debtor and third parties with the intention to harm the rights of creditors or cause damage to the estate are voidable. Brazilian law does not establish a retroactive time frame for the avoidance of these acts, although the revocatory action (actio pauliana) must be filed within three years from the date on which the debtor was declared bankrupt.

- 1.3 There is no special liability system for the management of the company during the suspect, or twilight, period.
- 1.4 It must be stressed that consumers and non-business entities are subject to the civil insolvency proceeding regulated by the Code of Civil Procedure (Law 5,869/1973). There are no specific avoidability rules in civil insolvency proceedings, nor is there a twilight period. In this context, the general rules governing fraud against creditors are applicable.

QUESTION 2

2. Actions potentially giving rise to liability for directors

- (a) In respect of which acts during the “twilight” period may a director be held personally liable which may otherwise have adverse consequences for him?
- (b) In relation to each act identified in (a) above:
 - i. is any resulting liability against a director civil, criminal or both?
 - ii. can a director be made personally liable in respect of the whole loss caused to the company or the deficit to creditors?
 - iii. will liability attach to individual directors in proportion to their specific involvement?;
 - iv. is there a specified period before commencement of a subsequent insolvency procedure within which the relevant act must have been undertaken in order for liability to attach to a director?; and
 - v. what differences, if any, will be available in relation to each offense?

2.1 There is no special liability system involving the bankruptcy twilight period. The personal liability of an officer or director of a bankrupt company will be determined by way of an action brought before the court administering the company's bankruptcy.

2.2 Under Brazilian law, officers and directors are not personally liable for obligations incurred in the corporation's name by virtue of administrative acts performed in the normal course of business. There are, however, exceptions to this general rule¹. Corporate officers and directors are personally liable when:

- (a) within the scope of their powers, they act recklessly, negligently, incompetently or fraudulently; or
- (b) they violate the law or act in an ultra vires (beyond the scope of their powers) manner, whether or not they do so in a negligent or fraudulent manner.

Under (a), if officers or directors are acting within the scope of their powers, they can only be held liable if it is proven that they have acted recklessly, negligently, incompetently or fraudulently. Under (b), however, officers and directors will be held strictly liable for ultra vires acts.

Should an entity exist solely for the purpose of shielding principals/shareholders from liability, the doctrine of “piercing the corporate veil” may be applicable. This concept is also known as “disregarding of the legal entity”. Just as in other countries, the legal doctrine of piercing the corporate veil in Brazil disregards the corporate fiction in order to avoid an injury to the public. Pursuant to this principle, the principals/shareholders would be liable as if there was no corporate entity and these principals/shareholders would be considered personally liable for the debts which are owed by the corporate entity. The potential liability would be direct and applicable jointly, severally and without limit.

In Brazil, piercing of the corporate veil has occurred for the irregular dissolutions of entities; improper intermingling of corporate assets involving a sole shareholder or administrator; undertaking activities which are incongruent with the company's corporate purposes; and the absolute power of one partner who is involved in fraudulent acts.

Additional rules impose joint, several and personal liability on corporate directors for illegal acts as opposed to liability arising from a failure to carry out duties and obligations in connection with the regular functioning of the company.²

A director is not responsible for the illegal acts of other directors, unless he conspires with them or is deemed negligent in regard to the discovery of their illegal acts, or, having knowledge of the wrongdoing, fails to attempt to stop such acts. On the other hand, directors are jointly and severally liable for damages resulting from a failure to carry out their duties and obligations in connection with the regular functioning of the company, even if each director is not responsible for the performance of all the duties.

The failure to produce and publish annual balance sheets, which in turn may impair the normal functioning of the company, may result in the joint and several liability of the directors. In any event, a director who learns of a failure on the part of a current or former director to perform his corporate duties must communicate this fact to the shareholders at a general meeting in order to exonerate himself from liability for damages caused as a result of the current or former director's failure to act.

With regard to management duties, both the courts and legal scholars have established a general rule: negative facts, resulting from acts of omission or failure to act, even if not the result of joint deliberation, will result in joint and several liability for the administrators. However, the existence of positive facts resulting from the intentional acts of an individual manager will limit such liability to the offending manager. Therefore, either negative or positive facts resulting from joint deliberations can give rise to joint and several liability, except for those individuals who expressly object.

For publicly traded companies, directors will only be liable for damages resulting from a failure to perform their individual duties in accordance with the company by-laws. The Brazilian Securities and Exchange Commission ("Comissão de Valores Mobiliários" – CVM) has the authority to impose administrative penalties by means of administrative hearings. Such penalties include warnings, fines and the suspension or disqualification of directors. The Brazilian Central Bank has similar authority to issue warnings and to impose fines, suspensions and disqualifications with respect to the directors of financial institutions.

Under other circumstances, the corporate veil may be pierced and an affiliate deemed responsible for the debts of the debtor, without suffering all the consequences of bankruptcy. For example, a judge may order a parent company responsible for the payment of damages incurred by its failed subsidiary without the parent company itself declaring bankruptcy.

Upon declaration of bankruptcy, the judicial administrator appointed by the court must present a report on the causes and circumstances that led to the state of bankruptcy, in which he shall indicate the civil and criminal liability of the parties involved. Should there be any indication of criminal liability of any of the parties involved in the proceedings, the Public Attorney's Office shall be notified. The Public Attorney's Office has authority to bring criminal charges against the (bankrupt party's directors and or officers) and to represent the public interest as a whole.

The Bankruptcy Law states that a bankrupt corporation's directors and officers will be identified for criminal purposes. Chief among the criminal acts related to bankruptcies is the practice of fraudulent acts against creditors, with the purpose of obtaining an illegal advantage for himself or for third parties.

QUESTION 3

3. Other persons involved with the company's affairs who may become liable in respect of their actions during the "twilight" period
- (a) In addition to the formally appointed directors of the company, can others be held liable in respect of the company's activities during the "twilight" period if the company were to become subject to a formal insolvency procedure?
 - (b) In respect of which acts may other persons be held liable and to what extent does the liability of third parties differ from that for directors identified in question 2 above?
 - (c) Will liability be limited to that resulting from involvement with a particular transaction or more generally in relation to the overall loss suffered by creditors?

- 3.1 Brazilian insolvency regulations do not provide for the direct civil liability of personnel and fiduciaries, such as lawyers, accountants and other professionals, who acted on behalf of the debtor. The debtor itself is considered liable for any damages caused by these third parties. However, the debtor may file a recovery action against the personnel or fiduciaries that caused the damage. An attorney is personally liable for the acts that, in the exercise of the legal profession, are performed with deceitfulness or fault comprising malpractice, recklessness or negligence.³ The lawyer shall be jointly liable, along with his client, if deceitful acts were performed by the attorney during the proceedings with the aim of causing damage to a third party.

Professionals such as lawyers, accountants and other fiduciaries may not be held liable for failing to attain successful results in their professional activity. However, they are required to employ all the expected efforts and to display the necessary diligence and accuracy in their services.

The courts usually do not hold liable individuals who were not participating in the active management of the corporation at the time of a criminal occurrence. However, new managers who learn of the existence of former or continuing criminal acts, committed or initiated prior to their joining the company, must inform the shareholders accordingly in order to exonerate themselves from liability.

Under the Brazilian Criminal Code, criminal acts of corporate fiduciaries are punishable by imprisonment and/or fines. The punishable acts include:

- (a) making false representations as to the financial status of the company, or to fraudulently hide facts related to that status, in a report, balance sheet, communication to the public or to shareholders;
- (b) promoting the false pricing of shares by means of deception;
- (c) using corporate assets for the personal benefit or for the benefit of third parties without prior shareholder authorization; and
- (d) obtaining the approval of minutes or opinions through collusion with the shareholders.

In addition to the Criminal Code, various other laws specifically address the criminal liability of corporate fiduciaries. Law 1,521/51, concerning crimes against the economy, provides that fiduciaries may be found criminally liable for committing crimes such as the falsification of registrations, reports or other data for the purpose of withholding profits, dividends or bonuses, or in order to misappropriate funds.

The insolvency law provides that any person may be found criminally liable for hiding or diverting assets from the bankrupt estate or making false statements or claims within the proceedings. The law further provides that the judge, the public attorney, the trustee, the expert, the bailiff and the auctioneer may be held criminally liable for directly or indirectly purchasing assets from the estate, or entering into any profit-orientated speculation.

Lender's liabilities are not yet an important factor in Brazil. Initial cases are being argued in courts of competent jurisdiction, but generally speaking financial institutions have not been found liable for the potential damage underlining these claims. Reckless lending, as the basis to indemnify other creditors, has also not yet been recognized by statutory legislation. Case law is still not developed in this area.

QUESTION 4

4. Counterparts dealing with the company during the twilight period

- (a) From the point of view of a counterparty dealing with the company during the twilight period, what are the potential heads of challenge which may lead to transactions with the company being set aside?
- (b) What difference, if any, to the areas of vulnerability identified above will be available to a counterparty seeking to protect a transaction from being attacked?

4.1 The adjudication of a merchant's bankruptcy does not include his guarantors, joint co-debtors or surety guarantors. Therefore, while the bankruptcy causes the acceleration of the maturity of the debts of the bankrupt party, and those of any joint shareholder of the company, it does not automatically entail the bankruptcy of its solvent co-debtors and guarantors. Additionally, the termination of collateral agreements may be prevented in circumstances where the judicial administrator considers the continuation of the agreement necessary and in the interest of the creditors.

4.2 Certain acts, performed by the bankrupt party before the bankruptcy, are deemed ineffective, whether or not the other party involved was aware of the impending bankruptcy and whether or not the transaction was performed with the intent to defraud.⁴ The following acts are considered to be ineffective:

- (a) any payment of debts not yet due within the twilight period;
- (b) any payment made within the twilight period, of debts already due and enforceable, in a way not provided for under the underlying agreement;
- (c) the constitution of an in rem guarantee, including lien, within the twilight period, in the case of a debt contracted previously;
- (d) any act performed free of charge during the two years preceding the decree of bankruptcy;
- (e) waiver of inheritance or legacy during the two years preceding the decree of bankruptcy;

- (f) sale or transfer of an establishment without the express consent of or payment to all creditors existing at the time, when insufficient assets have remained with the debtor to settle his liabilities, unless within thirty days there is no opposition by creditors after being duly notified, either judicially or by an officer of the deeds and documents registry; and
- (g) registration of in rem rights and of property transfer inter vivos, for consideration or free of charge, or a restriction on real property made after the decree of bankruptcy, unless there is a previous restriction.

The ineffectiveness of such acts may be declared by the judge by his own initiative or alleged in defense or claimed under a specific action during the proceedings.

The court may review and declare void, upon request of any creditor, the judicial administrator or the Public Attorney's Office, by means of a revocatory action, any act or contract performed or entered into with intent to defraud or cause damage to the debtor company.

- 4.3 Any acts that are performed in connection with the bankrupt debtor estate with the intent to harm creditors, as long as there is evidence of the involvement of both the debtor and the third party which contracts with it in the attempt to defraud, are subject to revocation.

If a transaction is declared void or ineffective, the parties are returned to the state prior to the contracting. In such a scenario, the assets involved must be restored to the bankrupt estate whenever possible. As an alternative, an indemnity, corresponding to the market value plus damages, must be paid. The third party which acted in good faith will be restituted any assets or values delivered to the debtor and will have a claim for losses and damages against the bankrupt party and its guarantors.

The judicial administrator, the Public Attorney's Office or any of the creditors are entitled to file for the revocation of any act within three years of the court decision which declares the bankruptcy of the debtor.⁵ The revocation action may be filed:

- (a) against all those who took part in the act, or which, as a consequence thereof, were paid, given guarantees, or benefited;
- (b) against acquiring third parties; and
- (c) against the heirs or legatees of the persons mentioned in (a) and (b).

An ordinary suit, especially when contested, can take up to two or three years to obtain a judgment, which may still be subject to appeal. An enforcement action will depend on the facts of the specific case and the speed with which the debtor's assets can be identified for attachment. Any bank account held by the debtor may be seized by the court in an enforcement action.

⁵ Article 132 of Law 11,101/2005.

QUESTION 5

Enforcement

5. By whom may action be brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3 above)?
- 5.1 Subsequent to a finding of liability, the company, any of its shareholders, or an injured third party may bring suit against the responsible director in an attempt to recoup its losses.⁶
- 5.2 The Insolvency Law provides that any creditor, the Public Attorney's Office and the judicial administrator can file suit to void fraudulent transactions. The court may declare the ineffectiveness of any act by its own initiative or upon request of any interested party.⁷

6. Remedies: orders available to the domestic court

In respect of the offenses identified in questions 2, 3, and 4 above, what remedies are available in the domestic court?

- 6.1 Some acts will be considered as ineffective transactions by the court, by its own initiative or upon request of any interested party.⁸ The following provisions are applicable regardless of the contracting parties' knowledge of the debtor's economic condition, or the existence/absence of any intent to defraud creditors:
- (a) payment by the debtor, during the twilight period, of debts not yet due;
 - (b) payment made within the twilight period of debts due and enforceable in any way not provided for under the underlying agreement;
 - (c) constitution of an in rem guarantee, including lien, within the twilight period, in the case of a debt contracted previously. If the assets given in mortgage are the object of subsequent guarantees, the bankrupt estate shall receive the part to which the creditor of the revoked mortgage was entitled;
 - (d) acts performed free of charge during the two years preceding the decree of bankruptcy;

⁶ Article 159 of Law 6,404/1976.

⁸ Article 129 of Law 11,101/2005.

- (e) waiver of inheritance or legacy during the two years preceding the decree of bankruptcy;
- (f) sale or transfer of an establishment without the express consent of, or payment to, all creditors existing at the time, with insufficient assets having remained with the debtor to settle his liabilities, unless within thirty days there is no opposition by creditors after being duly notified, either judicially or by an officer of the deeds and documents registry; and
- (g) registration of in rem rights and of property transfer inter vivos, for consideration or free of charge, or a restriction on real property made after the decree of bankruptcy, unless there is a previous restriction.

The insolvency law further provides that any acts that are performed in connection with the bankrupt debtor's estate with the intent to harm creditors, as long as there is evidence of the involvement of both the debtor and the third party which contracts with it in the attempt to defraud, are subject to revocation.⁹ A revocatory action may be filed:

- (a) against all those who took part in the act, or which, as a consequence thereof, were paid, given guarantees, or benefited;
- (b) against acquiring third parties; and
- (c) against the heirs or legatees of the persons mentioned in (a) and (b).

The persons/bodies entitled to file for revocation in a bankruptcy are the judicial administrator, the Public Attorney's Office or any creditor. A revocatory action serves to revoke fraudulent acts performed by the debtor before the bankruptcy was declared. The main goal of a revocatory action is to bring back into the bankrupt estate all assets which have been fraudulently diverted by the debtor. The revocatory action must be filed within three years of the date upon which the debtor was declared bankrupt.

If a transaction is declared void or ineffective, the parties are returned to the state prior to the contracting. In such a scenario, the assets involved must be restored to the bankrupt estate whenever possible. As an alternative, an indemnification, corresponding to the market value plus damages, must be paid. The third party which acts in good faith shall be restituted any assets or values delivered to the debtor and shall have a claim for losses and damages against the bankrupt party and its guarantors.

⁹ Article 130 of Law 11,101/2005.

QUESTION 7

7. Duty to co-operate

- (a) To what extent are directors (and other identified in question 3 above) obliged to cooperate with an investigation into the company's affairs following its insolvency?
- (b) Are any human rights laws applicable in the domestic jurisdiction in relation to any such obligations (e.g. in the UK and other European jurisdictions Article 6 of the European Convention of Human Rights may apply if domestic law compels a person to provide potentially self-incriminating information at the request of the office-holder appointed under the relevant insolvency procedure adopted)?

- 7.1 In judicial restructuring and bankruptcy proceedings, the debtor, its administrators or its creditors, may be called to provide the judicial administrator with any requested information. If the debtor, its administrators or its creditors refuse to cooperate, they may be called before the court in order to provide the information requested by the judicial administrator.

The Insolvency Law states that a bankrupt corporation's directors and officers will be identified with the debtor and bankrupt party for criminal purposes. In this sense, if an administrator hides or destroys obligatory accounting books, thus hindering the progress of the bankruptcy proceedings, in order to obtain an unfair advantage, he may be held criminally liable.

QUESTION 8

8. Appeals and limitation periods

- (a) What limitation period, if any, will apply to actions brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3) in connection with the offenses identified in question 2.
 - (b) Please indicate whether an appeal is available from the decision of the lower courts.
- 8.1 The judicial administrator, the Public Attorney's Office or any of the creditors are entitled to file for the revocation of any act within three years of the court decision which declares the bankruptcy of the debtor.¹⁰

¹⁰ Article 132 of Law 11,101/2005.

- 8.2 The statute of limitation for filing a civil liability action against limited liability shareholders and directors or other persons involved with the entity's administration is two years from the date of the judicial decision which terminates the insolvency proceeding.¹¹

For criminal liability in connection with bankruptcy crimes, the statute of limitations follows the rules contained in the Criminal Code.¹²

- 8.3 Any interlocutory order issued in the course of the proceeding may be challenged by a bill of review within ten days of the date in which such order was issued.¹³

A lower court final decision may be challenged by an appeal, which must be filed within 15 days from the date in which such final decision was rendered and, in most cases, it will suspend the enforceability of the award until the appellate court rules on the appeal.¹⁴

An ordinary suit, especially when contested, can take up to two or three years to obtain a judgment, which may still be subject to appeal. An enforcement action will depend on the facts of the specific case and the speed with which the debtor's assets can be identified for attachment. Any bank account held by the debtor may be seized by the court in an enforcement action.

QUESTION 9

9. Foreign corporations

Do the legal provisions and procedures outlined above apply to both domestic and foreign corporations?

- 9.1 There is no special liability regime governing foreign corporations in Brazil. These are subject to the same benefits, restrictions and regulations as Brazilian entities. However, there are slight restrictions on foreign entities, such as the foreign entity requirement to post a bond in order to initiate proceedings. Also, foreign corporations may be represented by an attorney domiciled in Brazil, provided that a power-of-attorney is duly executed.

Jurisdiction will be based on the principal place of business of a company (principal estabelecimento).¹⁵ If a debtor has its principal place of business in Brazil, a local court will have jurisdiction and the legal ramifications of Brazilian insolvency proceedings will be applicable to all of the debtor's assets. A parallel bankruptcy proceeding outside of Brazil, with respect to the same debtor or the same assets, will have no legal effect on the Brazilian proceedings.

The insolvency law provides that the presence of a local branch of a foreign business within Brazil will be sufficient to grant bankruptcy jurisdiction to a local Brazilian court. For these purposes, a branch office will be treated like any Brazilian subsidiary or legal entity.

The debtor under a judicial restructuring or a bankruptcy proceeding, and by extension, its officers and directors, insofar as they relate to the insolvency proceeding, fall under the jurisdiction of the state civil court in the region where the debtor's main establishment is located. A single court will be responsible for the administration of the proceeding. If the officers or directors reside outside the court's administrative region, the court can exercise jurisdiction over them by a commission ("carta precatória"), if they reside in Brazil, or by a letter rogatory ("carta rogatória") if they reside abroad.

9.2 In cases in which a foreign judgment is to be recognized in Brazil, certain conditions must be met. These conditions are as follows:

- (a) The judgment was rendered by a court of competent personal and subject matter jurisdiction;
- (b) There was a proper service of the defendant;
- (c) The judgment is final in the awarding country and is not subject to any further analysis or appeal;
- (d) Brazil's sovereignty, public policy or morality must not be offended by the judgment; and
- (e) The judgment has been consularized by a competent Brazilian authority and then translated into Portuguese by a certified translator in Brazil.

The most frequently contested foreign judgment recognition requirement is the need for proper service upon a defendant domiciled in Brazil. Because Brazil is not a member of the Hague Convention on the Service Abroad of Judicial and Extrajudicial Documents in Civil or Commercial Matters of 1965, service of process must be accomplished in accordance with Brazilian law. Therefore, the appropriate method for properly serving process on an individual domiciled in Brazil is via a letter rogatory (Brazil is a member of the Inter-American Convention on Letters Rogatory, which was signed in Panama on January 30, 1975, and ratified by Brazil on December 27, 1995).

In instances where Brazilian law claims the exclusive jurisdiction of a party or subject matter, the Brazilian courts will not recognize a foreign judgment. If the debtor has its principal place of business in Brazil, a Brazilian court will not recognize a foreign judgment. Brazilian law has exclusive jurisdiction over these entities, pursuant to Article 3 of the Bankruptcy Law, and the Superior Court of Justice will not ratify any foreign judgment.

Additionally, real estate assets are to be considered within the exclusive jurisdiction of Brazilian courts. These exclusions of foreign judgment recognition, although not uncommon in other jurisdictions, further limit any extension of a universal insolvency approach in Brazil. With respect to these parties and assets, creditors must bring their action in Brazil in order to protect their rights.

QUESTION 10

10. Insurance

Is director's and Officers' insurance available in your jurisdiction? If so, to what extent will the availability of such insurance policies provide effective protection to directors against personal liability which may arise in connection with the issues raised in question 1-9 above?

- 10.1 Director's and Officer's (D&O) insurance is available in Brazil. However, should the company whose directors and officers wish to obtain the D&O insurance coverage be deemed insolvent, or fall under a similar status, insurance companies in Brazil will not issue a D&O policy to such company.

Unless there is a clause in the D&O insurance policy to exclude or limit the insurance coverage in the case of insolvency or bankruptcy, the contracted coverage will remain valid and effective with respect to the named officers and directors. This is true even if the D&O insurance policy is issued and immediately thereafter the company becomes insolvent or subject to a bankruptcy or restructuring proceeding.

D&O liability policies in Brazil are usually issued for a one-year term under a "claims made basis" (i.e., covering potential liabilities reported during the life of the policy and their respective dispositions for up to 36 months from the expiration of the policy term). Insurance premiums range from 0.5% to 3% of the insured value for limited liability companies and closely-held corporations (the precise percentage will depend on the company's financials, reputation and solidity) and between 1.5% to 10% of the insured amount for publicly-held corporations, which have a greater liability in relation to derivative actions and minority shareholders lawsuits.

D&O insurance policies in Brazil cover the personal liability of directors and officers, depending on the terms of the policy, by advancing funds for their defense in court and for payment of legal fees and costs and/or by refunding the amount of awards and damages judicially suffered. However, it is important to note that D&O coverage will only be effective for cases of liability arising from negligence or the non-intentional fault of the director or officer. Brazilian insurance laws prohibit insurance coverage against illicit acts committed with malice/intent, such as willful misconduct. Therefore, illegal acts intentionally performed by an administrator (e.g., bankruptcy crimes) do not receive insurance coverage.

Directors and officers of joint-stock companies and managers of limited liability corporations, including quota holders who are also managers of the company (managing quota holder) may obtain coverage through a D&O policy in Brazil pursuant the above terms and conditions.

QUESTION 11

11. How safe is it for directors and others to incur further credit during the twilight period?

Please see the issue of liabilities referred to in the above questions.

CANADA

QUESTION 1

1. The start and duration of the “twilight” period

What is the length of the period ending with formal insolvency proceedings during which transactions entered into by a company are vulnerable to attack or are liable to give rise to personal liability on the part of directors and/or others involved in the management of the company?

1.1 Overview¹

The “twilight” period commences at the time that the directors and/or others become aware of the insolvency or the impending insolvency of the company. An insolvent person is defined in the Bankruptcy & Insolvency Act (Canada) (the BIA) as a person who is not bankrupt and who resides, carries on business or has property in Canada, whose liabilities to creditors provable as claims under this Act amount to one thousand dollars, and

- (a) who is, for any reason, unable to meet his obligations as they generally become due;
- (b) who has ceased paying his current obligations in the ordinary course of business as they generally become due; or
- (c) the aggregate of whose property is not, at a fair valuation, sufficient, or if disposed of at a fairly conducted sale under legal process, would not be sufficient to enable the payment of all his obligations due and accruing due.²

1.1.2 In a restructuring context under the Companies’ Creditors Arrangement Act (Canada) (CCAA), the BIA test set out in (a) above is given a purposive interpretation so that it is acceptable to consider whether there is a reasonably foreseeable (at the time of filing) expectation that there is a looming liquidity condition or crisis which will result in the applicant running out of cash to pay its debts as they generally become due in the future without the benefit of the stay and ancillary protection and procedure by court authorization pursuant to an order.³

1.1.3 The “twilight” period will, as a general rule, terminate when formal insolvency procedures are commenced.

- 1.1.4 The definition of “corporation” in the BIA includes any company or legal person incorporated by or under an Act of Parliament or of any province, and any incorporated company, wherever incorporated, that is authorized to carry on business in Canada or that has an office or property in Canada, but does not include banks, authorized foreign banks within the meaning of section 2 of the Bank Act, insurance companies, trust companies, loan companies or railway companies.⁴ The excluded entities are administered under the Winding-Up and Restructuring Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. W-11 (WURA). The specifics of the WURA are beyond the scope of this study, but many of the same principles set out in this study apply equally to corporations being administered under the WURA.
- 1.1.5 The review period under the BIA revolves around the phrase “date of the initial bankruptcy event” which is used throughout the BIA to establish the effective date of bankruptcy in certain transactions. In the case of a voluntary assignment, the date of the initial bankruptcy event is the date of the filing or the making of the assignment. In the case of a proposal, the date of initial bankruptcy event is the date a notice of intention or a proposal is filed. Where there has been a petition for a receiving order the date of the initial bankruptcy event is the date of the filing of the petition. At the termination of the review periods the phrase “date of bankruptcy”, as referred to in this paper, refers to the date on which the insolvent person becomes bankrupt.
- 1.2 Does it depend on whether a formal insolvency procedure is instituted?
- 1.2.1 Transactions entered into by the corporation during the “twilight” period are vulnerable to attack and can give rise to personal liability on the part of directors and officers irrespective of whether or not formal insolvency proceedings are instituted. The liability of directors and officers is not entirely dependent on the existence of formal insolvency proceedings. Liability is based on a breach of fiduciary duty to the corporation and its stakeholders. However, the tests for reviewing certain transactions during the “twilight” period tend to be more objective than subjective if formal insolvency procedures have been instituted.
- 1.3 Does it depend on the nature of the transaction?
- 1.3.1 The objective of an insolvency regime is to ensure fair treatment to all stakeholders who have similar legal rights. There are a variety of different transactions that can be reviewed and the time period for such review varies depending on the nature of the transaction. The review periods are as follows:
- (a) settlements under the BIA are void as against the trustee in bankruptcy if the settlement was made in the period beginning one year before the initial bankruptcy event and ending on the date that the settler becomes bankrupt. Insolvency is not a precondition to a finding of a settlement during this one year review period. However, in order for a settlement to be found in the period greater than one year before the initial bankruptcy event and up to five years before the initial bankruptcy event, the trustee must demonstrate that at the date of the settlement, the insolvent person was unable to pay all of its debts without the aid of the property in question.⁵

- (b) fraudulent preferences under the BIA in favour of a creditor may also be void as against the trustee in bankruptcy. The review period is three months before the initial bankruptcy event and ending on the date of bankruptcy, but such period is extended to 1 year in the event of a transaction in favour of someone related to the insolvent person.⁶
- (c) a reviewable transaction under the BIA exists where a bankrupt has been involved in a non-arms' length transaction during the period commencing 12 months before the initial bankruptcy event and ending on the date of bankruptcy.⁷ The trustee is entitled to inquire into reviewable transactions for the purpose of determining whether a bankrupt has paid or received, as the case may be, fair market value for the property involved in the transaction. If the consideration given or received is conspicuously greater than or less than fair market value, the Court may grant judgment in favour of the trustee for the difference between the actual consideration given or received and the fair market value of the property involved in the transaction. Pursuant to such a judgment, the trustee may recover from other parties to the transaction and/or any other person being privy to the transaction.
- (d) where a corporation has paid a dividend, other than a stock dividend, or redeemed or purchased for cancellation any of the shares of the stock of the corporation within the period commencing on the day that is one year before the initial bankruptcy event and ending on the date of bankruptcy, the Court may, on application by the trustee under the BIA, inquire into the transaction to ascertain whether it occurred at a time when the corporation was insolvent or whether it rendered the corporation insolvent.⁸ If the transaction occurred at such a time, the Court may give judgment to the trustee against the directors of the corporation, jointly and severally, in the amount of the dividend or redemption or purchase price, with interest, that has not been paid to the corporation, provided that the Court finds that (i) the transaction occurred at a time when the corporation was insolvent or the transaction rendered the corporation insolvent; and (ii) the directors did not have reasonable grounds to believe that the transaction was occurring at a time when the corporation was not insolvent or that the transaction would not render the corporation insolvent.

Directors have the onus of proving that the corporation was not insolvent at the time of the transaction and/or that the directors had reasonable grounds to believe that the transaction was occurring at a time when the corporation was not insolvent.

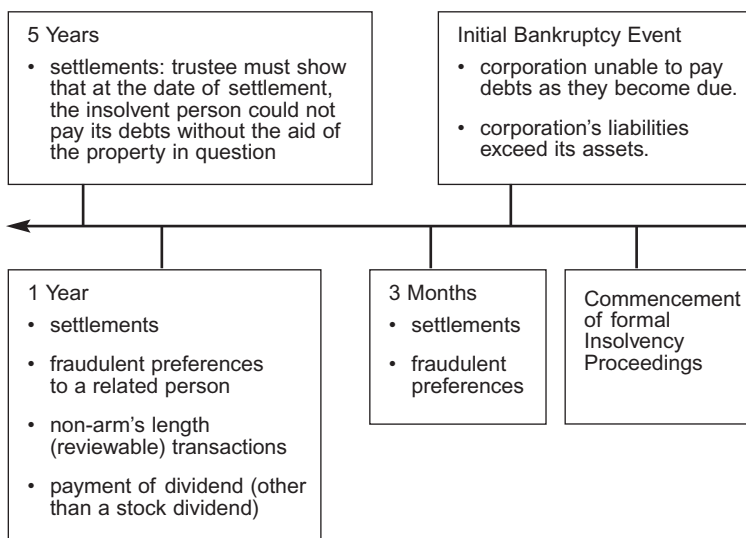

A director is protected from the provisions of this section if such director protested against the payment of the dividend or the redemption or purchase for the cancellation of shares of the stock of the corporation. If the trustee is able to fulfil the requirements of the statute, the Court may give judgment to the trustee against a shareholder who is related to one or more of the directors, in the amount of the dividend or redemption or purchase price referred to.

⁸ BIA, s. 101(1).

- (e) a trustee in bankruptcy can also resort to statutes other than the BIA. The *Fraudulent Conveyances Act*⁹ is one such example. This legislation, which is enacted at a provincial level, enables the trustee or other creditors to attack any transaction that was entered into with the intention of defeating, delaying or hindering creditors. In Ontario, the limitation period to challenge transactions is two years from the time when the plaintiff first became aware of the fraudulent conveyance.
- (f) a sale in bulk is voidable unless the buyer has complied with the provisions of the Bulk Sales Act.¹⁰ If a sale in bulk has been set aside or declared void and the buyer has taken possession of the stock in bulk, the buyer is personally liable to account to the creditors of the seller for the value thereof.
- (g) although it is beyond the scope of this study, directors are also liable to ensure that certain statutory trust deductions from employee wages are remitted to the governmental taxing authorities. These trusts include income tax, pension plan contributions and employment insurance.

- 1.3.2 There is current legislation, which has not yet been proclaimed in force, which would revise the preference provisions and replace the provisions dealing with settlements and reviewable transactions with the concept of "transfers at undervalue". The proposed reform is a framework for challenging transactions that may diminish the value of the insolvent debtor's estate, reducing the amount of money available for distribution to the creditors. A preference occurs when an insolvent debtor pays one or more creditors at the expense of other creditors. A transfer at undervalue is a transaction in which the consideration received by a person is conspicuously less than the fair market value of the property or services sold or disposed of by the person in the transaction. Regarding preferences, the proposal clarifies that there is no requirement to prove that the debtor intended to prefer a non arm's length creditor. Regarding transfers at undervalue, the proposals enable the trustee to apply to the court so that the court may determine as a question of fact whether the transaction was a transfer at undervalue and whether or not the other party was at arm's length with the debtor in relation to the transfer.

1.4 Does it depend on whether the party to the transaction is connected or associated with the company?

- 1.4.1 The length of the “twilight” period can depend on whether the party to the transaction is (a) related; or (b) dealing at arm’s length with the bankrupt. For example, if the parties are related, which generally means a blood relation among individuals or actual control among corporations, then the period in which to review fraudulent preferences is extended from three months to one year.

1.5 Will any other circumstances lengthen or shorten the “twilight” period?

- 1.5.1 A statutory compromise of the corporation's liability does not in itself relieve a director or officer of their personal liability. However, where the corporation makes a proposal to its creditors under the BIA, the BIA specifically authorizes, in certain circumstances, the release of claims against directors for liabilities incurred in their capacity as such. A proposal under the BIA or a proposed plan of arrangement under the CCAA may provide for the compromise of claims against directors if:

- (a) the claims do not relate to the creditor's contractual rights against such directors;
- (b) the claims are not based on allegations of either misrepresentation, wrongful or oppressive conduct by directors toward creditors; and
- (c) the Court determines the compromise to be fair and reasonable in the circumstances.¹¹

- 1.5.2 The legislation does not address compromise of claims against officers. However, recent cases have held that if the plan of arrangement contains or, at least for the corporations' officers, is approved by the various constituencies, it should be viewed as a contract between the debtor and its creditors and should not be interfered with by the Court.¹²

- 1.5.3 In order to obtain maximum protection, directors usually try to ensure that a proposal under the BIA or a proposed plan of arrangement under the CCAA provides specifically for the release of claims by creditors against them. Such provisions will be effective to the extent permitted by the relevant statute.

¹² Re Canadian Airlines Corp. (2000), 20 C.B.R. (4th) 1 (Alta. Q.B.) at 23.

- 1.5.4 In a recent case¹³, it was held that the CCAA provides jurisdiction to release third parties in a plan of compromise or arrangement, including (although distasteful) from fraud, as long as there is a reasonable connection between the third party claim being compromised and the restructuring plan and that the plan itself is fair and reasonable. Leave to appeal this decision to the Supreme Court of Canada was dismissed.

QUESTION 2

2. Actions potentially giving rise to liability for directors

- (a) In respect of which acts during the “twilight” period may a director be held personally liable or which may otherwise have adverse consequences for him?
- (b) In relation to each act identified in (a) above:
 - (i) is any resulting liability against a director civil, criminal or both?;
 - (ii) can a director be made personally liable in respect of the whole loss caused to the company or the deficit to creditors?;
 - (iii) will liability attach to individual directors in proportion to their specific involvement?;
 - (iv) is there a specific period before commencement of a subsequent insolvency procedure within which the relevant act must have been undertaken in order for liability to attach to a director?; and
 - (v) what defences, if any, will be available in relation to each offence?

2.2 General fiduciary duties

- 2.2.1 Directors are subject to certain general fiduciary duties imposed by corporate law statutes. In performing their functions, directors are required to:
- (a) act honestly and in good faith with a view to the best interests of the corporation; and
 - (b) exercise the care, diligence and skill that a reasonably prudent person would exercise in comparable circumstances.

- 2.2.2 The traditional view is that a director owes these fiduciary duties to the corporation and its shareholders but not to creditors. However, there is case law in Canada that follows the approach taken in other common law jurisdictions (i.e. England, Australia, New Zealand), which suggest that when a corporation is insolvent the directors cannot disregard the interests of the creditors. The issue as to whether a director owes a duty to creditors when a corporation is insolvent has recently been determined by the Supreme Court of Canada in Peoples Department Stores Inc. v. Wise.
- 2.2.3 In the lower court decision of Peoples Department Stores Inc. v. Wise, the court held that there may be a fiduciary duty on the part of the directors of a company to act in the best interest of creditors.¹⁴ If a company goes into bankruptcy, the directors may be liable to the bankrupt estate if they should have appreciated or ought to have known that a transaction carried out by the company when it was insolvent, or whose solvency was jeopardized by the transaction, was likely to cause loss to the creditors. However, on appeal, the Quebec Court of Appeal held that directors owe no such duty to creditors.¹⁵ The Court of Appeal decision was appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada, Canada's highest court. The Supreme Court of Canada dismissed the appeal and held that directors owe a fiduciary duty to the corporation and not the corporation's creditors, regardless of whether the corporation is in the "vicinity of insolvency".¹⁶ However, the Supreme Court recognized that, in certain circumstances, it may be legitimate for a director to consider the interests of shareholders, employees, creditors and others when assessing the best interests of the corporation. Although such other interests may be considered, the Supreme Court held that a director's fiduciary duty does not change simply because a corporation is in the "vicinity of insolvency". The Supreme Court held that an honest good faith attempt by a director of a corporation to address a corporation's financial problems does not, if unsuccessful, qualify as a breach of a director's fiduciary duty to the corporation. The Supreme Court further held that it is unnecessary to read the interests of creditors into the fiduciary duty since creditors have the oppression remedy (discussed in section 2.8 herein) available to them.
- 2.2.4 After the Peoples decision, the duty of care provisions of the Ontario Business Corporations Act (OBCA) were amended to clarify that directors only owe their duty of care to the corporation.¹⁷ Therefore, in Ontario, directors will only be liable for breach of fiduciary duty where an action is commenced by the corporation or where a complainant is granted leave by a court to bring a derivative action in the name of the corporation.

¹⁷ Ontario Business Corporations Act, RSO 1990, c. B16 (OBCA), s. 132(5), as amended by Ministry of Government Services Consumer Protection and Service Modernization Act, 2006, S.O., 2006, c.34, in force August 1, 2007.

- 2.2.5 Generally, where a director breaches his or her duties to the corporation, no direct cause of action exists between shareholders and the director, or between creditors and the director. However, attempts by a shareholder or creditor to assert a derivative action against a director on behalf of the corporation for a breach of duty owed by the director to the corporation may raise issues of standing. Where a company is nearing insolvency, a director's breach of his or her duties to the corporation may result in a traceable injury to both shareholders and creditors alike. Courts have struggled with balancing the interests of shareholders and creditors when companies are operating in this "twilight period". In these circumstances it appears that both shareholders and creditors might have standing to assert derivative claims against directors for breach of their duties to the corporation.

2.3 General bankruptcy offences under the BIA

- 2.3.1 Where a corporation commits an offence under the BIA, any officer or director of the corporation who directed, authorized, assented to, acquiesced in or participated in the commission of the offence is guilty of the offence and is liable upon conviction for the punishment provided for the offence.¹⁸

- 2.3.2 Bankruptcy offences are where a bankrupt:

- (a) makes any fraudulent disposition of the bankrupt's property before or after the date of the initial bankruptcy event;
- (b) refuses or neglects to answer fully and truthfully all proper questions put to the bankrupt at any examination held pursuant to the BIA;
- (c) makes a false entry or knowingly makes a material omission in a statement or accounting;
- (d) after or within one year immediately preceding the date of the initial bankruptcy event, conceals, destroys, mutilates, falsifies, makes an omission in or disposes of, or is privy to the concealment, destruction, mutilation, falsification, omission from or disposition of, a book or document affecting or relating to the bankrupt's property or affairs, unless the bankrupt had no intention to conceal the state of the bankrupt's affairs;
- (e) after or within one year immediately preceding the date of the initial bankruptcy event, obtains any credit or any property by false representations made by the bankrupt or made by any other person to the bankrupt's knowledge;
- (f) after or within one year immediately preceding the date of the initial bankruptcy event, fraudulently conceals or removes any property of a value of $50 or more or any debt due to or from the bankrupt; or ¹⁸ BIA, s. 204.

- (g) after or within one year immediately preceding the date of the initial bankruptcy event, hypothecates, pawns, pledges or disposes of any property that the bankrupt has obtained on credit and has not paid for, unless in the case of a trader the hypothecation, pawning, pledging or disposing is in the ordinary way of trade and unless the bankrupt had no intent to defraud.¹⁹

2.3.3 If any of (a) – (g) above are satisfied:

- (a) liability is criminal;
- (b) a person guilty of the offence is liable:
 - (i) on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding $5000 or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 1 year, or to both; or
 - (ii) on indictment, to a fine not exceeding $10,000 or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 3 years, or to both;
- (b) the gravity of the wrongdoing will be reflected in the length of imprisonment or the extent of the fine that is ordered (subject to the maximum restriction);
- (c) the specified period within which the relevant act must have been undertaken in order for liability to attach to a director is described in 2.3.2(a) - (g); and
- (d) absence of an intention to defraud or conceal amounts to a defence.

2.4 Failure to keep proper books of account

2.4.1 The offence is made out if any officer or director is involved in a corporation which has become bankrupt or has made a proposal and the corporation has, on a previous occasion, been bankrupt or made a proposal:

- (a) while engaged in any trade or business and has not kept and preserved proper books of account; or
- (b) has concealed, destroyed, mutilated, falsified or disposed of, or is privy to the concealment, destruction, mutilation, falsification or disposition of, any book or document affecting or relating to the corporation's property or affairs.²⁰

2.4.2 If 2.4.1 above is satisfied, and the impugned transaction occurred within the period beginning two years before the initial bankruptcy event and ending on the date of bankruptcy, then section 2.3.3 (a) to (c) and (e) above apply.

2.5 Unlawful transactions

2.5.1 The offence is made out where the director or officer participates in a transaction entered into by the bankrupt corporation with any person for the purpose of obtaining a benefit or advantage to which either of them would not be entitled.²¹

2.5.2 Provided 2.5.1 above is satisfied:

- (a) liability is criminal;
- (b) the person guilty of the offence is liable on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding $5,000 or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year, or to both;
- (c) the gravity of the wrongdoing will be reflected in the length of imprisonment or the extent of the fine that is ordered (subject to the maximum restriction);
- (d) this offence applies after the corporation becomes bankrupt; and
- (e) absence of intent to obtain a benefit or advantage amounts to a defence.

2.6 Declaration of dividends

2.6.1 Where the court finds that either the bankrupt corporation paid a dividend, other than a stock dividend, or redeemed or purchased for cancellation any of the shares of its capital stock at a time when the corporation was insolvent or the transaction rendered the corporation insolvent, the directors of the corporation are personally liable.²²

2.6.2 Where 2.6.1 above has occurred:

- (a) liability is civil;
- (b) a director found guilty of this offence is liable to pay to the trustee the amount of the dividend, redemption or purchase price with interest;
- (c) the liability will attach to the directors jointly and severally;
- (d) the declaration of dividends must have occurred within the one year period immediately preceding the date of the initial bankruptcy event and ending on the date of the bankruptcy; and
- (e) the following defences exist:
 - (i) the director actively dissented from the resolution authorizing the payment of the dividend; or
 - (ii) the director had reasonable grounds to believe that the impugned transaction occurred at a time when the corporation was solvent or that the transaction would not render the corporation insolvent.²³

²³ BIA, s. 101(2)

2.7 Liability for debts due to employees

2.7.1 On July 7, 2008, the Wage Earner Protection Program Act (WEPPA) and related Regulations were proclaimed in force. It provides for the timely payment of wages and vacation pay (but not severance pay) owed to eligible workers up to an amount equalling the lesser of four weeks' maximum insurable earnings under the Employment Insurance Act and $3,000 per employee. An eligible worker is one whose employment was terminated as a result of the former employer filing for bankruptcy or becoming subject to a receivership and who is owed wages and vacation pay earned during the six months immediately prior to the date of bankruptcy/receivership. The payments will be made by the government which is then subrogated to the employees' rights and may maintain an action against the bankrupt, insolvent employer or directors in the name of the employee or in the name of the government.

2.7.2 According to corporate statutes such as the CBCA, the directors of a corporation are personally liable to the employees for all debts, not exceeding 6 months wages, for services performed for the corporation.²⁴ This generally does not include personal liability for severance pay. The directors are also liable for any vacation pay that accrued over a period of up to 12 months while they were directors.

2.7.3 Where 2.7.2 above is satisfied:

- (a) liability is civil;
- (b) the court may order the directors to pay the debts owed to the employees, with interest at such rate as the court sees fit;
- (c) the directors are jointly and severally liable for the debt;
- (d) there is no specified period within which the relevant act must have been undertaken in order for liability to attach; and
- (e) a director is not liable unless:
 - (i) the corporation has been sued within 6 months after the debt was due and execution has been returned unsatisfied either in whole or in part; or
 - (ii) the corporation has made an assignment or a receiving order has been made against it under the BIA and a claim for the debt has been proved within 6 months after the date of the assignment or receiving order.

It should also be noted that the director is not liable unless he or she is sued while he or she is a director or within 2 years after ceasing to be a director.

2.8 Oppression and derivative action

2.8.1 A complainant may apply to the court for an order under the oppression provisions of the CBCA (and comparable provincial corporate statutes) to rectify the matters complained of if the court is satisfied that in respect of a corporation or any of its affiliates:

²⁴ CBCA, s. 119.

- (a) any act or omission of the corporation or any of its affiliates effects a result;
- (b) the business or affairs of the corporation or any of its affiliates are or have been carried on or conducted in a manner, or
- (c) the powers of the directors of the corporation or any of its affiliates are or have been exercised in a manner that is oppressive or unfairly prejudicial to or that unfairly disregards the interests of any security holder, creditor, director or officer and the court may make an order to rectify the matters complained of.²⁵ A complainant is defined in some jurisdictions so as to include shareholders and creditors.

2.8.2 Even if a director does not breach his fiduciary duty, he may still be found to have acted “oppressively”. The oppression remedy is primarily intended to redress objectively reasonable expectations. The Supreme Court of Canada set aside the decision of the Quebec Court of Appeal which stated that a board of directors had conducted a fatally flawed process in evaluating a change of control transaction because it did not consider any interests or reasonable expectations of debenture holders beyond contractual entitlements. The reasons for the Supreme Court’s decision have not yet been released.²⁶

2.8.3 Where 2.8.1 above is satisfied:

- (a) liability is civil;
- (b) the court may make an order to compensate the aggrieved person;
- (c) there is no evidence that the court cannot apportion liability to each individual director according to their specific involvement when the court makes an order to compensate the aggrieved person;
- (d) there is no specified period within which the relevant act must have been undertaken in order for liability to attach; and
- (e) if the directors can show that the exercise of their powers was not oppressive or unfairly prejudicial or unfairly disregarded the interests of any security holder, creditor, director or officer, then the elements of the offence would not have been established and the action would fail.

2.8.4 The courts have a wide discretion to fashion a remedy appropriate to the circumstances. The remedy to correct an oppressive act ‘should be done with a scalpel, and not a battle axe’, and the task of the Court is to even the balance, not tip it in favour of the injured party.²⁷ The Court may make an interim or final order which it thinks fit including:

- (a) an order restraining the conduct complained of;

- (b) an order appointing a Receiver or Receiver/Manager;
- (c) an order to regulate a corporation's affairs by amending the articles or bylaws or creating or amending a Unanimous Shareholder Agreement;
- (d) an order directing an issue or exchange of securities;
- (e) an order appointing directors in place of or in addition to all or any of the directors then in office;
- (f) an order directing a corporation or any other person, to purchase securities of a security holder;
- (g) an order directing a corporation or any other person, to pay a security holder any part of the money paid by the security holder for securities;
- (h) an order varying or setting aside a transaction or contract to which a corporation is a party and compensating the corporation or any other party to the transaction or contract;
- (i) an order requiring a corporation, within a time specified by the Court, to produce to the Court or an interested person financial statements or an accounting in such other form as the Court may determine;
- (j) an order compensating an aggrieved person;
- (k) an order directing rectification of the registers or other records of the corporation;
- (l) an order winding-up the corporation;
- (m) an order directing an investigation; and
- (n) an order requiring the trial of any issue.²⁸

2.8.5 While not yet in force, proposed insolvency legislation would give the Court authority to remove any director of a company undergoing BIA or CCAA restructuring if satisfied that the director "is unreasonably impairing or is likely to unreasonably impair" the possibility of a viable proposal, arrangement or compromise, or "is likely to act inappropriately as a director in the circumstances".

2.9 General liability under the BIA

Community service

2.9.1 Where a person has been convicted of an offence under the BIA, the court may, having regard to the nature of the offence and the circumstances surrounding its commission, and in addition to any other punishment that may be imposed under the BIA, make an order directing the person to perform community service, subject to such reasonable conditions as may be specified in the order.²⁹

Compensation for loss

- 2.9.2 Where a person has been convicted of an offence under the BIA and any other person has suffered loss or damage because of the commission of the offence, the court may, at the time sentence is imposed, order the person who has been convicted to pay to the person who has suffered loss or damage or to the trustee of the bankrupt, an amount by way of satisfaction or compensation for loss of or damage to property suffered by that person as a result of the commission of the offence.³⁰

QUESTION 3

- 3. Other persons involved with the company's affairs who may become liable in respect of their actions during the "twilight" period
- (a) In addition to the formally appointed directors of the company, can others be held liable in respect of the company's activities during the "twilight" period if the company were to become subject to a formal insolvency procedure?
 - (b) In respect of which acts may other persons be held liable and to what extent does the liability of third parties differ from that for directors identified in Question 2 above?
 - (c) Will liability be limited to that resulting from involvement with a particular transaction or more generally in relation to the overall loss suffered by creditors?

3.1 Introduction

- 3.1.1 The BIA clearly stipulates that an agent of the corporation or any person who has or has had de facto control of the corporation, whether directly or indirectly, may be held liable for an offence under the BIA.³¹
- 3.1.2 Proposed insolvency legislation would introduce a definition of "director" as including "a person occupying the position of director by whatever name called". This may expand the ranks of persons who may be considered liable as directors, for example, to shareholders exercising powers under a unanimous shareholders' agreement.
- 3.1.3 In addition, there are a number of transactions entered into during the "twilight" period for which third parties who do not control the corporation may be held liable.

³¹ BIA, s. 204.

3.2 Reviewable transactions³²

- 3.2.1 If the bankrupt enters into a transaction with a non-arm's length third party, and the consideration for the transaction is "conspicuously greater or less than the fair market value of the property or services", then the court may give judgment to the trustee against any other party to the transaction or against any other party privy to the transaction. The party subject to such judgment is required to pay the difference between the actual consideration given or received, as the case may be, by the bankrupt and the fair market value of the property or services.

3.3 Fraudulent preferences, settlements and fraudulent conveyances

- 3.3.1 The third party may be held liable when an insolvent corporation enters into a transaction with a creditor of the corporation. If the court holds that the transaction was made at a time when the corporation was insolvent with an intention to prefer that creditor over others, then the transaction will be void as against the trustee. The review period is 3 months before the initial bankruptcy event, with an extension to 1 year in the event of related parties. From a practical standpoint, this means that the creditor of the corporation will be obligated to return to the trustee any consideration paid by the bankrupt in the transaction.
- 3.3.2 Similarly, the recipient of a settlement or the transferee of property in a fraudulent conveyance will also be obligated to return property to the trustee if the transaction is set aside as being a settlement or a fraudulent conveyance.
- 3.3.3 As discussed in 1.3.2 above, proposed legislation would reclassify transactions as preferences or transfers at undervalue.

3.4 Liability of persons convicted of BIA Offences

- 3.4.1 See section 2.9 and 2.10.

QUESTION 4

4 Counterparties dealing with the company during the "twilight" period

- (a) From the point of view of a counterparty dealing with the company during the "twilight" period, what are the potential heads of challenge which may lead to transactions with the company being set aside?
- (b) What defences, if any, to the areas of vulnerability identified above will be available to a counterparty seeking to protect a transaction from being attacked?

³² BIA, s. 100.

4.1 Introduction

- 4.1.1 There are a number of potential remedies available to creditors and/or the trustee in bankruptcy all of which have at their root the equitable principle that unsecured creditors should be treated equally.
- 4.1.2 The potential heads of challenge which may lead to transactions being set aside are transactions:
- (a) for conspicuously greater or less than fair market value;
 - (b) which are preferences;
 - (c) which are settlements;
 - (d) which are fraudulent conveyances;
 - (e) which involve dispositions of property after the commencement of bankruptcy proceedings;
 - (f) which do not comply with provincial bulk sales legislation; or
 - (g) which are oppressive.

4.2 Reviewable transactions

- 4.2.1 For the purposes of the BIA, a person who has entered into a transaction with another person otherwise than at arm's length shall be deemed to have entered into a reviewable transaction. It is a question of fact whether persons not related to one another within the meaning of the BIA were at the particular time dealing with each other at arms length. Persons who are related within the meaning of the BIA are deemed not to deal with each other at arm's length.
- 4.2.2 Where a bankrupt has entered into a reviewable transaction in the one year period before the initial bankruptcy event and ending on the date of bankruptcy, the court may, on the application of the trustee, inquire into whether the bankrupt gave or received fair market value in consideration for the property or services concerned in the transaction.
- 4.2.3 Where the court in proceedings under this section finds that the consideration given or received by the bankrupt in the reviewable transaction was conspicuously greater or less than fair market value, the court may give judgment to the trustee against the other party to the transaction, or against any other person being privy to the transaction with the bankrupt, or against all those persons, for the difference between the actual consideration given or received by the bankrupt, and the fair market value as determined by the court, of the property or services concerned in the transaction.
- 4.2.4 In making an application under this section, the trustee shall state what in his or her opinion was the fair market value of the property or services concerned in the transaction and what in his or her opinion was the value of the actual consideration given or received by the bankrupt in the transaction.

- 4.2.5 The application of this section of the BIA is subject to three conditions:
- (a) the transaction must have taken place during the period commencing one year before the initial bankruptcy event and ending on the date of bankruptcy;
 - (b) the transaction must have been at a price manifestly different from fair market value, that is for an inadequate consideration; and
 - (c) the transaction must be reviewable, i.e. with a person who was not at arm's length with the bankrupt.
- 4.2.6 The test for whether or not the difference in the consideration is conspicuous is not whether it was conspicuous to the parties at the time, but whether it is conspicuous to the court having regard to all relevant factors. "Conspicuous" means "remarkable" and "noteworthy".

Defence

- 4.2.7 It should be noted that even if all the conditions of this section have been met, the courts in certain jurisdictions in Canada still believe that the duty to grant judgment against any or all the persons named in this section is permissive, not mandatory, and that the court has a discretion not to grant a remedy, if equitable principles so mandate.

4.3 Fraudulent preferences³³

- 4.3.1 By way of overview, a preference arises when an insolvent person enters into a transaction and subsequently becomes bankrupt and the transaction results in a creditor being put in a better position than he or she would have been in if the company had instead gone into liquidation. The attack is made by a trustee in bankruptcy and the courts have the ability to declare the transaction to be fraudulent and void as against the trustee.
- 4.3.2 The provisions of the BIA with respect to preferences are a means of carrying into effect the principle of the BIA, contained in section 141, that all ordinary creditors should rank equally. Subsection 95(1) makes every conveyance, transfer, charge etc. made by an insolvent person with a view to preferring a creditor within 3 months before the initial bankruptcy event and ending on the date the insolvent person becomes bankrupt, fraudulent and void. Section 96 extends the period to one year before the initial bankruptcy event in the case where the creditor is related to the insolvent person.
- 4.3.3 For the purposes of the BIA, persons are "related persons" if they are:
- (a) individuals connected by blood relationship, marriage or adoption;
 - (b) a corporation and
 - (i) a person who controls the corporation, if it is controlled by one person, ³³ BIA, s. 95 and 96.

- (ii) a person who is a member of a related group that controls the corporation, or
- (iii) any person connected in the manner set out in paragraph (a) to a person described in subparagraph (i) or (ii); or
- (c) two corporations
 - (i) controlled by the same person or group of persons,
 - (ii) each of which is controlled by one person and the person who controls one of the corporations is related to the person who controls the other corporation,
 - (iii) one of which is controlled by one person and that person is related to any member of a related group that controls the other corporation,
 - (iv) one of which is controlled by one person and that person is related to each member of an unrelated group that controls the other corporation,
 - (v) one of which is controlled by a related group a member of which is related to each member of an unrelated group that controls the other corporation, or
 - (vi) one of which is controlled by an unrelated group each member of which is related to at least one member of an unrelated group that controls the other corporation.³⁴

4.3.4 For the purposes of the BIA, “relationship” is:

- (a) where two corporations are related to the same corporation within the meaning of subsection 4(2), they shall be deemed to be related to each other;
- (b) where a related group is in a position to control a corporation, it shall be deemed to be a related group that controls the corporation whether or not it is part of a larger group by whom the corporation is in fact controlled;
- (c) a person who has a right under a contract, in equity or otherwise, either immediately or in the future and either absolutely or contingently, to, or to acquire, shares in a corporation, or to control the voting rights or shares in a corporation, shall, except where the contract provides that the right is not exercisable until the death of an individual designated therein, be deemed to have the same position in relation to the control of the corporation as if he owned the shares;
- (d) where a person owns shares in two or more corporations, he shall, as shareholder of one of the corporations, be deemed to be related to himself as shareholder of each of the other corporations;
- (e) persons are connected by blood relationship if one is the child or other descendant of the other or one is the brother or sister of the other;

- (f) persons are connected by marriage if one is married to the other or to a person who is connected by blood relationship to the other; and
 - (g) persons are connected by adoption if one has been adopted, either legally or in fact, as the child of the other or as the child of a person who is connected by blood relationship, otherwise than as a brother or a sister to the other.³⁵
- 4.3.5 The BIA states that the intent to prefer is to be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, if the effect of the conveyance, transfer, charge etc. is to give the creditor a preference over other creditors.³⁶
- 4.3.6 If a payment or other disposition of property is made in circumstances that amount to a fraudulent preference, the transaction remains valid unless or until it is set aside as a fraudulent preference. The mere fact that a creditor obtains a preference is not ipso facto proof of a fraudulent intention on the part of the debtor. To constitute a fraudulent preference, there must be both a preference in fact and an intention on the part of the debtor to prefer.
- 4.3.7 Transactions within the time periods referred to in section 95 (see 4.3.2) and section 96 that take place in the ordinary course of business are generally protected.
- 4.3.8 "Fraudulent" in section 95 does not mean actual fraud, but constructive or legal fraud. Constructive fraud is conduct that is characterized as fraudulent by the law, not because it is necessarily per se reprehensible, but because it tends to damage the public interest.
- 4.3.9 To attack a transaction as a fraudulent preference, the trustee must prove that the conveyance was made to a creditor.
- Transaction must take place within three months (or one year if related) before bankruptcy.
- 4.3.10 If the transaction sought to be set aside took place more than three months before the initial bankruptcy event (one year in the case of related parties), resort can be had to the remedies provided by provincial statutes not in conflict with the BIA.
- 4.3.11 The three month or one year period is calculated from the date of the initial bankruptcy event and ends on the date that the insolvent person becomes bankrupt.³⁷ The date of the initial bankruptcy event provides for a dating back and is most important in the case of receiving orders and deemed assignments. In receiving orders, the date of the initial bankruptcy event will be the date of the filing of the petition and the three month or one year period is calculated from that date. The date when the relevant period ends is the date of the receiving order, assignment, or the date of the event that causes an assignment in bankruptcy to be deemed.

³⁷ BIA, s. 95 and 96.

- 4.3.12 The date for the commencement of the three month or one year period is the date when the payment was made, the obligation was incurred, or the judicial proceeding was taken, not the date when the intention was formed to make the payment, incur the obligation, or take the judicial proceeding.

Insolvency of debtor

- 4.3.13 Fraudulent preference remedies can only be invoked if the transaction was effected by an “insolvent person”. It is not necessary for the trustee to prove an act of bankruptcy by the debtor; it is only necessary to prove that the debtor was insolvent at the time of the transaction. Please see section 1.1.1 for the definition of insolvent person.

Intention

- 4.3.14 In order to constitute a fraudulent preference, the transaction must be entered into “with a view to giving that creditor a preference”. The words “with a view to giving that creditor a preference” require only an intention on the part of the debtor. In determining the intention of the debtor, the test is an objective one, not a subjective one (i.e. the intention will be that which the debtor’s conduct bears when reasonably construed and not that which, long after the event, he claims was his intention).

The presumption

- 4.3.15 Under section 95 the trustee is required to prove:
- (a) that the transaction took place within three months or one year of the initial bankruptcy event;
 - (b) that the debtor was an insolvent person at the date of the alleged preference; and
 - (c) that at the date when the transaction was effected, it gave the creditor a preference in fact over other creditors.
- 4.3.16 The trustee has proved these three essentials, the transaction is presumed to have been effected with the view to giving a creditor a preference over other creditors.³⁸

Defences

- 4.3.17 The presumption can be rebutted by the defendant to the transaction. If, after considering all the evidence, the court is satisfied that on the balance of probabilities the debtor was pursuing a purpose other than that of favouring the particular creditor over other creditors, the presumption will be displaced and the trustee’s application will be dismissed. For example, if the court concludes that a payment was made in the ordinary course of business and not with the intention to prefer, the presumption will have been rebutted and the payment will stand. Payments in the ordinary course of business will ordinarily be made for one of two reasons:

³⁸ BIA, s. 95(2).

- (a) so that the bankrupt might take advantage of favourable payment terms; or
- (b) to secure a continued supply of goods or services from the trade creditor so that the bankrupt could continue in business.

4.3.18 Examples of other defences that can be raised by creditors include that of a diligent creditor continuing to press for payment, security given for present advances, a binding agreement to make payment or to give security made prior to the review period, or where there is no reason to prefer the creditor.

4.4 Provincial legislation dealing with preferences

4.4.1 In addition to attacking a transaction under the BIA, it may be possible for a trustee in the common law provinces to make use of provincial acts dealing with fraudulent preferences. The *Assignments and Preferences Act*³⁹ ("APA") is ordinarily used by a trustee in bankruptcy when the time limits under section 95 of the BIA have expired. Under the APA, it is necessary to prove (a) a gift, conveyance, assignment or transfer or delivery over; (b) an intent to give a creditor an unjust preference over creditors or over any one of them; and (c) at the time of the gift, conveyance, assignment or transfer or delivery over, the debtor was in insolvent circumstances.⁴⁰ Although the wording is different from section 95 of the BIA, these requirements are substantially similar to those provided by section 95. However, there are some important differences which generally speaking make it more difficult to prove a preference under the Assignments and Preferences Act.

4.5 Settlements

- 4.5.1 Under the BIA, all settlements of property are void if bankruptcy occurs within one year after the date of the settlement. Settlements made more than one year after but within five years of the date of bankruptcy are void where the trustee can demonstrate either that, at the date of the settlement, the settlor was unable to pay all its debts without the aid of the property in question or that the interest of the settlor did not pass on the execution of the settlement.⁴¹
- 4.5.2 A settlement, which falls within section 91, is not void but only voidable. It only becomes void when bankruptcy occurs. It is not void as of the date of the making of the conveyance or the date when the court makes the order declaring it to be a settlement, it is the bankruptcy which is the triggering event.
- 4.5.3 Since 1992, the BIA has provided a partial definition of "settlement". Under this definition "settlement" includes a contract, covenant, transfer, gift and designation of a beneficiary in an insurance contract to the extent that the contract, covenant, transfer, gift or designation is gratuitous or made for merely nominal consideration.⁴² There must also be an intention that the property will be retained for the benefit of the donee in some form.⁴³

⁴³ Royal Bank v. Whalley (2002), 34 C.B.R. (4th) 277 (Ont. C.A.).

- 4.5.4 The trustee does not have to prove a fraudulent intention on the part of the settlor in order to obtain an order setting aside a settlement.
- 4.5.5 It is important to distinguish between a settlement and a fraudulent preference. A settlement involves a gift to a stranger to the bankruptcy. A preference involves a transaction with a creditor whereby the creditor is preferred over other creditors. A settlement involves the idea of a clear gift or a situation where provision is made for a trust of some sort, so it would not typically include a business transaction between a debtor and a creditor.

Defence

- 4.5.6 The provisions of section 91 do not apply to any settlement made in favour of a purchaser or encumbrancer in good faith and for valuable consideration. Both elements must be proved in order to come within this exception.

4.6 Fraudulent conveyances

- 4.6.1 The provincial Fraudulent Conveyances Act does not conflict with the BIA, and a trustee in bankruptcy is entitled to make use of such legislation to supplement the rights and remedies provided by the BIA.
- 4.6.2 The effect of the Fraudulent Conveyances Act is that a conveyance that is fraudulent and voided against creditors is not absolutely void but only voidable, the conveyance is good as between the parties to it.
- 4.6.3 The Fraudulent Conveyances Act renders void a conveyance of property made with the intent to defeat, hinder, delay or defraud creditors or others. The act makes an important distinction between voluntary conveyances and conveyances made for good consideration.⁴⁴ If a conveyance is voluntary, it is only necessary to show the fraudulent intent of the maker; if it is made for good consideration, it is necessary to show the fraudulent intent of both parties to the transaction.
- 4.6.4 Under the Fraudulent Conveyances Act, the plaintiff does not have to show that the creditors were in fact delayed, defeated or defrauded, only that the grantor had an intention to defeat, hinder, delay or defraud creditors.
- 4.6.5 If there is no consideration for a conveyance, it is irrelevant whether or not the grantee had notice or knowledge of the fraudulent intent of the grantor. In the case of a voluntary conveyance, the trustee in bankruptcy need only prove that the grantor had the intent to defeat, hinder, delay or defraud creditors.
- 4.6.6 If the court finds a transaction to be a fraudulent conveyance, the trustee will be entitled to a declaration that the conveyance is void as against him and that he is the owner of the bankrupt's interest in the property.

Defences

- 4.6.7 The court may not make an order setting aside the transaction if it is satisfied that there was no intent to defeat, hinder, delay or defraud creditors or others.

⁴⁴ Fraudulent Conveyances Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. F. 29, s. 2.

- 4.6.8 Even if the court finds that the transaction was a fraudulent conveyance, it is not void if it was made for good consideration and bona fide to a person not having, at the time of the conveyance, notice or knowledge of the intent to defraud.

4.7 Protection of transaction made in good faith with bankrupt

- 4.7.1 The purpose of section 97(1) of the BIA is to deal with the effect of the relation back of the trustee's title in various sections of the BIA, such as section 95 which deals with fraudulent preferences. Section 97(1) applies to payments, conveyances etc. which take place between the date of the initial bankruptcy event and the date of bankruptcy. Four types of transactions as set out in paragraphs (a) – (d) are protected if made in good faith and if they do not constitute a settlement, preference or reviewable transaction. The four headings are:

- (a) a payment by the bankrupt to any of the bankrupt's creditors;
- (b) a payment or delivery to the bankrupt;
- (c) a conveyance or transfer by the bankrupt for adequate valuable consideration;
- (d) a contract, dealing or transaction including any giving of security, by or with the bankrupt for adequate valuable consideration.

- 4.7.2 With respect to such protected transactions, the law of set-off applies in the same manner and to the same extent as if the bankrupt were the plaintiff or defendant, as the case may be, except insofar as any claim for set-off is affected by the provisions of the BIA respecting frauds or fraudulent preferences.

4.8 Bulk sales legislation

Purpose and application of BSA

- 4.8.1 Although bulk sales legislation has been repealed in most Canadian jurisdictions, it is still applicable in Ontario, Newfoundland and New Brunswick.⁴⁵ Bulk sales legislation was introduced to protect creditors from a secret though valid sale of the debtor's stock and a possible unfair distribution or dissipation of the proceeds of such a sale.

In Ontario, the BSA applies to every "sale in bulk" which is defined as a "sale of stock in bulk out of the usual course of business or trade of the seller".⁴⁶ "Stock in bulk" is defined as stock which is the subject of a sale in bulk and all other property, real or personal, that together with stock is the subject of a sale in bulk.⁴⁷ "Stock" is defined as:

- (i) goods, wares, merchandise or chattels ordinarily the subject of trade and commerce,

⁴⁷ Ibid.

- (ii) the goods, wares, merchandise or chattels in which a person trades or that the person produces or that are the output of a business, or
- (iii) the fixtures, goods and chattels with which a person carries on a trade or business.

The BSA applies to virtually every sale of stock out of the usual course of business of the seller, subject to certain specific exceptions, such as a sale by a receiver, assignee or trustee for the benefit of creditors, trustee under the BIA, liquidator or official receiver.

The term “sale” includes a transfer, conveyance, barter or exchange but does not include a pledge, charge or mortgage.⁴⁸

Disclosure of creditors

4.8.2 Section 4 of the BSA prohibits the purchaser from delivering a sum more than of 10% of the final purchase price to the vendor until the purchaser has received from the vendor:

- (a) a list of names and addresses of the unsecured trade creditors and the secured trade creditors of the vendor, setting out the indebtedness or liability due, owing, payable or to become due and payable by the vendor to each of them, and the nature of any security interest: and
- (b) an affidavit verifying that subparagraph (i) is true and correct.

From and after delivery of the above statement, no creditor of the vendor may obtain a preference or priority in respect of the stock in bulk or the proceeds from the sale thereof.⁴⁹

Compliance

4.8.3 In addition to the requirements set out above, one of the following conditions must be met before the purchaser may deliver proceeds of sale to the vendor:

- (i) the statement of indebtedness must not disclose total claims in excess of $2,500 by either the secured trade creditors or the unsecured trade creditors (section 8(1)(a)); or
- (ii) the vendor must swear an affidavit stating that the claims of all the secured and unsecured trade creditors of the vendor of which the buyer has notice have been paid in full (section 8(1)(b)); or
- (iii) adequate provision must be made for the immediate payment in full upon completion of the sale of all unsecured and secured trade creditors except for any creditor that has signed a waiver allowing the sale to proceed without provision being made to pay its claim in full (section 8(1)(c)); or
- (iv) the vendor may deliver to the buyer:

- (A) a consent from sixty percent (60%) of the unsecured trade creditors of the vendor whose claims exceed $50, and of whose claims the buyer has notice; and
 - (B) an affidavit (of the vendor) deposing that the vendor delivered or caused to be delivered to all secured trade creditors and all unsecured trade creditors, personally or by registered mail, 14 days prior to completion of the sale, a copy of the contract of the sale in bulk, the section 4 statement of indebtedness, a Statement of Affairs summarizing assets, liabilities and contingent liabilities included in the sale in bulk and further deposition that there has not been a material change in the Statement of Affairs since it was made.⁵⁰ Duplicate originals of the documents mentioned in subparagraph 3(b)(iv) must be attached as exhibits to the affidavit.
- 4.8.4 If one of the conditions outlined in subparagraphs (i), (ii) and (iii) above is met, the buyer may deliver the proceeds of sale to the vendor. If the condition in subparagraph (iv) above is met, the buyer must deliver the proceeds of sale to the person named as trustee in the form of consent, who must then distribute the proceeds of sale among the creditors in an order of priority similar to that which applies to a distribution under the BIA.
- 4.8.5 Before distribution, the trustee must publish a notice in at least two issues of a newspaper, in the locality where the sale is to take place. In addition, the trustee must wait a minimum of 14 days after last publication before distributing the proceeds of sale.
- Completion of sale*
- 4.8.6 The buyer must file, within five days of the completion of sale, an affidavit setting out the particulars of sale including the subject matter, name and address of any trustee, duplicate originals of the statement of indebtedness, and any statement provided under section 8 including creditors' consents. The affidavit shall be filed with the office of the local registrar of the court.⁵¹ The six month time limitation for initiating actions to set aside or have the bulk sale declared void commences as at the date of filing of the affidavit.⁵²
- 4.8.7 Alternatively, compliance in Ontario may be satisfied by the vendor applying to a judge for an order exempting the sale in bulk from the application of the BSA. The Court must be satisfied that the sale is (a) advantageous to the seller, and (b) will not impair the seller's ability to pay creditors in full.⁵³

4.8.8 Meaning of “creditor” under the BSA

A “creditor” is defined under the BSA as “any creditor, including an unsecured trade creditor and a secured trade creditor”. An “unsecured trade creditor” is defined as “a person to whom a seller is indebted for stock, money or services furnished or for the purpose of enabling the seller to carry on a business, whether or not the debt is due, and who holds no security or who is entitled to no preference in respect of a claim”. A “secured trade creditor” is defined under the BSA as “a person to whom a seller is indebted whether or not the debt is due (a) for stock, money or services furnished for the purpose of enabling the seller to carry on business; or (b) for rental of premises in or from which the seller carries on business, and who holds security or is entitled to a preference in respect of a claim”. Given the circular definition of the term “creditor” under the BSA, an analysis of the judicial interpretation of the term is necessary.

In *Pizzolati & Chittaro Manufacturing Co. Ltd. v. May*⁵⁴, the Ontario Court of Appeal held that a person with an unliquidated claim for damages does not fall within the scope of the term “creditor” as that term is used in the BSA.

The Court emphasized that the wording in the BSA and the requisite forms were not sufficient to change the common law definition of the term “creditor” under which unliquidated claims were clearly not included. The Court in Pizzolati also explained that the definition of the term “creditor” under the BSA is dissimilar from that under the BIA, which clearly defined “creditor” as including a person with an unliquidated claim.⁵⁵

- 4.8.9 A sale in bulk is voidable unless the buyer has complied with the provisions of the BSA. An action or proceeding to set aside or have a sale in bulk declared void may be brought or taken by a “creditor” of the seller within 6 months after the date in which the documents were filed under section 11 of the BSA. If a sale in bulk has been set aside or declared void and the buyer has received or taken possession of the stock in bulk, the buyer is personally liable to account to the creditors of the seller for the value thereof, including all money, security and property realized or taken by the buyer from, out of, or on account of, the sale or other disposition by the buyer of the stock in bulk.⁵⁶ In layman's terms, and assuming that the value of the assets being sold is paid by the purchaser at first instance but the sale is not in compliance with the BSA, the worst that can happen under the BSA is that the purchaser is effectively required to pay for the assets a second time.⁵⁷

In the recent decision of National Trust Co. v. H&R Block Canada Inc., the Supreme Court of Canada held that where there is an asset sale that is not in compliance with the BSA, the Court retains the discretion to consider all of the facts of the case to determine what, if anything, should be done to put the unpaid creditors in the position they would have been in had the BSA been complied with or whether a strict liability to pay, under section 16(2) of the BSA, would lead to an unfair result.⁵⁸ The Supreme Court commented that a creditor should not be placed in a better position than it would have been in had the buyer complied with the BSA; conversely, the non-compliant buyer should not be unduly punished. The Court held that a pragmatic accounting should take into account proper payments to priority-ranking creditors made as a direct result of payment to the seller of the bulk goods.

Subsection 17(1) of the BSA provides that an action to set aside or have declared void a bulk sale may be brought or taken by a creditor of the seller and, if the seller is bankrupt, by the trustee in bankruptcy of the seller's estate.

4.8.10 Limitation periods

Section 19 of the BSA provides:

No action shall be brought or proceeding taken to set aside or have declared void a sale in bulk for failure to comply with this Act unless the action is brought or the proceeding is taken either before the buyer complies with section 11 or within six months after the buyer complies with section 11.

QUESTION 5

5. Enforcement

By whom may action be brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3 above)?

5.1 Introduction

5.1.1 In the event of a company going into bankruptcy, the authority and powers of the directors are superseded following such an appointment and taken over by the trustee. Consequently, in most cases it is the trustee who has the power to bring actions, but there are a few exceptions to this rule by which an action may be brought by creditors or others directly.

5.1.2 The primary exception to this general rule is with respect to criminal proceedings which have been set out in question 2 above. All criminal proceedings are handled by the government prosecutor.

5.2 Criminal proceedings

5.2.1 The acts set out in section 2.3.2 herein are criminal offences in which the government prosecutor may bring an action against the directors and others involved. The trustee in bankruptcy of a company is under a duty to bring any such offences to the attention of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy who will, in turn, deal with the appropriate authority.

5.3 Civil proceedings

- 5.3.1 The trustee in bankruptcy is the party who will bring proceedings such as reviewable transactions, fraudulent preferences, settlements, and fraudulent conveyances, as well as proceedings under the proposed transfer at an undervalue sections.
- 5.3.2 With respect to the oppression remedy, the situation is somewhat uncertain. A creditor may be entitled to seek relief under the oppression remedy as a “complainant”. A “complainant” is defined to include a “registered holder or beneficial owner, and a former registered holder or beneficial owner of a security of a corporation or any of its affiliates”, “a director or officer” and “any other person who, in the discretion of a court, is a proper person to make an application”. Under both the OBCA and the CBCA, the term “security” includes a “debt obligation” and therefore the beneficial holder of a debt instrument qualifies as a complainant.⁵⁹
- 5.3.3 The courts have held that a creditor may be a “proper person” for the purposes of the oppression remedy.
- 5.3.4 There is conflicting case law on the issue of whether or not a trustee in bankruptcy can assert the oppression remedy on behalf of creditors. The argument in favour of allowing the trustee to be a proper person is that the trustee is the representative of the creditors of the bankrupt estate and has all the causes of action of the bankrupt. However, the contrary position states that the trustee in bankruptcy takes the property of the bankrupt as he finds it and that, subject to statutory provisions such as those dealing with fraudulent preferences and settlements, the trustee only obtains the rights of the bankrupt and no more. If a transaction was approved by the directors of the bankrupt, it follows that the bankrupt itself cannot complain that the conduct of the other contracting parties was oppressive. The rationale is that the transaction can be reviewed under the BIA and therefore the trustee has an adequate remedy.

In a recent decision, the Ontario Court of Appeal held that given the purpose and clear language of the oppression provisions in the OBCA, where a bankrupt is a party to an allegedly oppressive transaction, the trustee is neither automatically barred from being a complainant nor automatically entitled to that status, rather it is for the judge at first instance to determine in the exercise of his discretion whether in the circumstances of the particular case, the trustee is a proper person to be a complainant.⁶⁰

5.4 Other

- 5.4.1 Although it is beyond the scope of this study, directors are also liable to ensure that certain statutory trust deductions from employee wages are remitted to the government taxing authorities. These trusts include income tax, pension plan contributions and employment insurance. Liability also exists for goods and services tax and provincial sales tax and others. Governments have enforcement mechanisms against directors.

QUESTION 6

6. Remedies: orders available to the domestic court

In respect of the offences identified in Questions 2, 3 and 4 above, what remedies are available in the domestic court?

Offence	Remedy Available
BIA general	Where a person has suffered a loss or damage as a result of an offence committed under the BIA, the court may order the person convicted to pay to the victim or to the trustee of the bankrupt estate an amount by way of satisfaction or compensation for the loss of or damage to property.
Reviewable transaction	In the case when the court finds that the bankrupt entered into a non-arm's length transaction and the consideration was conspicuously greater or less than the fair market value of the goods or services contracted for, than the court may order that the other party to the transaction pay to the trustee the difference between the consideration actually paid and the fair market value.
Fraudulent preference	When the court holds that a transaction is a fraudulent preference, then the transaction is void as against the trustee. The trustee has the right to recover the property of the bankrupt given to the creditor as consideration for the transaction.
Settlement	When the court holds that the transaction is a settlement, then the transaction is void as against the trustee. The trustee has the right to recover the property or proceeds.
Fraudulent conveyance	When the court holds that the transaction is a fraudulent conveyance then the transaction is void as against the trustee. The trustee has a right to recover the property that was transferred or the proceeds resulting therefrom.
Declared dividends	Where a corporation that is bankrupt has paid a dividend at a time when the corporation was insolvent or the payment of the dividend rendered the corporation insolvent, the court may grant judgment to the trustee against the directors of the corporation, jointly and severally, in the amount of the dividend or redemption or purchase price, with interest thereon that has not been paid to the corporation.

Offence	Remedy Available
Bulk sales legislation	A sale in bulk is voidable unless the buyer has complied with the provisions of the BSA. If a sale in bulk has been set aside or declared void and the buyer has taken possession of the stock in bulk, the buyer is personally liable to account to the creditors of the seller for the value thereof.
Oppressive conduct	Where a corporation acts in a manner that is oppressive to a creditor, a court can make any one of a number of orders as set out in Section 2.7.3.

QUESTION 7

7 Duty to co-operate

- (a) To what extent are directors (and others identified in question 3 above) obliged to co-operate with an investigation into the company's affairs following its insolvency?
- (b) Are any human rights laws applicable in the domestic jurisdiction in relation to any such obligations?

7.1 Obligation to co-operate with investigation into company's affairs

- 7.1.1 Where a bankrupt is a corporation, the officer executing the assignment, or such (a) officer of the corporation; or (b) person who has, or has had, directly or indirectly, control of the corporation as the official receiver may specify, shall attend before the official receiver for examination and shall perform all of the duties imposed on a bankrupt by s. 158, and, in case of failure to do so, the officer or person is punishable as though that officer or person were the bankrupt.
 - 7.1.2 Subsections 16(3) to 17(2) set out the duties and powers of the trustee in obtaining possession of the property of the bankrupt. Section 158 of the BIA imposes 18 duties on a bankrupt including:
 - (a) informing the trustee of all property that is under his/her possession or control and delivering it to the trustee;
 - (b) delivery to the trustee of all books, records, documents, writings and papers relating to the property or affairs of the bankrupt;

- (c) attending before the official receiver for examination under oath with respect to the conduct of the corporation, the causes of the bankruptcy and the disposition of property;
- (d) preparing and submitting to the trustee a statement of the bankrupt's affairs;
- (e) making or giving all the assistance within his power to the trustee and making an inventory of assets;
- (f) making disclosure to the trustee of all property disposed of within the period beginning on the day that is one year before the date of the initial bankruptcy event or such other date as the court may direct;
- (g) making disclosure to the trustee of all property disposed of by gift or settlement without adequate valuable consideration in the five year period prior to the bankruptcy;
- (h) attending the first meeting of creditors;
- (i) when required, attending other meetings of creditors or of the inspectors or attend on the trustee;
- (j) submitting to such other examinations under oath with respect to property as may be required;
- (k) aiding to the utmost of his power, in the realization of the property and the distribution of proceeds among creditors;
- (l) executing such powers of attorneys, conveyances, deeds and instruments as may be required;
- (m) examining the correctness of all proofs of claim filed, if required by the trustee;
- (n) in the case of any person that to his knowledge has filed a false claim, disclosing that fact to the trustee;
- (o) doing such acts or things in relation to his property in the distribution of the proceeds among his creditor as may be reasonably required for the trustee.⁶¹

7.1.3 By subsection 198(2) of the BIA, it is an offence for the bankrupt, without reasonable cause, to fail to perform the duties imposed by section 158.

7.1.4 Under an examination, a witness may claim the protection of section 5(2) of the Canada Evidence Act. This section does not permit the witness to avoid answering any questions on the basis that they may be self incriminating, but it does provide protection against self incrimination since the witness' answers cannot be used in any other criminal proceedings thereafter.

⁶¹ BIA, s. 158.

8 Appeals and limitation periods

- (a) What limitation period, if any, will apply to actions brought against the directors (and/or others identified in question 3) in connection with the offences identified in question 2?
- (b) Please indicate whether an appeal is available from the decision of the lower courts.

8.1 Limitation periods: BIA

- 8.1.1 The limitation period for bringing an action against the director for any offence punishable by way of indictment is five years from the commission of the offence. If the offence is punishable by way of summary conviction, then the limitation period is three years from the commission of the offence.⁶²

Limitation period for civil actions

- 8.1.2 In relation to any liabilities created by the BIA or in relation to breaches of directors' fiduciary duties, the limitation period, in provinces other than Ontario, is generally six years from the date on which the cause of action accrued. In Ontario, the limitation period is two years from the date on which the claim was discovered.

8.2 Appeals

Is an appeal available from the decision of the lower courts?

- 8.2.1 The courts of appeal are given the power and jurisdiction to hear and determine appeals from the Bankruptcy Court. An appeal will only be available, however, in the following cases:
 - (a) if the point and issue involves future legal rights;
 - (b) if the order or decision is likely to affect other causes of a similar nature in the bankruptcy proceedings;
 - (c) if the property involved in the appeal exceeds $10,000 in value;
 - (d) from the grant or refusal to grant discharge if the aggregate unpaid claims of the creditors exceed $500;
 - (e) in any other case, by leave of a judge of the Court of Appeal.⁶³

8.2.2 An appeal from the decision of the Court of Appeal is only available with special leave granted by the Supreme Court of Canada.

8.2.3 The courts of appeal are given the power and jurisdiction to hear and determine appeals from convictions and sentences in criminal matters. Such appeals must be filed within 30 days from the initial decision. An appeal will only be available in an indictable matter:

(a) against a conviction;

(i) on a question of law alone;

(ii) on a question of fact or a question of mixed fact and law with leave of the Court of Appeal; or

(iii) on any other ground with leave of the Court of Appeal; or

(b) against a sentence with leave of the Court of Appeal, unless the sentence is one fixed by law.⁶⁴

An appeal is available in summary conviction matters as of right with no leave requirements.⁶⁵

QUESTION 9

9 Foreign corporations

Do the legal provisions and procedures outlined above apply to both domestic and foreign corporations?

9.1 Introduction

9.1.1 The legal provisions and procedures outlined in the BIA apply to individuals and corporations. The BIA defines a corporation as including any "incorporated company, wherever incorporated, that is authorized to carry on business in Canada or that has an office or property in Canada". Banks, authorized foreign banks within the meaning of section 2 of the Bank Act, insurance companies, trust companies, loan companies and railway companies are excluded from the BIA.

9.1.2 In general, all the provisions of the BIA and CCAA relating to the administration of a Canadian company will apply equally to the administration of a foreign company.

9.2 Jurisdiction of Canadian Courts

- 9.2.1 If no foreign proceeding has been taken against the debtor, all the property of the bankrupt, both moveable and immoveable, vests in the trustee in bankruptcy when bankruptcy occurs. To obtain possession, the trustee may have to comply with the formal requirements of the law of the jurisdiction where the property is located, but legal title is conferred on the trustee by the BIA.

The BIA provides no specific criteria which will allow Canadian Courts to administer a foreign company. The Courts have developed a general test whereby they must find a sufficient connection with the local jurisdiction which may, but does not necessarily have to, consist of assets within the jurisdiction of the Court.

- 9.2.2 The Court may seek the aid and assistance of a court, tribunal or other authority in a foreign proceeding by order or written request or otherwise as the Court considers appropriate.⁶⁶
- 9.2.3 A foreign representative is defined in the BIA and the CCAA as meaning a person, other than a debtor, holding office under the law of a jurisdiction outside Canada who, irrespective of the person's designation, is assigned, under the laws of the jurisdiction outside Canada, functions in connection with a foreign proceeding that are similar to those performed by a trustee, liquidator, administrator or receiver appointed by the court. Under the BIA, a foreign representative may commence and continue a proceeding for a receiving order, interim receiver and for a proposal in respect of a debtor as if the foreign representative were a creditor, trustee, liquidator or receiver of property of the debtor, or the debtor as the case may be.⁶⁷
- 9.2.4 As noted in paragraph 9.1.2 above, the general principle is that following a receiving order being made against a foreign company, all the provisions of the BIA will apply in the same way as for a Canadian company.

QUESTION 10

10. Insurance

Is directors' and officers' insurance available in your jurisdiction? If so, to what extent will the availability of such insurance provide effective protection to directors against personal liability which may arise in connection with the issues raised in questions 1-9 above?

⁶⁶ BIA, s. 271(1); CCAA, s.18.6(6).

10.1 Directors' liability insurance is available in Canada

Generally, the coverage that is available to the directors will cover amounts that the directors are legally required to pay as a result of any claim brought against them as a result of wrongful acts, and includes damages, judgments, settlements and defence costs, but excludes fines, penalties, punitive and exemplary damages and any other charges deemed uninsurable. Generally, the coverage will also provide for reimbursement of the costs of a successful defence of penal charges brought in Canada against the directors.

In order to obtain this type of insurance, the directors and its officers must certify that specific standards are met in the operations regarding environmental issues and that the company does not, at the time of requesting the policy, have any exposure to the directors of the organization.

In addition, it is easier to obtain directors insurance for directors of the board who are not involved in the day to day operations of the business than for directors involved in the day to day operations of the business and in the decision making.

10.2 The standard exclusions in the directors' and officers' liability insurance can be grouped into three broad categories:

- (a) Those relating to exposures deemed uninsurable, such as:
 - Illegal personal profits or gains;
 - Reimbursement of illegally paid remuneration;
 - Profits or gains realized due to insider information; and dishonest acts – except defence costs.
- (b) Those relating to risks which are to be covered under other policies or for which no insurance is available, such as:
 - Claims covered by other director's and officer's policies, except for amounts exceeding the amounts covered by those policies;
 - Claims related directly or indirectly to pollution;
 - Bodily injury or property damage;
 - Failure to maintain insurance;
 - Claims related to employee pension or welfare benefit plans; and nuclear incidents.

(c) Those which are specific to the nature and purpose of directors' and officers' policies, such as:

- Pending or prior litigation;
- Circumstances known at the time the policy came into effect;
- Claims made by an organization or on its behalf;
- Claims made by directors or officers, except wrongful dismissal by former officers;
- Wrongful acts committed before the company became a subsidiary of the organization; and
- Service on the Board of Directors of companies other than the insured company or its subsidiaries.

10.3 Prior to obtaining any directors' and officers' insurance coverage the insurance company will require that:

(a) The Company's treasurer certifies that the following have been addressed and are being dealt with within the corporation:

- That the company is not in arrears in the payment of wages, benefits, valuation or any form of compensation;
- That there are no outstanding claims made by any employee or former employee of the organization for unpaid compensation;
- The organization is not in arrears in either withholding or remitting to the government agency any amount required to withhold and remit under the following statutes:
 - Income Tax Act;
 - Provincial Taxation Act (which is applicable to a specific location of the company);
 - Canada Pension Plan (Canada);
 - Unemployment Insurance Act (Canada);
 - Ontario Health Insurance Plan;
 - Act respecting Occupational Health and Safety;
 - Excise Tax Act (Canada) including Goods & Services Tax;
 - Pension Benefits Act, 1987; and

- Any other statute, regulation, order, judgment, decree or official directive of a government body, whether or not having a force of law, under which failure to withhold and remit such sums would give rise to a claim against the directors of the organization.
- (b) Directors and Officers involved with environmental compliance must certify that the following issues have been dealt with or are not occurring in order to obtain insurance:
- Employees are trained to handle waste and hazardous material and that they complied with the environmental laws;
 - That there have not been spills, releases, deposits, emissions or discharge of any contaminated materials, waste or hazardous materials except for (must advise of any issues); and that any such spills have been reported and remedied in substantial compliance with all applicable environmental laws;
 - The organization has obtained all necessary and required permits, licenses, and certificates of approval required for its operations under any applicable environmental laws;
 - All waste generated by operations or the organization has been delivered to licensed waste removers and disposed with licensed waste disposal firms as required with the environmental laws; and
 - The organization has not been subjected to any order, direction, notice of defaults, warrants or any pending order in relation to a violation or alleged violation of any applicable environmental law.

QUESTION 11

11. How safe is it for directors and others to incur further credit during the twilight period?

- 11.1 The details of directors' duties are considered above at question 2. There is a fiduciary relationship between the directors and the company and two primary fiduciary duties of directors are recognized, namely, a duty of care and a duty of loyalty.

Firstly, with respect to the duty of care, directors must act in an informed and considered manner. Directors should review all material information available to them and, with this information in mind, act with "requisite care". In Canada, this duty is codified in corporate statutes requiring directors to exercise the care, diligence and skill that a reasonably prudent person would exercise in comparable circumstances.

In the event of insolvency, even outside of a formal bankruptcy, directors of an insolvent corporation continue to owe their duties to the corporation.

See the discussion of this issue in sections 2.2.2 and 2.2.3.

Directors must also be cognisant of the oppression remedy codified in corporate statutes. The courts are in a position to grant appropriate remedies if the powers of the directors are exercised in a manner that is oppressive, unfairly prejudicial to or unfairly disregards the interests of any security holder, creditor, director or officer. This remedy is available whether the company is solvent or insolvent.

However, the potential for action to have an adverse impact on creditors and other stakeholders may be enhanced when the company is insolvent. In light of the possibility of an oppression remedy, directors must carefully consider the impact of any action on creditors and other stakeholders.

11.2 Business Judgment Rule

In the United States, the business judgment rule is the directors' primary protection. It is a presumption that, in making any decision, the directors acted on an informed basis, in good faith and in the honest belief that the decision was in the best interests of the corporation. In Canada, if directors follow appropriate procedures and act honestly, in good faith and in the best interests of the corporation in making decisions, courts generally will not second-guess the board's judgment, even if the judgment ultimately turns out to be wrong in hindsight.

- 11.3 Directors should act in accordance with the business judgment rule. They should avoid actual conflicts of interest, avoid preferential treatment of certain constituencies, disclose all potential director contacts or relationships that could create even an appearance of a conflict of interest, and they should act only with the requisite information and due deliberation.

In addition, directors should ensure that their actions meet the "fairness test". The demonstrable "fairness" of an action will provide protection if the business judgment rule is not applicable.

Directors should obtain advice of outside professionals for any significant board action, including advice regarding the application of fiduciary duties and alternatives to the proposed course of action.

Finally, directors should ensure that there is adequate support for their decisions, such as reports of officers or outside advisers, which should be obtained and then reviewed by the board and reflected in the records of the board's deliberations.

- 11.4 It should be noted that in a decision of the Ontario Court of Appeal, the Court held an officer personally liable for "inducing" a bank to extend credit to a company when it was in financial difficulty.⁶⁸ On balance, during the twilight period, further or additional credit should only be incurred if there is a reasonable probability that the debt can be satisfied.

APPENDIX

Summary of Canadian bankruptcy and insolvency law

Introduction

Canada and the United States are two of the world's largest trading partners. As a result, it continues to be important for lawyers and businesspeople on each side of the border to be aware of the other country's insolvency and reorganization regimes. The United States has, for some time now, had a comprehensive and generally effective reorganization scheme under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code. As a result of amendments in 1992 and 1997, Canadian reorganizations can now be effected under two regimes: the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act (CCAA) and the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act (the BIA).

Debt recovery

Before embarking upon a discussion of reorganizations and insolvency laws in Canada, we must first consider issues pertaining to the recovery of debts and the enforcement of security by lenders.

Types of financing

The two basic types of financing are secured and unsecured. Unsecured financings are generally governed by the contractual terms on which the loans were made. The law of contract is a matter of provincial law under the Canadian constitution. As is the case in most common law jurisdictions, except in very specific situations (e.g. mareva injunctions), there is no execution before judgment. What this means is that an unsecured creditor who is owed money and not paid must commence legal proceedings and obtain judgment. It is only after judgment is obtained that the assets of the debtor may be seized and sold to satisfy the debt. This can be a very slow and costly process.

Security may be taken against either personal property or real property. The interpretation of security agreements and their enforcement are, in general, matters of provincial law in Canada. The primary exception is "Bank Act security" under section 427 of the Canadian Bank Act, which is available only to banking institutions (as opposed to other lending institutions), and which is, essentially, only available to secure an interest in the debtor's inventory and receivables.

Real estate security is governed by provincial mortgage lending statutes, which regulate both the way in which such security is taken and the way in which it is enforced. In most common law provinces including Ontario (Quebec is a civil law jurisdiction), security against personal property is governed by the particular province's Personal Property Security Act (PPSA). The PPSA is legislation modeled substantially on Article 9 of the Uniform Commercial Code. As with Article 9 of the UCC, PPSA legislation governs the taking, perfection, priority and enforcement of security in the particular province.

Enforcement of security

Section 244 of the BIA provides that a secured creditor which intends to enforce its security on all or substantially all of the inventory, accounts receivable or other property of an insolvent person used in relation to its business, must send the insolvent person a notice of its intention in a prescribed form and manner. The secured creditor is then prohibited from enforcing its security for 10 days after sending the notice, unless the insolvent person consents to earlier enforcement. The BIA further provides that the insolvent person may not consent to a shorter time period prior to the issuing of a notice. Therefore, a secured creditor may not attempt to have the debtor contractually waive this requirement prior to the issuance of the notice.

A secured creditor may apply to court to appoint an interim receiver during the 10 day period or even before it starts to run if the creditor can satisfy the judge that it is necessary to protect the debtor's estate or the interests of the secured creditor. Once section 244 of the BIA has been complied with, there are a number of ways for secured creditors to enforce their security.

Self-help

In PPSA jurisdictions, upon default under a security agreement (including all forms of secured financings), a secured creditor is entitled to exercise self-help remedies and take possession of the collateral. Where appropriate, possession may also be taken by rendering the collateral unusable. A secured creditor who has taken possession generally has the right, upon certain notice provisions being complied with to either sell the collateral (by private or public sale, so long as it is commercially reasonable), to recover the indebtedness, or to foreclose and take the collateral in satisfaction of the debt. However, should the debtor or others with an interest in the collateral object to a foreclosure, the secured creditor will be required to sell the collateral. Exercising foreclosure extinguishes the debt and prevents recovery of any deficiency, whereas the sale process does not.

Appointment of receiver

Where provided for in the security agreement, a secured creditor may have the right to appoint a private receiver or receiver and manager to take possession of and realize upon the collateral on behalf of the secured creditor. This is often done where the secured creditor desires the assistance of an accounting firm to act as its agent to commence the realization process.

A secured creditor also has the right to seek the appointment of a court-appointed receiver or receiver and manager to assist in the enforcement or realization process.

This remedy is usually used where difficulty is expected in exercising self-help remedies or appointing a private receiver, or where the secured party wishes to obtain the protection of a court appointment. As a result of the court's involvement, this process is generally slower and more costly, but does allow the secured creditor to have its enforcement and realization process approved by the court so as to minimize the risk of criticism or lender liability issues.

Liquidation

The liquidation of most businesses in Canada is conducted under the BIA. Upon the bankruptcy of a debtor, whether voluntarily or upon the petition of a creditor, the BIA imposes a stay of proceedings in respect of the debtor. In the liquidation context, the stay of proceedings does not generally apply to secured creditors (the scope of the stay of proceedings in a Proposal under the BIA is discussed below), who are free to exercise their rights of self-help or to otherwise realize on their security outside of the BIA. There is one exception to this rule, which has been guarded jealously by Canadian Bankruptcy Courts. Upon the application of the debtor, the Bankruptcy Court may, in exceptional cases, stay the rights of a secured creditor for up to six months. For the most part, however, upon bankruptcy, secured creditors may proceed to realize upon their collateral with impunity.

Reorganizations

As with Chapter 11 of the U.S. Code, the purpose of Canadian reorganization laws is to allow a financially troubled business to remain in possession of its assets and restructure its affairs under the court's supervision so as to avoid liquidation and the consequent loss of jobs and goodwill. The two primary statutory options for reorganizing a financially troubled business in Canada are the CCAA and Proposals under the BIA.

CCAA

Generally

The CCAA is a federal statute which was enacted in the 1930s, but which has become a favourite refuge of Canadian companies in financial difficulty. Its popularity is largely due to the fact that, unlike the pre-1992 Canadian Bankruptcy Act, the CCAA can be used to stay non-creditors, secured creditors and unsecured creditors while restructuring the company's secured and unsecured debt. The practical aspects of a CCAA proceeding are, after its commencement, similar to Chapter 11 proceedings. In fact, the CCAA might be thought of as Chapter 11 without legislative rules.

Procedure

CCAA proceedings are commenced by the issuance of a court order upon an application brought by either the debtor or its creditors. Most often the debtor brings the application itself. Generally, the application seeks:

- a declaration from the court that the debtor is a corporation to which the CCAA applies;
- an order that the debtor file a plan of arrangement within a certain time frame and hold meetings of classes of creditors; and an interim stay of all actions, suits and other proceedings against the debtor.
- A debtor will be a corporation to which the CCAA applies if:
 - it is a Canadian company, has assets in Canada or carries on business in Canada;
 - it is insolvent or has committed an act of bankruptcy (a defined term in the BIA); and
 - it has outstanding indebtedness in excess of $5 million.

Stay of proceedings

The most attractive feature of CCAA protection, from a debtor's perspective, is probably the discretion given to the court in granting a stay of proceedings. The CCAA permits the court to order a stay of proceedings, which generally will be imposed against all creditors, secured and unsecured, landlords and other persons who are not creditors of the company, to prevent them from exercising contractual rights which would make it difficult, if not impossible, for the company to proceed with its reorganization. Due to this discretion and the fact that the debtor brings the application, there is flexibility to "tailor" the stay to the particular circumstances of the case.

CCAA proceedings are commenced in the courts of one province only. Since the CCAA does not itself impose the stay of proceedings, the court's initial order generally requests the assistance of courts in other jurisdictions, including the U.S., to enforce its terms.

Initial order

The CCAA provides that the initial stay of proceeding can only be for 30 days, after which extensions are in the discretion of the court on notice to interested parties.

Monitor

Although it is the exception rather than the rule for a trustee or monitor to be appointed in a Chapter 11 bankruptcy in the United States, it is a legislative requirement in CCAA proceedings for the court to appoint a monitor to supervise and assist in the preparation of financial information regarding the debtor and the plan of arrangement itself. Generally, the monitor is one of the major accounting firms, whose role is also to report to the court and the creditors on the company's activities and to ensure that the relative positions of the creditors remain the same pending voting and approval of the plan.

DIP financing

Unlike 11 U.S.C. § 364, there is currently no statutory provision in Canada which addresses the subject of the debtor obtaining credit during a reorganization. DIP financing has been authorized by the courts, but in most cases with the consent of secured creditors affected by such financing. Judges have, however, using their inherent jurisdiction, authorized the use of DIP financing in CCAA cases. To a limited extent, the Court has allowed the security given to DIP lenders to rank prior to that of other secured creditors. Views regarding the permitted use of DIP financing in BIA proposals has been mixed.

Proposed insolvency legislation would provide the Court with authority to allow the lien given by the DIP lender to rank prior to other existing security interests, on notice to such existing secured creditors. In deciding whether to make such an order, the Court will be required to consider several factors, including the period during which the company is expected to be subject to court proceedings; how the company's business and financial affairs are to be managed during the proceedings; whether management has the confidence of its major creditors; whether the loan would enhance the prospects of a viable compromise; the nature and value of the company's property; whether any creditor would be materially prejudiced as a result; and the monitor's report, if any.

In the course of preparing the plan of arrangement, the debtor must separate its creditors into classes according to their interests. Generally, those creditors with similar economic interests (a "commonality of interest") are grouped together into a class. Often, there is one large class of unsecured creditors and a few classes of secured, depending upon issues such as the type of security held and its priority. However, it is possible for creditors to be included in more than one class in respect of any specific debt, particularly with respect to secured creditors who have under secured exposure. As with Chapter 11 proceedings, the classification of creditors is essential to the success of any CCAA plan.

Once the plan has been finalized, formal meetings of the creditor classes are held to vote on the plan. The corporation generally distributes an information circular with the notice of meeting to all creditors who will be affected by the plan. Information circulars contain details of the company's financial condition, an explanation of the plan and its effects on the creditors and an estimate of the liquidation value of the company's assets.

The general consensus among Canadian practitioners is that, in most cases, the plan must be accepted by the requisite statutory majority of each class of creditors in order to be sanctioned by the court. The statutory majority for each class of creditors is a majority in number and two-thirds in value of the claims of that class present and voting in person or by proxy.

Court sanction

If the statutory majority of any class approves the plan and the plan is sanctioned by the court, every creditor in that class will be bound by the plan. Once approved by the requisite majority of creditors, the plan must be sanctioned by the court before it can be effective. The court will only sanction the plan if it is satisfied that the plan is fair and reasonable. Once this has been done, the plan is binding on all classes of creditors who have accepted the plan, as if it were a contract between the debtor and those creditors.

The primary advantages of the CCAA include the ability to obtain a broadly worded stay order and the flexibility accorded the debtor by the lack of a comprehensive legislative framework.

There are, however, disadvantages to this procedure. First, there is no certainty that relief will be granted; relief is completely in the discretion of the court and there are precedents for the rejection of applications on a number of grounds, both technical and substantive. In addition, due to the high level of court supervision and the lack of a specific statutory framework, the costs incurred in a CCAA reorganization can be prohibitive.

Commercial reorganizations under the BIA

Commercial reorganizations under the BIA are conducted by way of "Proposals", which may be made by an "insolvent person", a receiver, a liquidator, a bankrupt or the trustee of the bankrupt's estate. By definition, an "insolvent person" includes all forms of business entities and, therefore, the BIA's proposal provisions are not restricted to corporate entities. Unlike Chapter 11 reorganizations, a proposal under the BIA must name a licensed trustee in bankruptcy to act as trustee under the proposal. The trustee under a proposal has a number of legislatively mandated duties and responsibilities in respect of the debtor and the proposal itself, including assisting with the preparation of financial information regarding the debtor and reporting to both the court and creditors. A proposal is initiated when it is filed with the Official Receiver, the federal government appointee responsible for administering the BIA.

Proposals under the BIA may be made to creditors generally or to classes of creditors, both secured and unsecured. Proposals under the BIA may specifically deal with those secured creditors which the debtor wishes, in some way, to compromise; provided that, where a proposal is made to secured creditors in a particular class, the proposal must be made to all secured creditors in that class.

Unlike Chapter 11 filings, proposals may only be initiated by the debtor or a person acting on behalf of the debtor (including the debtor's trustee in bankruptcy). A creditor cannot commence a proposal. Petitions brought by creditors against a debtor under the BIA may only seek its liquidation.

Notice of intention to file a proposal

Reorganizations under the BIA are commenced by the debtor filing either a proposal or a notice of intention to file a proposal. A notice of intention is a simple one page statement signed by the debtor and filed with the Official Receiver, and which must include the consent of a trustee in bankruptcy who has agreed to act as trustee under the proposal and a list of all creditors with claims exceeding $250. It is interesting to note that only an "insolvent person" may initiate a reorganization by filing a notice of intention; a bankrupt, trustee, receiver or liquidator is not entitled to do so. Thus, it is clear that the notice of intention provisions are intended to create a procedure for the reorganization of troubled businesses which are not yet subject to bankruptcy or receivership proceedings.

The trustee named in the proposal or the notice of intention is required to notify all known creditors of the filing and, in the case of a proposal, the date of the meeting of creditors to consider the proposal. As well, the debtor must file, and the trustee must verify, cash flow statements in connection with the commencement of a reorganization under the BIA.

In a Chapter 11 reorganization, subject to the discretion of the courts, the debtor has 120 days within which it is the only party which may file a plan and a further 60 days to seek acceptance of that plan by creditors before other parties can propose plans.

Often, six months time is given, as a minimum, to reorganize under Chapter 11. Under the BIA, this is intended to be the maximum time period.

Under the BIA, after filing a notice of intention, the debtor has 30 days to file a proposal with the Official Receiver. However, this 30 day period may be extended, on application to the court, for up to a maximum of 5 additional months, provided that such extensions are solely for the purpose of enabling the debtor to file its proposal and that they may only be granted for periods of up to 45 days at a time. After the proposal has been filed with the Official Receiver, the trustee is required to hold a meeting of creditors within 21 days. The trustee must notify the creditors at least 10 days before the meeting. Therefore, by filing a notice of intention and a proposal under the BIA, and subject to the court's discretion in granting extensions, a debtor may provide itself with a 6 month period within which to formulate and obtain approval for a proposal.

Perhaps the most important provision of the BIA relating to proposals is the stay of proceedings. As with section 362 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code, the stay of proceedings arises automatically upon the filing of a notice of intention or a proposal and operates to bind all creditors, secured and unsecured, as well as the federal and provincial governments in respect of their rights of garnishment, etc., for various claims. The stay operates throughout the period from the date of filing of the notice of intention or proposal to the date of court approval and, in respect of those debts caught by the proposal, beyond. In Canadian bankruptcy law, this is a fairly radical concept, since secured creditors are now automatically precluded by statute from relying on clauses in their security agreements which purport to terminate the debtor's ability to deal with the collateral upon insolvency.

There are, however, certain exceptions to the application of this stay. With respect to secured creditors, those who actually took possession of secured assets before the debtor filed its notice of intention or proposal are excluded, as are those who actually gave a notice of intention to enforce their security more than 10 days prior to the debtor's notice of intention or proposal. As well, the stay does not apply to secured creditors who are not included within the debtor's proposal, or who are in a class of secured creditors which has rejected the proposal. In addition, secured creditors have the statutory right to apply to the court to lift the stay of proceedings where they can show that their security position is deteriorating or detrimentally affected by the stay imposed under the proposal.

The stay provisions of the BIA prohibit the termination of contracts entered into between third parties and the debtor. Upon the filing of a notice of intention or proposal, any party to an agreement with the debtor is prohibited from terminating, amending or claiming an accelerated payment under the agreement as a result of the debtor's insolvency, or its filing of a notice of intention or a proposal. With respect to leases, lessors and licensors are precluded from terminating their agreements by reason of pre-filing defaults or arrears in payments. As well, the BIA provides that these prohibitions cannot be waived or varied in advance by contract. However, persons affected by these provisions are entitled to require post-filing payments to be made in cash, and are not required to make further advances of money or credit.

Disclaimer of commercial leases

Under previous bankruptcy legislation in Canada, trustees in bankruptcy were able to disclaim leases and thereby terminate lease obligations. However, unlike their U.S. counterparts, prior to 1992 debtors were not able to terminate lease obligations in proposals.

Under the BIA, a debtor who has filed a notice of intention and has determined, in the course of preparing its proposal, that it must reduce its lease obligations, is given the option of disclaiming any one or more of its commercial leases on 30 days written notice to the respective landlords. It is important to note, however, that such a notice may only be delivered between the filing of a notice of intention to make a proposal and the filing of the proposal, or on the filing of a proposal.

In connection with such a disclaimer, the landlord has no claim for accelerated rent (as it might in a bankruptcy) and becomes entitled to file a proof of claim in the proposal. The proposal itself must state whether the landlords with disclaimed leases are to be placed in their own class as creditors or with other unsecured creditors. As well, the proposal must indicate whether the landlords may file a proof of claim for their actual losses as a result of the disclaimer, or for an amount equal to the lesser of (i) the aggregate of the rent under the lease for the next year plus 15% of the rent for the remainder of the term of the lease after that year, and (ii) three years rent under the lease. Of course, the proposal will also detail the compromise which the debtor proposes for such claims.

A landlord may object to a proposed disclaimer by applying to the court for a declaration that the disclaimer does not apply to a particular lease. On such an application, the court must make the declaration unless the debtor satisfies the court that it will be unable to make a viable proposal to its creditors without being able to disclaim all of the leases in question.

In general, all unsecured creditors will be placed in one class. However, there may be circumstances in which there will be more than one class of unsecured creditors. As with the CCAA, secured creditors will generally be included in the same class if their interests are sufficiently similar to give them a "commonality of interest". The BIA provides criteria to assist in this determination and also grants the court the power to classify creditors.

Due to the flexibility of proposals under the BIA, a debtor may choose to exclude a secured creditor or group of secured creditors from its proposal. Therefore, a debtor is able to select those secured creditors on which it wishes to impose a stay of proceedings.

Voting and approval

Meetings of creditors to vote on the proposal must be held within 21 days of the filing of the proposal with the Official Receiver. All classes of creditors to which the proposal has been made must vote. However, even if one or more of the classes of secured creditors rejects the proposal, that will not defeat the proposal. Rather, a proposal's acceptance or rejection is based upon the vote of unsecured creditors.

Therefore, a proposal will be accepted if it has the support of a majority in number and two-thirds in value of each class of unsecured creditors who vote in favour of the proposal. Any class of secured creditors which has rejected a proposal accepted by the unsecured creditors will not be bound by that proposal or the stay of proceedings and they may exercise their remedies as they see fit.

If the requisite majorities of unsecured creditors do not approve the proposal, the debtor is automatically deemed bankrupt with effect as of the earlier of the date of filing of the notice of intention, the proposal or the first bankruptcy petition lodged against the debtor. Further, if a debtor defaults in the performance of a proposal and the default is not waived or remedied, the trustee is required to inform all of the creditors and the Superintendent of Bankruptcy. Such default permits creditors to apply to the court to have the debtor placed into bankruptcy immediately.

After acceptance of a proposal by the unsecured creditors, the trustee must apply to the court to have it approved.

It is clear that the Canadian government has taken great strides towards creating an effective and comprehensive reorganization framework under the BIA. It is clear that two of the primary advantages are the broadened stay provisions and the ability to deal adequately with commercial landlords in the framework of a proposal. Among the disadvantages are the fact that failure of a proposal results in automatic bankruptcy, the stay provisions are limited to a period of 6 1/2 months, regardless of the complexity of the matter at hand, and the fact that the requirement to continually return to the court for extensions of the stay period may prove quite costly.

General provisions

The BIA contains a number of other provisions which have a significant impact on insolvency practice in Canada.

Rights of unpaid suppliers

Section 81.1 of the BIA guarantees the rights of unpaid suppliers to repossess their goods in certain circumstances. Upon the appointment of a receiver over all or substantially all of the assets of the debtor, or upon the debtor's bankruptcy, suppliers of that debtor may have access to repossess their goods if they present a written demand for repossession to the debtor, the trustee or receiver containing the details of every supply transaction within the 30 day period immediately preceding the demand for repossession. The trustee, receiver or debtor, upon receipt of such demand, must determine whether to admit the claim and, if so, must so notify the supplier. The supplier then has 10 days after receipt of the notice to exercise its rights. If it fails to do so within the 10 day period, those rights will disappear.

The unpaid supplier's rights extend only to that portion of the goods supplied for which it has not been paid in full. In addition, the right only exists if:

- the goods are in the possession of the debtor, the trustee or the receiver;
- they are identifiable;
- they are in the same state as they were on delivery; and they have not been re-sold at arm's length.

As well, the right may be extinguished upon payment by the trustee, receiver or debtor of the outstanding balance.

In practical terms, upon the bankruptcy or receivership of a debtor, the receiver or the trustee is required to notify all creditors. A supplier, upon receiving notice of bankruptcy or receivership will issue a written demand for repossession of all goods which they have supplied in the previous 30 days and which have not been fully paid for. Upon receiving such a demand, the debtor, trustee or receiver will review the transaction and determine whether to admit the claim. If so, the trustee, receiver or debtor must respond to the supplier indicating that its claim has been accepted. The supplier then has 10 days to return and repossess, at its own expense, that portion of the goods which remain unpaid for.

The Report of the Standing Senate Committee on Banking Trade and Commerce has recommended that the BIA be amended to repeal, subject to the noted exception, the provisions that provide protection for unpaid suppliers of goods to bankrupt companies. It recommended that the provisions that protect the rights of farmers, fishers and aquaculturalists as suppliers be retained.

Receiver's duties and responsibilities

The provisions of the BIA relating to receivers apply to both privately and court-appointed receivers. Part XI of the BIA imposes an obligation on receivers to notify the Superintendent in Bankruptcy and each creditor within 10 days of being appointed. This is a continuing obligation which requires the receiver to provide notice to any additional unsecured creditor of which it becomes aware during its appointment.

In an attempt to increase both the accountability of receivers and supervision of their actions, the BIA requires receivers to prepare and file both interim and final reports and statements of account. Copies of each report must be provided to the Superintendent of Bankruptcy, the debtor and any creditor who requests a copy.

The BIA requires receivers, by statute, to act honestly and in good faith, and to deal with the property of the insolvent person in a commercially reasonable manner. At any time after the receiver takes possession and control of the property, any interested party, including unsecured creditors, may apply to the court to review the receiver's actions. If the court believes that the receiver, the secured creditor or the debtor has not complied with their respective duties, the court may direct them to carry out such duties or preclude the receiver or secured creditor from realizing on any property until the duty has been complied with.

As well, the BIA provides limited protection for receivers in that no action lies against a receiver for loss or damage arising from its reports if they are prepared in good faith and in compliance or intended compliance with the BIA.

Limited environmental protection for receivers and trustees in bankruptcy

Environmental liabilities have become a major concern in Canada, both for creditors wishing to realize on security over real property and for receivers and trustees in bankruptcy in agreeing to act. The BIA provides that receivers and trustees in bankruptcy are not personally liable for any environmental damage which occurred either before or after the date of their appointment, unless the damage resulted from the failure of the receiver or the trustee, as the case may be, to exercise due diligence. Receivers and trustees in bankruptcy, however, must still comply with any reporting requirements imposed by environmental legislation at the federal or provincial level.

CHINA

Introduction

Since the publication of the second edition of the Directors in the Twilight Zone in 2005, the Company Law and the bankruptcy law regimes in China have experienced comprehensive reforms. The new Company Law and the new Enterprise Bankruptcy Law were promulgated by the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress on 27 October 2005 and 27 August 2006 respectively. They were entered into force on 1 January 2006 and 1 June 2007 respectively. Both of these laws are welcomed by scholars and practitioners in establishing a uniform and coherent system, closing the gap of domestic rules with the generally accepted international standards in corporate and bankruptcy practice, introducing new mechanisms of developed economies into China, and promoting market discipline and rule of law in the transitional period towards a market economy.

For example, before the adoption of the Enterprise Bankruptcy Law, bankruptcy cases in China were governed by three different laws applicable to state owned enterprises ("SOEs"), companies and other types of enterprises legal persons separately. Such a segmented system has been replaced by the new Enterprise Bankruptcy Law under a uniform framework. Moreover, in the old Company Law of 1993, there were merely less than 10 general articles set out to deal with company bankruptcy, dissolution and liquidation. The legal reform has not only rationalized the legislative structure by transferring all the relevant provisions to the Enterprise Bankruptcy Law, but also led to a fairly sophisticated enactment with 12 chapters and 136 articles. Since the adoption of the new laws, the Supreme People's Court and the state authorities have issued a series of interpretations, circulars and decrees in order to provide more detailed rules for the implementation of the new laws. The result is a new corporate law and bankruptcy law regimes are being developed.

Despite the impressive legislative progress, it should be noted that, China is a so-called socialist market economy where the business and legal environment may still be significantly different from other developed jurisdictions. More specifically, the government still has a strong hand and ideological influence on not only the economic development as the policy maker and the regulator, but also concrete company transactions and bankruptcy cases as a stakeholder. Such conflicting roles of the government may lead to lax enforcement, practical uncertainties, lack of independence of the judiciary, and various problems concerning corporate governance, business autonomy, fair dealing and transparent operation. Further, as a socialist country with a strong civil law tradition, judicial decisions are neither systematically reported, nor followed as precedents. As a result, this summary includes very limited case law due to the fresh implementation of the Company Law and the Enterprise Bankruptcy Law and the lack of reported cases.

Presently, China does not have a uniform business enterprise law. The current framework sees a dual-track of legislation: on the one line there are enterprise laws that are adopted based on ownership classification, such as State-Owned Enterprises Law (1986), Urban Collective Enterprise Law (1991), Sino-Foreign Equity Joint Venture Law (1979 as amended in 2001), Sino-Foreign Contractual Joint Venture Law (1988 as amended in 2000), and Wholly Foreign Owned Enterprise Law (1986 as amended in 2000). On the other line, the Company Law (1993 as amended in 2005), Partnership Enterprise Law (1997 as amended in 2006) and Sole Proprietorship Enterprise Law (1999) have also been introduced into China. As a result, it seems impossible to find consistent rules governing directors' liabilities and to discuss them one by one within this project. Thus, this summary will have its primary focus on the provisions of the Company Law, the Enterprise Bankruptcy Law and related regulations.

1. The start and duration of the “twilight” period

Since the “twilight” period concerns both transactions vulnerable to attack and personal liabilities of directors and other parties involved, different laws of China are applicable and need to be considered. Chapter 4 of the Enterprise Bankruptcy Law which defines the scope of the bankruptcy assets of the debtor enterprise sets out four types of avoidance powers with different chasing back periods. Article 31 of the Law allows the avoidance power to be exercised to rescind any transaction without consideration, at an obviously unreasonable price, upgrading an unsecured claim to a secured one, making payment for pre-mature debts, or giving up claims that the debtor enterprise may exercise within one year of the bankruptcy petition being accepted by the People's Court. Secondly, according to Article 32 a payment of unfair preference made within six months before the People's Court's acceptance of the bankruptcy case may be revoked where the debtor enterprise repays its debts to certain creditors while it is insolvent.¹ It should be noted that unlike other jurisdictions with a single and uniform insolvency test, the Enterprise Bankruptcy Law sets out two bankruptcy tests: insolvency test and balance sheet test. This approach is clearly intended to provide the People's Court with more discretion in making an insolvency declaration. As a result, application of Article 32 may be subject to some uncertainties. The third type of avoidance targets transfers or concealing of the debtor's assets in order to evade or fabricate obligations. Article 33 of the Enterprise Bankruptcy Law empowers the bankruptcy administrator to recover all these assets on the ground of void ab initio without specifying a timeframe. Finally, any assets of the debtor company seized by its directors, supervisors or senior officers by way of abnormal incomes or misappropriation shall be chased back subject to unspecified the period.²

Article 123 of the Enterprise Bankruptcy Law stipulates that a creditor may petition to the People's Court within two years of the termination of the bankruptcy proceedings, for further distribution, if the termination was made on the ground that no assets were available for distribution and assets of the debtor are recovered by exercise of the avoidance power or discovered recently. Accordingly, the "twilight" period where transactions are vulnerable to attack may start one year or even earlier (depending on the nature of the transactions subject to attack of the avoidance power) before the commencement of the bankruptcy case and last up to two years after the termination of the proceedings.

In terms of personal liability there are four types of conduct that may subject directors and senior officers to legal liability. They may be divided generally into two categories: criminal and civil liabilities. For the former, the Criminal Law of China sets out criminal penalties against wrongdoings of company directors, supervisors and senior officers in dealing with assets of their company, including concealing the company assets or making false record in the course of liquidation, transfer of the company assets at a price obviously lower than the market price, corruption or misappropriation for personal benefit causing significant losses to the state-owned companies.³ The penalties, depending on the gravity of the case, may range from detention, a fine, or potentially even the death penalty.⁴ As such, the duration of the twilight period in the criminal law context can be very long because the criminal statutory limitation may run from five years to 20 years depending on the gravity of the case.⁵

The Supreme People's Court promulgated The Provisions on Certain Issues Concerning Trials of Enterprise Bankruptcy Cases on 30 July 2002 ("The Supreme People's Court Provisions of 2002"). According to this judicial circular, as a measure to combat the fraudulent bankruptcy practice, the People's Court shall not accept a bankruptcy petition if the debtors is found to have evaded its obligations by concealing or transferring its assets.⁶ Even where a bankruptcy case has been accepted, the People's Court may still turn down the bankruptcy petition, if the conduct of evasion is found or the whereabouts of large funds of the debtor is unknown without reasonable explanation.⁷ In these circumstances the case may directly be referred to the state authority for criminal investigation.⁸

⁴ For example, under Articles 271 and 283 a director may be sentenced imprisonment for more than five years for unlawful misappropriation of large sum of company's assets. He may be even subject to the death penalty if he is a government officer and more than RMB 100,000 of the state assets are embezzled.

For civil liability cases, in addition to the period of time in which to exercise the avoidance power under the Enterprise Bankruptcy Law, Article 125 explicitly stipulates that directors, supervisor and senior officers shall be liable for violation of their fiduciary and due diligence duties causing the bankruptcy of the debtor and they shall be disqualified as such for three years from the end of the bankruptcy proceedings. Article 101 of the Supreme People's Court Provisions of 2002 further provides that the liquidation committee (under the new Enterprise Bankruptcy Law, this should be the power of the bankruptcy administrator) may take legal action against the legal representative or other responsible persons for damages caused by their concealing misappropriation, unfair transfer of the debtor's assets, changing security arrangement, payment of premature debts and giving up the debtors' claims. In this regard, the statutory limitation should be considered. According to Article 135 of the General Principles of Civil Law, the limitation should be two years, unless the law provides otherwise. The two-year period shall start to run when the party concerned knows or should know the infringement; but cannot be longer than 20 years.

To sum up, under the current legal regime it seems there is no single "twilight zone", but different time frames that subject directors and other persons involved to different liabilities, depending on the nature and gravity of their conducts concerned.

In practice, in any given case, the People's Court may also exercise its discretion in applying the laws. The bankruptcy of Harbin Purchasing Supply Centre in 1995 may serve a good example in this regard. In this case the Supreme People's Court found that the Centre had withdrawn most of its capital before it applied for bankruptcy of a wholesale market it established. Although the withdrawal took place beyond the reach of the avoidance power period, the Court allowed the recovery from the Centre according to Article 58 (1) of the General Principles of Civil Law, which states that a contract shall be void ab initio if it is used as a means for unlawful activity.⁹

Finally, it should be noted that in China, as a socialist country, directors of different types of enterprises may be subject to different liabilities. Most of the provisions of the Criminal Law mention above only apply to directors or managers of the state-owned companies and enterprises as measures to protect the state assets and public ownership.¹⁰ As a result, directors of those companies may have to face more severer liabilities with a longer "twilight period" as compared with directors of other companies.

⁹ The case was reported in the Second Economic Trial Division of the Jilin High People's Court (compiled), Applicable Laws and Documentation Format (Jilin People's Publishing House, 2000), at 51 (in Chinese).

¹⁰ Such as Articles 166, 167, 168 and 169 of the Criminal Law of 1997.

2. Actions potentially giving rise to liability for directors

Under the current Company Law directors owe their fiduciary duty to their companies, which include duty of loyalty and due diligence and the duty of compliance with the law, regulations and the articles of associations of the companies concerned.¹¹ More specifically, a director is prohibited from misappropriating the company's assets, depositing the companies assets in any personal account, providing, in violation of the articles of association, a loan or security to others without appropriate approval, dealing with company in conflict of interests, seizing the company's business opportunity, receiving bribes or secrete commissions, disclosing the company's secrets without approval, and other conducts in violation of fiduciary duty.¹²

Article 150 of Company Law stipulates that directors shall be liable for the damages to the company caused, in discharging their duties, by their violation of the law, regulations and articles of association. Moreover, directors shall be responsible for the resolutions adopted by the board of directors. They shall be liable for the loss suffered by the company due to the violation of the law, regulations and the articles of the company by the board resolutions. However, a director may be exempted if he has opposed the adoption of the resolution concerned and such opposition is recorded in the minutes of the board meeting.¹³ Article 125 of the Enterprise Bankruptcy Law further provides that directors shall be liable for the bankruptcy caused by their violation of fiduciary and due diligence duties and shall be disqualified for three years at the end of the bankruptcy proceedings.

In the course of company reform, the mechanism of independent director has been introduced as a means to improve corporate governance in China. Article 123 of the Company Law requires all the listed companies to appoint independent directors and the State Council as the Central Government is drafting a regulation in this regard at the time of writing. According to Article 50 of the Principles of Corporate Governance of Listed Companies of 2002, independent directors owe their fiduciary and due diligence duties to all the shareholders to safeguard the interest of the company, particularly the interest of minority shareholders. As such, a new cause of action against independent directors has soon emerged. In 2001 the China Securities Regulatory Commission ("CSRC") imposed fine against directors of Zhengzhou Baiwen Company after serious misrepresentation and insolvency were revealed. One of the independent directors lodged his appeal for reconsideration on the ground that his post was an honorary one and he did not participate in the company's management, nor received any honorarium. The CSRC rejected his arguments and later the People's Court dismissed his claim on the ground of statutory limitation. Although the court did not rule on substantive matter, it has been widely agreed that the case will have significant impact in the directors' duty and liabilities.¹⁴

¹³ Ibid., Article 113.

¹⁴ The case was reported and discussed in Feng Guo, Zhang Yan and Tao Guanghui (ed.), Cases in China Securities Market, People's University of China Press, 2003, at 93-116 (in Chinese).

Together with the enhancement of the legal liability of directors to the company and shareholders, the legal rules on creditor protection have also been improved in recent years. As mentioned above, the new Enterprise Bankruptcy Law streamlines directors' liabilities to creditors in the course of bankruptcy and liquidation proceedings. First, the avoidance power may annul transactions without consideration, below the reasonable price or with unfair preference or even fraudulent intention. Directors are also subjected to the avoidance power for returning the company's assets they misappropriated.¹⁵ Article 128 of the Enterprise Bankruptcy Law holds the legal representative and other responsible persons liable to compensate creditors for the damages caused by their violations in this regard. Article 101 of the Supreme People's Court Provisions (2002) also provides that the legal representative of a bankrupt enterprise and other responsible persons shall be liable for their unfair or fraudulent transfer of assets.

Secondly, in the course of bankruptcy and liquidation proceedings the Enterprise Bankruptcy Law mandates the legal representative of the debtor and other senior officers to cooperate in good faith. In particular, they are under the legal duty to take due custody of the assets, seals, accounts, books and documents of the debtor, faithfully answer questions to the court, the bankruptcy administrator and creditors, and not to leave their residence without the court permission.¹⁶ Violation of these obligations may lead to the court's summoning for questioning, admonishment and fine.¹⁷ Moreover, without the court's approval, a director and other senior officers shall not transfer any share of the debtor they hold to any third party.¹⁸

Thirdly, under the Second Provisions on Certain Issues Concerning Application of the Company Law of the Supreme People's Court ("Second Company Law Provisions of 2008"), directors of a company, together with shareholders shall be liable for losses caused for their failure to carry out the liquidation within the statutory period.¹⁹ This provision seems only applicable to voluntary liquidation when the company is solvent since it is linked with Article 181 of the Company Law concerning company dissolution. According to Article 184 of the Company Law, the liquidation should begin within 15 days of the taking place of the event stipulated either by the law or the shareholders' agreement. Directors may also be liable to creditors for disposition of company assets in bad faith,²⁰ or cancellation of the company's business registration using a false liquidation or without liquidation at all.²¹ For insolvent dissolution, Article 183 of Company Law provides that shareholders with 10 percent voting powers may petition to the People's Court to dissolve the company if the continuation of its operational and managerial difficulties would cause serious losses to the interests of the shareholders and other solutions may not be feasible.

As discussed above, the directors' liabilities may not be the same in companies of different ownership. For example, in addition to the general rules applicable to all enterprises, the Interim Provisions on Supervision and Management of State Assets in Enterprises of 2003 impose not only civil and criminal liabilities against the responsible persons who abuse their powers or neglect their duties causing the loss of the state assets, but also administrative disciplines, such as lowering their status rank or dismal.²² Moreover, unlike the provision of the Enterprise Bankruptcy Law, a person responsible for serious losses of state assets will face disqualification from appointment in any state or controlled enterprise for a minimum of five years to life.²³

The Criminal Law of 1997 includes some articles against directors' unlawful conduct in handling company affairs. Most of these provisions are stipulated as offences for the violation of state regulation of companies and other enterprises, such as unlawful profiteering by taking advantage of their position,²⁴ causing significant losses to the company by engaging in dealing with family members and friends,²⁵ negligence of duties resulting in significant losses to the company,²⁶ and seeking their own benefit at the cost of the company.²⁷ However, all these criminal penalties may only be applicable to cases involving state-owned companies and enterprises. The criminal liabilities against directors' encroachment of company assets are separately provided as crimes violating property rights, with severer penalties against directors of the state owned enterprises.²⁸ Consequently, the Criminal Law sets out different deterrence and punishment schemes against directors' wrong doings applicable to state owned enterprises and private companies respectively.

In considering the actions potentially giving rise to liability, the business and legal environment in China should be taken into account. On the one hand, the culture of market trust and credit is still weak as compared with other developed market economies. The legal protection to creditors, such as insolvent trading, is not available. Actions against directors' wrongdoings are still difficult due to the unsophisticated framework and lack of institutional support, including underdeveloped professional services and standards. On the other hand, the imposition of liability against directors thus far seems only to focus on the losses or damages to the company or creditors without paying sufficient attention to the mental state of the director concerned and the market conditions. Business judgment protection is not available as a defence under the current legal regime. Worse yet, the under development of professional services, such as accounting and auditing, may make directors more vulnerable in arguing, as a defence their case in the exercise of business judgment.

3. Other persons may be liable during the “twilight period”

Given the current corporate structure and business environment, other persons, in addition to directors, may also be liable due to their deep involvement in the affairs of the companies concerned in the “twilight zone”. First, the COMPANY LAW of China is based on the German model with a supervisory board parallel with the board of directors as an organ to monitoring directors’ performance for the shareholders. As a result, a supervisor is treated virtually the same as a director in terms of legal liability. As such, if supervisors fail to carry out their fiduciary and other duties, the same liabilities will be imposed against them. The Company Law of 2005 significantly expanded the supervisors’ powers in corporate governance, including examination of company’s financial condition, a motion to dismiss directors and senior officers, convening a general meeting, carrying out their own investigation into the company’s affairs by appointing professional firms, and to file legal actions against directors and senior officers to the People’s Court.²⁹ As a result, supervisors may be liable for their violation of the law, regulations, the articles of association, and their fiduciary duties causing losses or bankruptcy of the company³⁰ and damages to creditors.³¹

The Company Law of 2005 also for the first time defines senior officers, the controlling shareholder and the de facto controller of a company and subjects them to various legal liability. According to Article 217(1), senior officers includes managers, deputy managers, persons in charge of the financial affairs of the company, the secretaries of listed companies and other individuals specified in the articles of association. In general, a senior officer shall owe the same duties and attract the same liability as a director.³²

A controlling shareholder is defined as a shareholder who contributes or own more than 50 percent of the company shares, or whose holdings are sufficient to produce significant influence on resolutions of the general meeting although the holdings may not be up to 50 percent.³³ A non-shareholder may be deemed a de facto controller as a result of his actual control over the company through agreements or other arrangements.³⁴ Articles 20 and 21 of the Company Law hold shareholders, particularly the controlling shareholders and the de facto controller liable under the doctrine of “lifting the corporate veil” for their serious infringement of creditors’ interests by abusing the corporate entity and damages to the company through transactions with their affiliates.

In some cases bankrupt companies were established by government organs without sufficient capital to meet the minimum capital requirement of the law. In practice, even before the amendment to the Company Law in 2005 the People's Court has repeatedly held the government liable in this circumstance through judicial interpretation. For example, in Pin Ding Branch of Shaxi Oil Co. v The Oil Development Group of Bai City of Jilin, the Supreme People's Court held that the defendant company's veil should be pierced and the government office liable to the extent of the registered capital on the finding that the company, without any of its own capital, was established by the local government and the company's assets were later transferred to another firm formed by the same government office before a judgment was issued in favour of the creditor plaintiff.³⁵

The Company Law of 2005 introduced for the first time the one man company into China. However, the legislature, in introducing the one man company was worried about the potential for abuse. As a result, the shareholder of a one-man company, has not only to pay a much higher statutory capital of RMB 100,000 in full before the establishment, but also to prove the separation of his personal property from the company's assets, otherwise he shall be liable jointly with the company.³⁶

In addition, the promoters and shareholders of a company shall be liable for failure to make their capital contribution or withdrawal of their capital contribution after the formation of the company. Articles 31 and 94 of the Company Law require a shareholder who fails to make his capital contribution according to the articles of association to make the balance up and other original shareholders or promoters shall be jointly liable for it. Article 200 further imposes a fine of 5-15 percent of the unpaid or falsely paid sum against such a shareholder or promoter.

As a socialist market economy, the top management of all the SOEs and state controlled companies are still appointed by the government. As a result, the liability for abusing powers, neglecting duties and crimes leading to losses of the state assets are not limited to directors of the companies/enterprises concerned, but generally apply to all the responsible individuals.³⁷ Moreover, the government supervising authorities may also be liable for their unlawful interference with the business operation of SOEs or government controlled companies causing serious losses of the state assets.³⁸

The new Enterprise Bankruptcy Law of 2006 replaced the government controlled liquidation group with a new system of a bankruptcy administrator. Under Articles 13 and 122 of the Law a bankruptcy administrator shall be appointed by the People's Court when the bankruptcy petition is accepted and his duty ends at the time when the debtor's business registration is cancelled after the termination of the bankruptcy proceedings, unless there are unfinished legal actions or arbitral proceedings. Within the period, the bankruptcy administrator shall report to the People's Court and be subject to the supervision of the creditors' meeting.³⁹ He shall carry out his due diligence and faithfully discharge his duties.⁴⁰ In case of violation of his legal duties, a bankruptcy administrator may be fined and held liable to compensate losses of the creditors or a third party.⁴¹ Recently, the All China Lawyers Association has drafted the Guidelines for Lawyers Acting as Bankruptcy Administrator and circulated it for comments.⁴²

In the course of marketization, professionals have been playing an increasingly important role and their practicing ethics and standards are also rapidly developing. For example the Company Law has included a provision against assets appraisal, verification and certifying firms for their false reports and material omission. They shall be subject to a fine up to five times their income from the relevant case, revocation of the firm's licence, disqualification of the professionals involved, and civil liabilities to compensate the victims concerned, unless they can prove their own innocence.⁴³ The Supreme People's Court in a decision, which was approved by the Trial Committee as the highest trial authority of the court held the Housing Administration of Nanchang City liable for RMB 2.48 million as the damages to the bank that granted a loan of RMB 7 million on reliance on the Administration's appraisal of a flat as the collateral of the borrower. The Housing Administration was found negligent in verifying the property documents in violation of the professional standards, that rendered the fraudulent borrowing possible.⁴⁴

The Commercial Bank Law prohibits a commercial bank from granting loans on a credit basis to its affiliate or granting other types of loans with preferential conditions.⁴⁵ Further, Chapter 5 of the Law on Administration of Banking Regulation of 2003 in particular specifies administrative and criminal liabilities against violations of the banking law and loaning procedures.

The current law does not have clear rules on the liability of a third party in the "twilight zone". However, the very general and broad provision of the General Principles of Civil Law may always be relied on by the court to deal with a third party who had transactions with a company with knowledge of its insolvency or in conspiracy with the company or its directors. For instance, Article 106 provides that a natural or legal person shall bear civil liability for his violation of another's property rights. Articles 17 and 38 of the Enterprise Bankruptcy Law of 2006 subject a third party possessor of the debtor's assets to a legal obligation to return them to the bankruptcy administrator. Moreover, upon the completion of the bankruptcy proceedings, the guarantor and any third party who is jointly liable for the unpaid debts shall be responsible to settle the unpaid debts of the bankrupt enterprise.⁴⁶

4. Counterparties dealing with the company during the “twilight zone”

Generally, as discussed above, transactions with the debtor company within six months prior to the commencement of the bankruptcy may be vulnerable to the attack pursuant to the avoidance power if the debtor was insolvent at the time of such payments.⁴⁸ Certain actions within one year of the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings may be avoided against the counterparties dealing with the debtor company who received the assets from the debtor without consideration or at an apparently unreasonable price, or became better off due to their security status being upgraded at the detriment of other creditors, receiving the premature payment, or their obligation to the debtor being given up.⁴⁹ By the same token, insiders of the debtor company, including directors, supervisors, and senior officers shall not be entitled to the so-called abnormal income from their dealing with the debtor company by abusing their powers.⁵⁰

As a general rule, during the liquidation the company shall not continue to carry out business activities irrelevant to the liquidation.⁵¹ As a result, to what extent a pre-bankruptcy contract can be recognized, performed and enforced shall be decided by the bankruptcy administrator.⁵² Under the new Enterprise Bankruptcy Law, any payment to an individual creditor by the debtor after the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings shall be null and void.⁵³ Moreover, according to the “automatic stay rule”, all the civil lawsuits and arbitral proceedings that have started, but not completed yet, shall not be carried on further until the bankruptcy administrator takes over of the debtor’s assets.⁵⁴ Moreover, all enforcement proceedings shall also be suspended after the bankruptcy petition is accepted by the People’s Court.⁵⁵

Under Articles 25 (5), 26 and 61 (5) of the Enterprise Bankruptcy Law of 2006, the bankruptcy administrator, the People's Court and the creditors' meeting may all have power to decide whether the debtor may continue its business operation after the commencement of the bankruptcy proceeding. More importantly, as a result of the bankruptcy law reform in 2006 a reorganization system has been introduced into China with the key scheme of "debtor in possession" during the reorganization period.⁵⁶ In order to facilitate a smooth reorganization, secured creditors may not exercise their priority claims and further security may be created to support the continuing operation of the debtor company in the reorganization period.⁵⁷ Creditors of the debtor may also reach settlement in respect to the unpaid debts.⁵⁸ Thus, counter-parties may still be able to deal with the company in the "twilight zone". However, the rules of the current regime in this regard are still not detailed enough to provide clarity.

QUESTION 5

5. Enforcement actions

According to Articles 31, 32, 34, 35 and 36 of the Enterprise Bankruptcy Law of 2006, the bankruptcy administrator is the person who is empowered to petition to the People's Court to avoid unfair or fraudulent transactions against the concerned third parties, shareholders of the debtor company with unpaid contributions, and the directors, supervisors and senior officers concerned on behalf of the debtor or the creditors concerned to recover the assets of the debtor. The public security department and the People's Procuratorate may step in to carry out criminal investigations and prosecution needed in a case of serious violation that may trigger criminal liability.⁵⁹

The debtor company may have a cause of action against directors, supervisors and senior officers for breach of their legal duties and for violation of the law, regulations and the articles of the company resulting in losses to the company. They shall compensate the company for the losses caused by their wrong-doing and further be counted for the company of the unlawful income they made by means of corruption, misappropriation, and conflict of interest dealings.⁶⁰ If the company or the supervisors fail to take the legal action requested, shareholders may institute a derivative action on behalf of the company,⁶¹ or claim on their own names.⁶² Moreover, the creditors and debtor company may also sue the controlling shareholder and the de facto controller on the grounds of abusing the corporate entity⁶³ and abusing their status through transactions with their affiliates respectively.⁶⁴

In the course of bankruptcy proceedings or liquidation, creditors may take legal action against shareholders, directors, the controlling shareholder or the de facto controller of the debtor company for his failure to commence the liquidation within the statutory period causing losses of the company and disposition of the company's assets in bad faith or without liquidation.⁶⁵ The creditors' meeting or the creditors' committee has the power to supervise the bankruptcy administrator in the performance of his duties. They may take the matter to the People's Court if the bankruptcy administrator refuses the supervision.⁶⁶ The debtor or a third party may sue the bankruptcy administrator for damages caused by his failure to duly perform his duties.⁶⁷ The People's Court may also take its own initiative to penalize directors and other relevant persons for their refusal to cooperate, dishonest conducts and other violations.⁶⁸

The upper-level state department of the SOEs concerned and the State Commission of State Assets Administration and Supervision are empowered to discipline the persons responsible for serious losses of state assets due to their wrongdoing or the negligence of their duties.⁶⁹ This kind of cases may even lead to criminal prosecution.⁷⁰

6. Remedies: orders available to the domestic court

In addition to the criminal and administrative liability and penalties including disqualification as discussed above, this section will discuss the legal remedies for civil liability, which can be roughly divided into three categories:

- (a) civil compensation, which is widely used in all the stages of the "twilight zone" and can be applied to the debtor company, directors, supervisors and senior officers, the controlling shareholders, and the de facto controller of the company, the professionals and their firms, the bankruptcy administrator, third parties dealing with the company in bad faith for their violations of the law, regulations, the articles of association, breach of fiduciary duty or other wrongdoings;
- (b) restoration, which may include the return of the company's assets by company insiders due to their misappropriation, by third parties for their possession, reception through unfair preference or fraudulent trading, or by shareholders for their unpaid capital contributions; and

- (c) procedural measures and enforcement, which may include the “automatic stay”, adjudication of the disputes between/among the parties concerned in the bankruptcy and liquidation proceedings,⁷¹ and measures to compel return of the assets, account books and documents,⁷² and the presence of management of the debtor.⁷³

7. Duty to co-operate

The Enterprise Bankruptcy Law of 2006 and the Supreme Court Provisions of 2002 set out the rules governing the directors' duty to cooperate with the bankruptcy administrator and the court during the “twilight Zone” period.

First, when the debtor submits the bankruptcy application, it shall explain the cause of its losses and submit relevant accounting books, a detailed list of liabilities, accounts receivable, the employees' settlement plan, the record of payment of employees' wages and their social security and other relevant documents to the People's Court.⁷⁴ If the bankruptcy petition is filed by a creditor, after accepting the case the People's Court shall notify the debtor to submit all the relevant accounting books and documents specified above within 15 days.⁷⁵ A fine will be imposed against the responsible individuals for their refusal to hand over the books and documents or falsifying or destroying the documents.⁷⁶

Second, once the bankruptcy administrator is appointed the debtor shall hand over to the administrator⁷⁷ and shall not make any payment to individual creditors.⁷⁸ Moreover, Article 15 of the Enterprise Bankruptcy Law mandates the legal representative, financial officer and other relevant management of the debtor to take due custody of the assets, seals, account books and other documents under their possession, to carry out their necessary work and faithfully answer the questions according to the request of the People's Court and the bankruptcy administrator, to attend the creditors' meetings and faithfully answer the creditors' inquiries, not to leave their residence without the court permission, and not to appoint any new director, supervisor or senior officer. Any violation of these legal duties may lead to mandatory summon, reprimand, fine or detention by the People's Court.⁷⁹

⁷⁵ Ibid., Article 11.

⁷⁷ Ibid., Article 25.

Third, under the Enterprise Bankruptcy Law of 2006 both the creditors and the debtor may apply to the People's Court for reorganization. If the reorganization plan is approved by the People's Court, the debtor will take possession of the assets to carry on its business under the supervision of the bankruptcy administrator.⁸⁰ In the period of reorganization, the debtor and its management shall implement the reorganization plan in good faith and in a co-operative way with the bankruptcy administrator; otherwise the People's Court may upon the request of an interested party, may terminate the reorganization and make the bankruptcy declaration.⁸¹ The debtor enterprise may also reach settlement with its creditors. Such settlement must be made bona fide; a settlement shall be avoided by the People's Court if it is made by fraudulent or other unlawful means.⁸²

In dealing with a bankruptcy case, other People's Courts will have a duty to co-operate with the Court hearing the bankruptcy case. According to Article 36 of the Supreme People's Court Provisions of 2002, after the bankruptcy declaration, in a case where the bankrupt enterprise's properties have been sealed up, distrained or frozen in other civil proceedings, the People's Court that hears the bankruptcy case shall immediately notify the People's Courts that have taken the measure of sealing up, distraining or freezing the properties to cancel the measures and transfer them to the bankruptcy court.

With regard to the imposition of criminal liabilities in the "twilight zone" period, more detailed rules are needed. Thus far the concepts of self-incrimination and privilege communication have not been recognized in the Chinese laws. The Criminal Procedure Law of China explicitly stipulates that no person shall be found guilty without being tried by the People's Court;⁸³ but the Law mandates all the suspects to truthfully answer all the investigation questions which are relevant to the case.⁸⁴ Another concern in this regard is that the defendant's right of accessing to lawyers may be restricted during some periods.⁸⁵

Nevertheless, this situation does not mean that no human rights law is available in criminal proceedings in China. As a whole, China has made some notable progresses in terms of protection of lawful rights of defendants which is incarnated in the Criminal Procedure Law and relevant laws and regulations. In addition to the relevant provisions in the Constitution Law,⁸⁶ the Criminal Procedure Law contains provisions to safeguard the fundamental rights of the suspects. A director may rely on these articles to protect his lawful rights.⁸⁷

⁸² Ibid., Article 103.

⁸⁵ Article 33 of the Criminal Procedure Law stipulates that the suspect may not appoint his lawyer until the Public Security Office has completed its investigation and has transferred the case to the People's Procuratorate for prosecuting.

With respect to concerns of human rights at the international level China became a signatory to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights in 1998. The active preparatory measures have been taken to ratify this Covenant by the National People's Congress since 2003. China is also a member of United Nations Treaty against Torture and some other conventions relating to the protection of human rights.

QUESTION 8

8. Appeals and limitation periods

In the bankruptcy and reorganization period some appeal procedures are stipulated. For example, parties may appeal to the upper level People's Court against the ruling of the lower court not to accept the bankruptcy petition within 10 days of the hand-down of the decision.⁸⁸ Creditors who refuse to accept the court ruling on disposition of the debtor's assets and the distribution plan may request the same People's Court to reconsider its ruling within 15 days of the pronouncement of the decision. However, the reconsideration shall not stop the implementation of the decision, although it might be changed later.⁸⁹

Generally, according to Articles 135 and 137 of the General Principles of Civil Law the statutory limitation of civil actions shall be two years running from the time of infringement or the time the injured party knows or should know the infringement. This period may be a variable period subject to suspension⁹⁰ or interruption.⁹¹ However, under Article 137 of the General Principles of Civil Law, the People's Court shall not entertain a civil action if 20 years have lapsed since the infringement. As such the 20 year period is an invariable period, regardless of any suspension or interruption.

Under the new Enterprise Bankruptcy Law of 2006, creditors shall take the distribution of the bankruptcy proceedings within two years. If a creditor fails to do so, the People's Court shall distribute the assets concerned among other creditors.⁹² Moreover, creditors may petition to the People's Court for further distribution of debtors' assets that are discovered within two years of the termination of the bankruptcy proceedings due to no assets available for distribution.⁹³

⁹¹ Article 140 of the General Principles of Civil Law provides that a limitation of action shall be discontinued if suit is brought or if one party makes a claim for or agrees to fulfillment of obligations. A new limitation shall be counted from the time of the discontinuance.

Currently, there is no special limitation period applying to actions against directors and other officers. As a result the general limitation of civil and criminal actions shall be applied to these actions. Moreover, although both the Enterprise Bankruptcy Law of 2006 and Company Law of 2005 stipulate disqualification mechanisms against responsible directors, supervisors and senior officers, no detailed rules on the disqualification criterion, handling process and possible appeal procedures have been set out. Apparently, in this regard there is a legitimate concern with the due process for the professional judgment.

Where directors and other officers' conducts constitute criminal offence, the limitation period prescribed in the Criminal Law of PRC shall apply. In accordance with Article 87 of the Criminal Law of China of 1997, crimes are not to be prosecuted where the following periods have elapsed:

- (a) In cases where the maximum legally-prescribed punishment is fixed-term imprisonment of less than five years, five years have elapsed;
- (b) In cases where the maximum legally-prescribed punishment is fixed-term imprisonment of not less than five years and less than ten years, ten years have elapsed; and
- (c) In cases where the maximum punishment prescribed by the law is life-imprisonment or death, twenty years have elapsed.⁹⁴

Thus, the legally-prescribed punishment periods should be firstly decided according to the relevant articles in order to determine the limitation periods applying to criminal actions against directors. With respect to actions against them, there is no specific provision governing their appeals. Thus, their appeals against the decision of the first instance court in civil and criminal proceedings shall be governed by the relevant procedure laws.

Under Article 147 of the Civil Procedure Law, if a party refuses to accept a judgment of first instance of a local People's Court, he shall have the right to lodge an appeal with the People's Court at the next higher level within 15 days after the date on which the written judgment is served. Where a party refuses to accept a written order of first instance of a local People's Court which normally is used to deal with procedural matters, he shall have the right to file an appeal with the People's Court at the next higher level within 10 days of the service of the written order.

If a defendant in a criminal proceeding refuses to accept a judgment or order of the first instance court, he shall have the right to appeal in writing or orally to the People's Court at the next higher level according to Article 180 of the Criminal Procedure Law. The time limit as set out in Article 183 of the Law for an appeal or a protest against a judgment shall be ten days and the time limit for an appeal or a protest against a procedural order shall be five days. The time limit shall be counted from the day when the written judgment or order is received.

⁹⁴ The period for prosecution is counted as commencing on the date of the crime. If the criminal act is of a continuous or continuing nature, it is counted as commencing on the date the criminal act is completed. Article 89 of the Criminal Law of 1997.

An administrative proceeding may also be commenced by an enterprise against a government authority for unlawful interference with its business autonomy. The party concerned may first require the state department to reconsider its decision under the Administrative Reconsideration Law of 1999. Article 5 entitles the party to file an administrative action based on Administrative Procedure Law of 1989. According to Article 38 of Administrative Procedure Law, if a citizen, a legal person or any other organization applies to an administrative organ for reconsideration, the organ shall make a decision within two months from the day of the receipt of the application, except as otherwise provided for by the law or regulations. Anyone who refuses to accept the reconsideration decision may bring a lawsuit before the People's Court within 15 days of the receipt of the reconsideration decision. If the administrative organ conducting the reconsideration fails to make a decision on the expiration of the time limit, the applicant may bring a lawsuit before the People's Court within 15 days after the time limit for reconsideration expires, except as otherwise provided for by the law. The party may further appeal his case to the next higher level of the People's Court within 15 days after being served with the judgment of the first instance court.⁹⁵

9. Foreign Corporations

"Foreign Corporation" is defined by Article 192 of the Company Law of 2005 as "a corporation that is established according to foreign laws in a foreign jurisdiction". Foreign companies may carry out their business operation in China by way of a branch office, subsidiary, wholly foreign owned enterprise, limited liability company, joint stock companies or joint venture. Since the Enterprise Bankruptcy Law of 2006 applies to all types of enterprises with legal person status, the bankruptcy or liquidation, as applicable, of foreign branches, subsidiaries, investment companies and enterprises in China should be governed by the new bankruptcy law.

Article 196 of the Company Law provides that a branch of a foreign company shall not have a legal person status in China and the foreign company must be responsible for all the liabilities the branch has incurred in China. Article 198 in particular states that liquidation in accordance with the law must be conducted when the foreign branch is withdrawn from China. The assets of the branch shall not be moved outside China before the completion of the liquidation.

As far as foreign investment companies and enterprises in China are concerned, the law treats them as a Chinese legal person since they are registered in China under Chinese law. Nonetheless, the sensitivity of foreign investment has subjected foreign investment projects and enterprises to a set of special regulations. For example, the Ministry of Foreign Trade and Economic Cooperation ("MOFTEC" now renamed the Ministry of Commerce) promulgated the Liquidation Measures of Foreign Investment Enterprises on July 9, 1996, which is only applicable to foreign joint ventures and wholly foreign owned enterprises for their voluntary liquidation in China. According to Article 2, however, the Measures shall not govern insolvency liquidation.

Although there is no specific provision on whether transactions in the "twilight zone" applicable to foreign corporations, the rules of directors' duties and responsibilities shall be equally applicable to foreign companies in China. For instance, Article 197 of the Company Law stipulates that a branch of foreign company shall abide by the laws and regulations of China and shall not harm the social public interests of the nation. Thus, directors of foreign companies may be held liable if they commit unfair preference or fraudulent trading causing damages to the creditors, their companies or the social public interests of China.

It should be noted that the new Enterprise Bankruptcy Law of 2006 has introduced a provision to address cross-border insolvency for the first time. Article 5 provides that the legal effects of bankruptcy proceedings under the Enterprise Bankruptcy Law in China shall reach the assets outside the territory of China. In order to enforce an effective decision of a foreign court made in foreign bankruptcy proceedings concerning assets in the territory of China, an application shall be filed with the People's Court. The People's Court shall examine the foreign judicial decision in accordance with the law of China, the international treaties China has acceded to, and the reciprocity principle. The foreign ruling will be recognized and enforced if it does not violate the fundamental principles of the Chinese law, the national sovereignty, safety and social public interests of China as well as the lawful interests of creditors within the territory of China.

10. Insurance

The short experience of a market economy in China has not allowed for the development of a system of liability insurance for directors and officers (“D&O insurance”). Such insurance was not recognized by the government regulation until 2001 when the Chinese Securities Regulation Commission (“CSRC”) in its Guiding Opinions to Establish the Independent Director System in Listed Companies allowed necessary insurance arrangements to lower the risks of independent directors in performing their duties.⁹⁶ The CSRC further adopted the Principles of Corporate Governance of Listed Companies in 2002 which stipulates that with the approval of the shareholders’ meeting a listed company may purchase liability insurance for its directors; however, the liabilities of directors for their violation of the law, regulations and the articles of association of the company shall be excluded.⁹⁷ On this basis, at least four insurance companies have marketed their D&O insurance programs after Ping An Insurance Company launched the first insurance plan for company’s directors and high officers in Chinese market in 2002.

In recent years the increasing number of liability cases against directors and senior officers has focused more attention to the D&O insurance. However, presently only several listed companies have bought this insurance for their directors and senior officers. According to a recent report, among 1400 listed companies only 2 percent of them have purchased D&O insurance for their directors, supervisors and senior officers.⁹⁸ The underdeveloped D&O liability insurance in China should be blamed for a couple of institutional defects. First, the inadequacy of relevant insurance legislation gives rise to difficulties in the development D&O liability insurance. The current D&O insurance regime to a large extent is merely confined to the listed companies. The COMPANY LAW does not include any permissive or enabling provision in this regard. Secondly, given the fact that directors, supervisors and senior officers of many companies are still appointed by the government or have certain relationship with the government, the awareness of market risks has not well established. Thirdly, due to the lack of the legislative support and the underdeveloped corporate governance, the market risks and uncertainties in China’s transitional period towards a market economy are much greater as compared with other developed jurisdictions. As a result, insurance companies may have to take a self-protective approach by including too many exclusive and exceptional clauses in their insurance policies, which will inevitably in turn negatively affect the value of the D&O insurance programmes in the market.

⁹⁸ Chen Weijuan, The D&O Insurance of Listed Companies Shall Not Be Ignored, Faren (Legal Persons), Dec. 2007, at 78 (in Chinese).

As the market reform in China further develops this landscape may be changed soon. Since China's WTO accession more foreign and domestic insurance companies have introduced new products of professional liability insurance in the market. Moreover, improved corporate governance, the decrease of the state ownership and less government involvement will also help the development of the D&O insurance in China.

QUESTION 11

11. Incurring further credit and counter-party risks in dealing with a company during the “twilight period”

The Enterprise Bankruptcy Law does not prohibit the debtor enterprise from incurring further debts after entering into the “twilight zone” so long as they are fair and bona fide and meet the procedural requirements. For instance, after the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings the bankruptcy administrator has the power to decide how to deal with the contracts that have not been performed out yet and notify the counter-parties accordingly. If the administrator does not notify the counter-party concerned within two months of the bankruptcy commencement or does not reply the counter-party's request urging the performance within 30 days, the contract shall be deemed discharged. On the other hand the counter-party is entitled to demand security if the bankruptcy administrator decides to continue to perform the contract.⁹⁹

Although the Enterprise Bankruptcy Law prohibits unfair preference of an insolvent debtor by payments to individual creditors within six months before the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings, the exception under Article 32 may be applied if such payments can be proved beneficial to the debtor and its property.

Article 41 of the Enterprise Bankruptcy Law defines the scope of the bankruptcy costs, which include the legal costs of the bankruptcy proceedings, the costs of administration, liquidation and distribution of the debtor's assets and the remunerations of the bankruptcy administrator and other staff involved. Moreover, the certain debts incurred after the bankruptcy commencement shall be the common debts of all the creditors, such as debts incurred for performing the relevant contracts, managing the relevant assets, tort liabilities caused by the debtor and the bankruptcy administrator, and settlement of labour costs and social insurance for debtor's continuing operation in the course of the bankruptcy proceedings.¹⁰⁰

In order to ensure smooth implementation of a reorganization plan the priority claims of the secured creditors shall be suspended during the reorganization period. However, the secured creditors concerned may demand for exercising their rights if their interest may be hurt due to the damages to the secured properties or significant loss of their value in the reorganization. The debtor or the bankruptcy administrator may create further security for new borrowings for the continuing operation of the debtor company in the reorganization.¹⁰¹

Article 40 of the Enterprise Bankruptcy Law sets out some general rules governing set-off in the course of bankruptcy. A set-off shall not be permitted if the obligor of the debtor company did not obtain its obligatory claim against the debtor until after the bankruptcy petition has been accepted by the People's Court; the obligor of the debtor company obtained its claim against the debtor with the knowledge of the debtor's insolvency or bankruptcy, except the claim was obtained due to the performance of statutory duties or considerations within one year before the commencement of the bankruptcy petition. If the obligatory claim cannot be set-off, the counter-party may only participate in the bankruptcy proceeding as a general creditor for the distribution.

EGYPT

Introduction

Under the Egyptian legal system, there is no comprehensive legal framework regarding the duties and liabilities of directors of commercial companies, except for the ultra petita dispositions.

Basically such duties and liabilities are left to be decided by the mutual agreement of the partners or the shareholders of the company, provided that such agreement should be compatible with general mandatory rules of law.

Nevertheless in the absence of an agreement, such duties and liabilities shall be subject to the Egyptian Civil Code (Articles 516-520) in regard of civil partnerships. It should also be noted that these duties and liabilities vary according to the different type of commercial company in question. Under Egyptian law six types of commercial companies exist: -

1. General partnership
2. Limited partnership
3. Particular partnership
4. Partnership limited by shares
5. Limited liability company
6. Joint stock company

According to Egyptian Law there is a distinction between the terms “Insolvency” and “Bankruptcy”. The term “Insolvency” refers to the civil status of a person's patrimony in which the passive exceeds his assets causing inability to pay his debts while the term “Bankruptcy” refers to legal or physical persons of a commercial character when they stop paying their commercial debts. Accordingly, a civil partnership in financial difficulties will be subject to the Civil Code (Articles 249 to 264), while the above-mentioned types of companies will be subject to Chapter V of the Commercial Act No. 17 of 1999. Civil persons are subjected to less stringent rules than the rules of bankruptcy applicable to “merchants”. There is also a tradition of distinguishing between “commerce” and “trade”. Trade has the meaning of trading in goods and commodities; whilst commerce means trade and other assisting services such as transport and insurance. The 1999 Commercial Act referred to throughout this article regulates all of these. Egyptian legal practitioners distinguish “Egyptian commercial act”, from “Egyptian trade law” and this chapter refers to the wider definition of commerce.

The following persons are considered “merchants” according to Article (10) of the Code of Commerce.

1. All persons professionally exercising in their name and on their account a commercial activity; and
2. All types of companies whatever its purpose is.

Under Egyptian law, only general joint partners are considered merchants since they are personally liable for the company's debts with all their fortunes. Other 'partners' are not considered as merchants since they are only liable for the company's debts in proportion to their shares. This chapter is confined to the rules of bankruptcy of merchants.

A draft of a "Unified Law of Companies", may soon be issued which integrates all the different types of companies whether civil, commercial or investment companies, and will recognize the "one man company" as a type of the commercial company.

Following the Constitutional Amendment of 1980, Shariaa became the main source of Egyptian Legislation. However, due to the liberal interpretations of Shariaa Rules and principles which were adopted by the legislative committees, flexible rules or law have developed. Modern legislation makes a compromise with the traditional views of Shariaa Jurists: it is compatible with Shariaa spirit and concepts and at the same time accepts developments in commerce and society in fields such as banking, insurance companies and joint ventures in application of the principle of "Ijtihad" unanimously recognized by all Islamic schools. While the charging of interest was regarded by traditional Shariaa jurists as forbidden usury, moderate jurists allow reasonable interest rates. Egyptian legislation permits interest to be accorded by courts in both civil transactions (4%) as well as commercial transactions (5%) and may also provide for interest as determined according to the rate set up by the Central Bank in certain cases. Egyptian courts apply and adjudicate claims for interest according to the rules provided by the law. Pursuant to Article (227) of the Egyptian Civil Code, the parties may agree upon another rate of interest provided that it does not exceed 7%. However, under Article (233) of the same Code "the legal rate of commercial interest on current accounts varies according to the local market rate applicable, and capitalization is effected according to commercial usage". Moreover, pursuant to Article (50) of the New Commercial Code, amounts paid by a merchant for the sake of one of his clients enjoy a higher rate of interest which is the rate of discount of the Central Bank of Egypt (usually oscillating between 9 and 13%).

1. The start and duration of the "twilight" period

What is the length of the period ending with formal insolvency proceedings during which transactions entered into by a company are vulnerable to attack or are liable to give rise to personal liability on the part of directors and/or others involved in the management of the company?

- 1.1 The twilight period starts from the date when a company stops paying its commercial debts, and lasts until a final adjudication of bankruptcy is issued by the competent court, which has discretionary power to determine the date on which payment of debts was stopped. Consequently, although the start of the twilight period does not depend on the commencement of a formal insolvency procedure its duration does.

Thus, a merchant shall be considered in a state of bankruptcy if he stops paying his commercial debts following disturbance of his financial affairs. However, discontinuance of payment shall produce no resultant effect before a court ruling declares him bankrupt. (Article 550 of Law No 17 of Code of Commerce No 17/1999)

- 1.2 Moreover, A trader may be declared bankrupt after his death or retirement if he died or retired from trade while in a state of discontinued payments. The request for a declaration of bankruptcy must be submitted during the year following the death or retirement from trade business. This period shall not begin to apply, in the case of retirement, except from the date of deleting the name of the trader from the Commercial Register. (Article 551).
- 1.3 The court shall determine in the bankruptcy declaration ruling a temporary date for discontinuing the payments. (Article 561). This is subject to further court decisions amending such date of discontinued commercial payments. Accordingly, the twilight period maybe affected by further court decisions extending retroactively such period, but not more than two years back (Article 563).

If in the bankruptcy declaration ruling the date on which the debtor discontinued paying is not defined, the date on which the bankruptcy declaration ruling is issued shall be considered a temporary date of discontinuing the payments.

However, if the bankruptcy declaration ruling is pronounced after the death of the debtor or after his retirement from trade business, without defining the date of discontinuing the payment, the date of his death or retirement from trade business shall be considered a temporary date of discontinuing payments, until further determination by the court.

It should be noted that in defining the date of discontinuing the payment, the court shall make use of each deed, statement of act issued from the debtor and revealing a disturbance of his works or his attempts to continue his trade activity by illegal means or harmful methods to his creditors. This will include an attempt by the debtor to escape or commit suicide, hide his property or sell property or goods at a loss, conclude loans with oppressive terms or enter into irrational speculations (Article 562).

The court may, on its own motion, or upon the request of the Public Prosecution, the debtor, one of his creditors, the trustee of the bankruptcy or other interested parties, modify the temporary date of discontinuing the payment to the date of ten days after the date of depositing a list of the funded debts with the clerks office of the court, and after the lapse of this period the date defined for discontinuing the payment shall become final.

The date of discontinuing the payment shall not be moved back to more than two years prior to the date of issuing the bankruptcy declaration ruling (Article 563).

The merchant shall not be declared bankrupt because of discontinuing the payment of the criminal fines, taxes, duties, or social insurance dues (Article 555). However, this does not affect the privilege of the public treasury (Article 1132 of the Civil Code)

- 1.4 The law provides that the issue of the bankruptcy declaration ruling shall fetter the hands of the bankrupt from managing and disposing of the property. The dispositions made by the bankrupt on the day the bankruptcy declaration ruling is issued shall be considered as made after the issuing of the ruling, except for stock exchange operations taking place during the said date (see infra).

Accordingly, after the bankruptcy declaration is pronounced, the bankrupt shall not settle his debts, nor receive his due rights. However, if the bankrupt holds a commercial paper, its value may be settled to him at its due date, unless the bankruptcy trustee objects to such settlement (Article 590).

Fettering the bankrupt's hand from managing and disposing of his assets does not prevent him from taking steps to maintain and preserve his rights (Article 589).

After the bankruptcy declaration ruling is pronounced, no set off shall take place between the bankrupt's due rights and his obligations unless a link connects them together. This linkage exists if the rights and obligations arise from one contract, or a current account comprises them (Article 591).

Another related provision is contained in Law No. 93/2000 regarding the Central Depository system of securities. The provision stipulates that where there are transactions in the stock exchange (in Egypt or abroad) on the day of declaration of bankruptcy by the court against a party to such transactions, all such transactions effected on this day shall be enforceable even if the settlement is after the judgment of bankruptcy (Law No 93 of 2000 Article 52).

- 1.5 The restrictions in 1.4 cover all property owned by the bankrupt on the day the bankruptcy declaration is pronounced and property which devolves on him while he is in bankruptcy, but it does not include:
- (a) The property on which no attachment is legally permissible, and the allowance determined for the bankrupt as well as his family.
 - (b) Property which is not owned by the bankrupt.
 - (c) Rights connected with the person of the bankrupt or his personal status.
 - (d) Compensation payable to the beneficiary in a valid insurance policy concluded by the bankrupt before the issue of the bankruptcy declaration ruling. However, the beneficiary shall refund to the bankruptcy estate all insurance premiums the bankrupt paid from the date the court determines as the date of discontinuing the payment, unless otherwise prescribed in the law (Article 592).

- 1.6 The following disposals of a debtor's property may not be enforceable vis-à-vis the creditors if such disposals are made after the date of discontinuing the payment and before issuance of the bankruptcy declaration:
- (a) Granting donations in whatever form with the exception of small presents offered according to usage and practice.
 - (b) Settling debts before their maturity date, whatever may be the method of settlement. Establishing a consideration amount for settlement of a commercial paper not prior to its maturity shall be treated as formal settlement before the maturity date.
 - (c) Settling due debts with other than the object agreed upon. Payment by means of commercial paper or bank transfer shall be treated as settlement with money.
 - (d) All pawn, other consensual deposit and all liens to be determined on the debtor's property as a guarantee for a debt prior to the deposit (Article 598).
- 1.7 If the other party to the transaction is connected or associated with the bankrupt company, this may cast doubts on the transaction and the court may accordingly consider any disposal related to him as not binding. However, if any of the acts that is considered as a crime according to the Penal Code and the rules of the bankruptcy as noted below and if the crime is connected with an agreement concluded by the debtor or any person with one of the creditors to grant this creditor special benefits (particular lien) in return for voting in favour of composition, the criminal court may, motu proprio, pass a judgment decreeing the nullification of this agreement and compelling the creditor to refund whatever he laid hold of by virtue of that agreement, even though the court might acquit him. The court, upon the request of the concerned parties, may also pass a judgment decreeing the payment of compensation if necessary (Article 772).

QUESTION 2

2. Actions potentially giving rise to liability of directors:

- (a) In respect of which acts during the “twilight” period may a director be held personally liable or which may otherwise have adverse consequences for him?
- (b) In relation to each act identified in (a) above:
 - (i) Is any resulting liability against a director civil, criminal or both?;
 - (ii) Can a director be made personally liable in respect of the whole loss caused to the company or to the deficit to creditors?;

- (iii) Will liability attach to individual directors in proportion to their specific involvement?;
- (iv) Is there a specified period before commencement of a subsequent insolvency liability to attach to a director?; and
- (v) What defences, if any, will be available in relation to each offence?

2.1 Once the adjudication is issued, the director shall be restrained from managing and disposing of the company's assets, except for the procedures or acts necessary for maintaining and preserving the company's rights as mentioned above.

Following the adjudication of insolvency, the court shall appoint a bankruptcy trustee (receiver) who becomes responsible for the management and maintenance of the estate of the bankruptcy and representing the creditors and the company in all actions and works necessary (Code of Commerce Article 573).

2.2 Acts, which may potentially give rise to liability of directors, can be classified into the following categories:

(a) Acts which may give rise to criminal liability of the directors

In order for directors to incur criminal liability, they must commit one of the bankruptcy crimes. Under the Egyptian Penal Code, bankruptcy may amount to a number of criminal offences, regulated under Articles (328-335 of the 1937 Penal Code No 58 of 1937). Generally speaking these offences may be classified into:

(i) Crimes of fraudulent insolvency: punished by 3 to 5 years of imprisonment. The following acts are examples for crimes of fraudulent insolvency with each considered a felony:

1. Falsification of the company's books,
2. Embezzlement of or hiding part of the company's money or assets.
3. Fraudulent transactions.

(ii) Crimes of negligent insolvency: Crimes of negligent insolvency are punished by 2 years imprisonment, and constitute a misdemeanour.

Wrongful trading, preference, and negligently holding the company's books are considered examples of negligent insolvency.

(b) Acts which may give rise to personal liability of directors

Directors are personally liable under Egyptian Commercial Code in all of their fortunes due to financial losses suffered by the company or partnership if they are joint partners in the company.

Thus, if the company is declared bankrupt, all its joint partners including director partners shall be declared bankrupt. This shall comprise declaring the bankruptcy of the joint partner who resigned after the company discontinued its payments, if the request to declare the bankruptcy of the company is submitted within one year from the date the partner is registered in the commercial register as having resigned from the company (Commercial Code Article 703).

If a bankruptcy petition is submitted for the company, the court may also pass a judgment in bankruptcy for all persons who under cover of this company carry out commercial operations for their own account, and dispose of the company's funds and property as if they were their own (Article 704/1).

However, if it transpires that the company's assets are inadequate to settle at least 20% of its debts, the court, upon the request of the bankruptcy judge, may decree that all or some of the board members or directors, jointly among themselves or severally, shall pay all or part of the company's liabilities, unless they establish that they exerted in running the company's affairs, the same care as that of a keen and careful person (Article 704/2).

Moreover, the court, motu proprio or upon the demand of the bankruptcy judge, may pass a ruling decreeing the forfeiture of some of the rights to vote or be elected, of the company's board members or of directors who have committed serious errors leading to confusion of the company's works and discontinuation of its payments. (Article 704 /3).

(c) Acts which may give rise to civil liability to directors

Under this classification, any act that has caused a material or moral loss to the company or to any other person and was due to the wrongful conduct of the director, shall make him liable. In such a case the director's liability will be subject to general rules of Tortious Liability in the civil law, article (163 to 174). Joint liability shall result in this connection (specially for board members. (Articles 55 to 58 and 102 of the Companies Law No. 159/1981).

2.3 Evidence

Evidence related to crimes require that bad faith (mens rea) should be proved. Such evidence is subject to the discretionary power that the judge enjoys regarding evidence evaluation.

Evidence related to negligent insolvency are subject to the basic criterion of "The reasonable man" and principles of tortious liability under civil law (Article 163).

Thus, evidence may be accepted or refused according to the discretionary power of the judge in the light of the above mentioned rules and criteria.

QUESTION 3

3. Other persons involved with the company's affairs that may become liable in respect of their actions during the twilight period.

- 3.1 As noted above partners, co-partners, shadow directors, de facto directors and former directors may become liable according to Article (703) of the Commercial Code which provides that if the company is declared bankrupt, all joint partners thereof shall be declared bankrupt. This shall comprise declaring the bankruptcy of any joint partners who resigned after the company discontinued its payments, if the request to declare the bankruptcy of the company is submitted within one year from the date the partner is registered in the commercial register as having resigned from the company.

The court shall pass a ruling in which it pronounces the company's declared bankruptcy together with the declaration of the bankruptcy of the joint partners, even though it may not have jurisdiction to declare the bankruptcy of these partners.

The court shall appoint for the bankruptcy of the company and the bankruptcies of the joint partners one judge and one trustee or more. However, each bankruptcy shall be independent from the others in terms of its assets and liabilities, as well as its management, the funding of its debts, and its termination. If a bankruptcy estate pays any sums due from another bankruptcy-estate, the paying estate has no right of recourse against the other estate (Article 612/2).

- 3.2 As for banks, third parties with knowledge of bankruptcy of the company and a person knowingly dealing with a director abusing his/her powers, it is important to note that their disposals may not be invoked vis-à-vis the group of creditors. Following are the types of disposals that shall not be insisted upon vis-à-vis the group of creditors:

- (a) Granting donations, whatever their kind is, with the exception of small presents offered according to usage and practice.
- (b) Settling the debts before their maturity date, whatever the method of settlement. Establishing a provisional amount for settlement of a commercial paper not yet maturing shall be considered as good as settlement before the maturity date.
- (c) Settling the due debts with other than the object agreed upon. Payment by means of the commercial paper, or bank transfer shall be considered as good as settlement with money.
- (d) All pawn or other consensual deposit, as well as all lien to be determined on the debtor's property as a guarantee for a debt prior to the deposit (Article 598).

However, a court ruling may be issued for non-execution of all disposals by the bankrupt, other than those mentioned above, during the period referred to therein, vis-à-vis the group of creditors, if the disposal is harmful to it and the party disposed to was at the time of that disposal, aware of the bankrupt's discontinuance of payment. (Article 599)

QUESTION 4

4. Counterparties dealing with the company during the twilight period

Counterparties dealing with the company during the twilight period are two groups:

- (1) Some of them are seeking to set aside certain acts made by third parties with the company, either by fraudulent means, or through piercing the principle of equality among creditors. The outcome of such procedure is to recover proceeds to the bankruptcy estate, or at least to render such acts as non-opposable against the creditors mass or group.
- (2) Some others are seeking the contrary, i.e., they are the dealers with the company and wish to save their transactions therewith from being set aside.

The capacity "d'ester en justice" in this regard is not recognized to any of the creditors, but it is recognized solely to the "receiver" in his capacity as legal representative of both the creditors and the bankrupt (Commercial Code Article 603). The "receiver" may also use, in addition to the provisions of the Commercial Law, the "action paulienne" contained in the Civil Code Articles 237-243.

The judgment rendered (as to the non opposability) in favour of the mass of creditors, shall ensue that the counterparty will repay to the bankruptcy-estate what he obtained from the bankrupt by virtue of such transactions or restitute the value of the thing disposed of at the time of its receipt (Article 602/1).

On the other hand, the counterparty shall have the right to recover the consideration submitted by him, if such consideration is found per se in the bankruptcy estate; and if not, the counterparty shall be entitled to request the mass of creditors to convey to him the "benefit" it drew from the unopposability of such disposition, and shall be entitled (for the rest of the consideration exceeding such "benefit") to participate in the bankruptcy-estate as an ordinary creditor ("crediteur chirographaire").

Another provision, inspired by the Islamic Shariaa, says that: "where a counterparty sold a commodity, and did not receive anything of its value, he shall be entitled to recover such commodity if it is found per se in the bankruptcy estate".

QUESTION 5

5. Enforcement: By whom may actions be brought against directors?

5.1 In the light of above, actions may be brought by:

- (a) the court as noted above.
- (b) the trustees, or the controllers.
- (c) creditors or persons having legal interests within the limits prescribed by law.
- (d) the prosecutor (District Attorney)

QUESTION 6

6. Remedies: orders available to the domestic court

See response to question 2.

QUESTION 7

7. Duty to co-operate: To what extent are directors obligated to co-operate with the investigation into the company's affairs following its insolvency?

Once the bankruptcy decision is issued, the bankrupt or the director is to cooperate with the investigation into the company's affairs especially in the following:

- (a) The director should not hide any documents, papers or clarifications that may lead to fraudulent insolvency which may result in imprisonment of between 3 to 5 years (Article 328 of the Penal Code).
 - (b) On the other hand, the company's directors are under a duty to submit its commercial books upon the court order, and the court has the discretionary power to sentence a director with a daily default fine.
 - (c) The director should attend when called the session of closing the commercial books (Commercial Code Article 640).

According to the Constitution, and the law of evidence a person may not be forced to incriminate himself. However, this is not the case if the bankrupt or the director hides books, documents or information that led to fraudulent bankruptcy.

QUESTION 8

8. Appeals and limitation periods

- (a) What limitation period, if any will apply to actions brought against directors (and others) in connection with the offences identified in question (2)?
- (b) Is an appeal available from the decision of the lower courts?

8.1 Limitation periods

Limitation periods for penal proceedings

According to the Egyptian procedural penal code, the limitation period for the offence of fraud bankruptcy, which constitutes a felony, is ten years. Thus, when the period of ten years expires without bringing the action it may not be brought before the court. On the other hand, the limitation period for bringing an action in the misdemeanour of the bankruptcy by negligence is three years. If, however, the action was brought, and a condemnation sentence was rendered, the limitation periods for the felony and the misdemeanour become 20 years and 5 years respectively.

Limitation period for proceedings in which compensation is to be sought.

Generally speaking, a compensation claim may rest upon principles of tortious liability or principles of contractual liability.

If the compensation claim is based upon tortious liability principles then the limitation period shall be either three years as of the date the claimant for damages knew of the loss and of the person liable for it or, in all cases, fifteen years from the date the loss or damage occurred. On the other hand, limitation periods for compensation claims based upon principles of contractual liability, are fifteen years.

However, court actions arising from the application concerning some disposals, shall prescribe after the lapse of two years from the date of issuing the bankrupt declaration ruling. Examples of this include:

- (a) Making donations, of whatever kind, with the exception of small presents offered according to usage and practice.

- (b) Disposals or settling debts before their maturity date, whatever the method of settlement. Establishing a provisional amount for settlement of a commercial paper prior to maturity shall be considered as settlement before the maturity date.
- (c) Disposals of settling the due debts with other than the object agreed upon. Payment by means of the commercial paper, or bank transfer shall be considered as settlement with money.
- (d) Disposals of pawn or other consensual deposit, as well as all liens to be determined on the debtor's property as a guarantee for a debt prior to the deposit. (Article 604 of the Commercial Code).

8.2 Appeals against decisions of the first instance court

Each interested party, other than the litigants, may object to the bankruptcy declaration ruling in the court issuing it within thirty days from the date of publication in the papers, unless it was appealed against in which case the objection shall be raised to the court examining the appeal.

The period for objection to all rulings issued in court actions as a result of the bankruptcy shall be thirty days from the date of their issuance, unless they are due for publication in which case the period shall begin from the date of publication.

The provisions of the Civil and Commercial Procedure Law shall apply to the rulings issued in bankruptcy declaration actions and other rulings issued in court actions resulting from the bankruptcy and the method of lodging them. (Article 565 of the Commercial Code) The period for appeals in these cases is 40 days, unless otherwise provided.

It should also be mentioned that the rulings issued in bankruptcy actions shall be due for self- execution without bail, unless otherwise prescribed (Article 566 of the Commercial Code).

However, no contestation shall be instituted in any way against:

- (a) The rulings or decisions concerning the appointment or replacement of the bankruptcy judge, trustee, or controller.
- (b) Rulings as issued in the objection against the decisions of the bankruptcy judge.
- (c) Orders issued cancelling the custody proceedings on the person of the insolvent.
- (d) Rulings issued for staying the bankruptcy proceedings until the final decision is taken in the objection lodged against the bankruptcy judge concerning acceptance or refusal of the debts.
- (e) Rulings issued concerning acceptance of the litigious debts temporarily.

Appeals against penal proceedings

Appeals against penal proceedings in the case of misdemeanours should be filed within 10 days from the date of issuance or notification of the first instance court decision. Sentences handed down in felony cases are subject to no appeal, but may be submitted to the Court of Cassation to examine the application of the law within 40 days from the date of issuance or notification.

QUESTION 9

9. Foreign corporations

Legal provisions and procedures applicable to foreign corporations.

Under Egyptian Law, a foreign company having its headquarters in Egypt or its main activity in Egypt or a branch agency in Egypt are subject to the same rules as domestic companies. Unless bilateral or a multilateral international-convention enforced in Egypt provides otherwise.

QUESTION 10

10. Insurance

Directors and officers of commercial companies may be insured according to the Egyptian Law and the rules of insurance companies.

However, it is very rare that this happens in practice, except in banks where the directors and some employees of banks and those having fiduciary duties towards their employer or institution are insured.

ENGLAND

QUESTION 1

1. The start and duration of the “twilight” period

What is the length of the period ending with formal insolvency proceedings during which transactions entered into by a company are vulnerable to attack or are liable to give rise to personal liability on the part of directors and/or others involved in the management of the company?

1.1 Overview

- 1.1.1 As a general rule, English law focuses on two questions. First, in connection with a range of ‘clawback’ provisions¹ the key issue is whether the company was ‘insolvent’ at the time (or as a result) of the relevant transaction. “Insolvent” for these purposes means:

- (a) the moment at which the company becomes unable to pay its debts as they fall due - the “cash-flow” test; and/ or
- (b) the moment at which the company’s liabilities exceed the value of its assets - the “balance sheet” test.

- 1.1.2 The second question relates to the English law concept of ‘wrongful trading’. This is discussed in more detail at question 2 below but for current purposes it is sufficient to note that the law tries to identify the time at which a director knew or should have realised that it was unreasonable to think that the company would avoid insolvent liquidation (that is, creditors were likely to go unpaid in due course). From that moment, a director will potentially be personally liable unless he does everything reasonably possible to minimise losses to creditors.

- 1.1.3 Besides the above considerations, it is worth mentioning that a director’s statutory duty to act in the way he considers, in good faith, would be most likely to promote the success of the company for the benefit of its members as whole is displaced when a company is ‘insolvent’ (in the sense that its liabilities exceed the assets). In these circumstances, the law recognises the economic reality on the company’s position² and the directors must exercise their powers and discharge their duties having regard to the interests of creditors of the company.

- 1.1.4 The twilight period will, as a general rule, terminate when the formal insolvency procedure commences.

² That the shareholders’ funds are exhausted and it is the creditors’ money that the directors are ‘playing with’.

1.1.5 Generally, formal insolvency commences, for these purposes, on the date:

- (a) the liquidation petition or administration application is presented in court, in the case of a court-appointed liquidation or administration;
- (b) the resolution is passed by the company to wind the company up, in the case of a voluntary liquidation;
- (c) the notice of intention to appoint is filed in court or, if no such notice is filed, the date on which the notice of appointment is filed in court, in the case of an administrator appointed out of court.

1.1.6 The various vulnerability periods for the English law clawbacks, being periods prior to the commencement of the formal insolvency, are as follows:

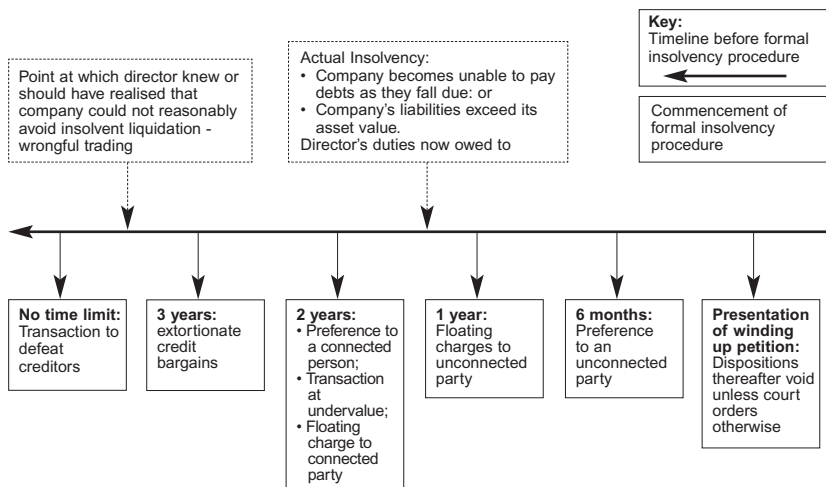

- (a) preferences (eg. security, charges) - six months, or two years if the preferred person is connected (sections 239 and 240(1) (a) and (b)³);
- (b) voidable floating charges - 12 months, or two years if the holder of the floating charge is connected (section 245(3));
- (c) transactions at an undervalue (eg. guarantees) - two years (sections 238 and 240(1)(a));
- (d) extortionate credit bargains - three years (section 244(2));
- (e) transactions defrauding creditors - no time limit (section 423);
- (f) dispositions after winding up petition - from date of petition (section 127).

Whilst these provisions are considered in more detail in reply to question 4, we set out below a “time line” summarising the statutory provisions mentioned above.

1.1.7 In relation to individual transactions the length of the period during which they can be attacked will depend upon whether or not the counterparty to the transaction was connected with the company⁴.

⁴ Effectively connected persons comprise directors (or “shadow” directors upon whose instruction the directors customarily act) or an “associate” of such a director or shadow director. Alternatively, a person is connected if he is simply an associate of the company. A natural person is an associate of another if they are relatives, partners, have an employer/employee relationship or trustee/beneficiary relationship. A company may also be an associate of another company if they are under common control.

1.2 Summary

- 1.2.1 If a company is balance sheet or cash-flow insolvent and within a vulnerability period (usually six months or two years) enters a formal insolvency procedure (e.g. liquidation or administration), transactions such as new charges, guarantees or sales of assets at less than market value may be vulnerable to attack by the liquidator or administrator (defences are discussed below in question 4).
- 1.2.2 Where a director knows (or should know) that insolvent liquidation is the only reasonable prospect facing the company, from that moment he is in the wrongful trading "zone" and at personal risk of liability unless, from that time, he does everything he can to minimise losses to the creditors.

QUESTION 2

2. Actions potentially giving rise to liability for directors

- (a) In respect of which acts during the “twilight” period may a director be held personally liable or which may otherwise have adverse consequences for him?
- (b) In relation to each act identified in (a) above:-
 - (i) is any resulting liability against a director civil, criminal or both?;
 - (ii) can a director be made personally liable in respect of the whole loss caused to the company or the deficit to creditors?;
 - (iii) will liability attach to individual directors in proportion to their specific involvement?;
 - (iv) is there a specified period before commencement of a subsequent insolvency procedure within which the relevant act must have been undertaken in order for liability to attach to a director?; and
 - (v) what defences, if any, will be available in relation to each offence?

2.1 Wrongful trading⁵

- (a) Prior to the 1986 insolvency legislation, the main risk to directors of personal liability for a company’s debts was the law of fraudulent trading (see below). In essence, provided the director was honest (even if hopelessly misguided in his beliefs) he was unlikely to be liable for fraudulent trading. The 1986 legislation introduced a “fault”-based liability for wrongful trading. The aim of the law is to catch and make liable directors who are unreasonable in their running of a company in financial difficulty⁶. The elements of wrongful trading are as follows:
 - (i) it applies to directors or “shadow directors”⁷ of a company;
 - (ii) it applies where a company has at some point gone into insolvent liquidation (that is where the liabilities exceed the assets in the liquidation so that creditors go at least in part unpaid);

⁷ See paragraphs 3.2.5 - 3.2.11 below for a full explanation of this term. For current purposes, a “shadow director” is someone in accordance with whose directions or instructions the directors of the company are accustomed to act. It will thus cover the “puppet master” who, for whatever reason, does not wish to appear on the face of the record as a director of the company but who in fact “pulls the strings” and tells the directors what to do. This would also include parent companies who in effect decide what their subsidiaries do. It should also be noted that a director under English law includes a “de-facto” director, that is someone who may not have been formally appointed as a director but who acts in the same way as a director or is held out as such. This term is explained more fully at paragraphs 3.2.1 - 3.2.4.

- (iii) it applies to a director or shadow director who knew or should have realised that at some point in time there was no reasonable prospect of the company avoiding insolvent liquidation;
 - (iv) as to what the director should have realised, the law imposes both an objective and a subjective standard. Objectively, the law assumes a minimum standard of skill and care that can reasonably be expected of any director carrying out the functions entrusted to him. Subjectively, the law will take into account the director's particular skills and what can be expected of him in that context in addition to the basic minimum standards;
 - (v) once it can be said of any director or shadow director that they knew or should have realised that insolvent liquidation was the only reasonable prospect then they are "in the wrongful trading zone" and may be liable for failure to take every step to minimise losses to creditors. Again as regards what is reasonable to expect of a director, the court will look at what minimum standard should be applied to someone carrying out their functions and also at what someone with that director's particular skills could have done.
- (b) (i) Liability is civil.
- (ii) The court has a wide discretion in determining the extent of the personal liability of a director found liable for wrongful trading. However, the essence of the law is to compensate creditors for the loss caused by the director's conduct.⁸
 - (iii) Although the court enjoys a wide discretion to determine the extent of a director's personal liability, it will, in general, exercise that discretion with a view to compensating for the loss caused by the director's conduct. On this basis there should be an element of proportionality.
 - (iv) There is no specified period.
 - (v) The defences to wrongful trading are that first, the director or shadow director did not realise, or could not have been expected to realise, that there was no reasonable prospect of avoiding insolvent liquidation⁹ or secondly that, if insolvent liquidation of the company was the only reasonable prospect, from that moment the director/shadow director took every step to minimise the potential loss to creditors¹⁰.

⁸ One test for calculating the loss is to look at the amount by which the company's assets are depleted by the conduct of the director after he became aware or ought to have become aware that there was no reasonable prospect of the company avoiding insolvent liquidation. The loss is not necessarily the amount of the new debt incurred or the cash paid out during the twilight period: In the matter of Marini Limited (The liquidator of Marini Limited v Dickinson) [2003 WL 1823004].

⁹ For example, Re Hawkes Hill Publishing Co Ltd (in liquidation) [2007] All ER (D) 422 in which the court stated that answer to whether a director knew or ought to have concluded that there was no reasonable prospect of avoiding insolvent liquidation did not depend on a snapshot of the company's financial position at any given time but on rational expectations of what the future might hold; directors were not expected to be clairvoyant. Cf Re the Rod Gunner Organisation Ltd (Rubin v Gunner) [2004] All ER (D) 05

2.2 Fraudulent trading¹¹

- (a) This applies where a company is being wound up and it is shown that the business of the company has “been carried on with intent to defraud creditors of the company or the creditors of any other person or for any fraudulent purpose”. The elements of the concept are therefore, as follows:
- (i) there has to be an insolvent liquidation in progress¹²;
 - (ii) there has to have been dishonesty in the running of the business (or reckless indifference as to whether or not creditors were defrauded) as that is the meaning of defrauding creditors or carrying on a business for a fraudulent purpose. The dishonesty must have been with the intention of defrauding creditors and not, for example, of avoiding some other liability;
 - (iii) as dishonesty is involved, the standard of proof is that of ‘beyond reasonable doubt’, even in a case of civil liability;
 - (iv) it applies to persons who are “knowingly parties” to the fraudulent trading which may be both wider and narrower than the concept of director/shadow director for wrongful trading, but it could in theory, be wide enough to catch a financier who funded the fraudulent trading knowing that it was being done dishonestly¹³.
- (b) (i) Liability may be criminal¹⁴ or civil.
- (ii) The court enjoys a wide discretion to compensate for the loss caused to the company by the director’s conduct but it may not include a punitive element in the award of damages made¹⁵.
 - (iii) As with wrongful trading, there should be an element of proportionality albeit that the court’s discretion is very wide.
 - (iv) There is no specified period.
 - (v) The main defence is that the party concerned was not dishonest. In practice, the party may be able to admit to incompetence, imprudence or even folly as long as he honestly believed that, for example, any new credit incurred would ultimately be repaid in full. However, simply turning a blind eye to the obvious may amount to fraudulent trading. But it is worth noting that it was rare and remains rare for persons to be found liable for fraudulent trading. Historically, this resulted from the difficulty of proving dishonesty and, now, wrongful trading will in most sets of facts be easier to prove.

¹⁵ Morphitis v Bernasconi [2003] All ER (D) 33 and Morris v Bank of India [2004] All ER (D) 378, but may include an element of interest in any award. However, a punitive element may be included if the action is brought under section 993 Companies Act 2006.

2.3 Fraud in anticipation of winding up¹⁶

- (a) Personal liability will attach to a past or present "officer"¹⁷ of the company who has:
 - (i) concealed or fraudulently removed any part of the company's property worth £500 or more or concealed any debt owed to or from the company;
 - (ii) concealed, destroyed, mutilated or falsified any accounting records of the company; or
 - (iii) pawned, pledged or disposed of any property of the company which has been obtained on credit and not fully paid for - unless such disposal was in the ordinary course of business.
- (b) If any of (i) - (iii) above are satisfied:
 - (i) Liability is criminal.
 - (ii) A person guilty of this offence is liable to imprisonment or a fine or both.
 - (iii) The gravity of the wrongdoing will be reflected in the length of imprisonment or the extent of the fine that is ordered. In exercising its punitive jurisdiction under this section the court is not seeking to compensate the company.
 - (iv) The acts in question must have occurred either :
 - (A) after the commencement of the winding up; or
 - (B) within a 12 month period ending with the commencement of the winding up.
 - (v) The following defences exist :
 - (A) that there was no intent to defraud or to conceal¹⁸; and
 - (B) that there was no intent to defeat the scheme of the insolvency law.

¹⁸ On the question of proof, it was held in R v Carass [2002] 1 WLR 1714 that: "It is a defence for a person charged... to adduce evidence sufficient to raise an issue that he had no intent to defraud unless, if he does so, the prosecution proves the contrary beyond reasonable doubt" and accordingly the evidential burden was not incompatible with the right to a fair trial under the Human Rights Act 1998. See further paragraph 7.8 below.

2.4 Transactions in fraud of creditors¹⁹

- (a) This offence is made out if an officer²⁰ of the company:
 - (i) has made or caused to be made any gift or transfer of, or charge on, or has caused or connived at the levying of any execution against, the company's property, or
 - (ii) has concealed or removed any part of the company's property since, or within two months before, the date of any unsatisfied judgment or order for the payment of money obtained against the company.
- (b) (i) The liability under this provision is criminal and the answers to 2.3(b)(ii) and (iii) above will apply.
- (ii) The impugned transaction must have occurred during the five years before the commencement of the winding up.
- (iii) Absence of intent to defraud the company's creditors amounts to a defence.

2.5 Misconduct in course of winding up²¹

- (a) A past or present officer²² of the company commits an offence if he :
 - (i) does not to the best of his belief fully and truly discover to the liquidator all the company's property, and how and to whom and for what consideration and when the company disposed of any part of that property not disposed of in the ordinary course of business;
 - (ii) does not provide to the liquidator, all of the company's property (including all books and papers) in his custody or under his control;
 - (iii) knowing or believing that a false debt has been proved by any person in the winding up, fails as soon as practicable to inform the liquidator; or
 - (iv) after the commencement of the winding up, prevents the production of any records relating to the company's property or affairs.

It is also an offence for an officer of the company to attempt to account for any part of the company's property by fictitious losses or expenses.

- (b) If any of 2.5(a)(i) - (iv) are satisfied:
 - (i) The liability under this provision is criminal and the answers to 2.3(b)(ii) and (iii) above will apply.

- (ii) If an officer of the company attempts to account for any part of the company's property by fictitious losses or expenses at any meeting of the company's creditors within 12 months immediately preceding the commencement of the winding up this transaction will have taken place in the twilight period. All of the other offences under this provision must have taken place when a company is being wound up.
- (iii) Absence of intent to defraud is a defence to a charge under 2.5(a)(i) and (ii) above, and absence of intent to conceal the company's state of affairs or to defeat the law is a defence to a charge under 2.5(a)(iv) above.

2.6 Falsification of company's books²³

- (a) An officer²⁴ of a company commits an offence if, when the company is being wound up, he destroys, mutilates, alters or falsifies any books, papers or securities, or makes or is privy to the making of any false or fraudulent entry in any register, book of account or document belonging to the company with intent to defraud or deceive any person.
- (b) If the conditions in 2.6(a) are satisfied:
 - (i) The liability under this provision is criminal and the answers to 2.3(b)(ii) and (iii) above will apply.
 - (ii) This offence applies when a company is being wound up.
 - (iii) Absence of intent to defraud or deceive will amount to a defence.

2.7 Material omissions from statements relating to company's affairs²⁵

- (a) A past or present officer²⁶ of the company commits an offence if he makes any material omission in any statement relating to the company's affairs.
- If the requirements of 2.7(a) are satisfied:
- (b) The liability under this provision is criminal and the answers to 2.3(b)(ii) and (iii) above will apply.
 - (ii) This offence applies to statements made when a company is being wound up.
 - (iii) Absence of intent to defraud is a defence.

2.8 False representations to creditors²⁷

- (a) Any past or present officer²⁸ of the company commits an offence if he makes any false representation or commits any other fraud for the purpose of obtaining the consent of the company's creditors or any of them to an agreement with reference to the company's affairs or to the winding up.
- (b) If the requirements of 2.8(a) are satisfied:
 - (i) The liability under this provision is criminal and the answers to 2.3(b)(ii) and (iii) above will apply.
 - (ii) This offence applies to false representations made when a company is being wound up and at any time prior to the winding up.
 - (iii) Absence of intent to mislead the company's creditors into giving their consent on the basis of a false premise is a defence to this charge.

2.9 Misfeasance²⁹

- (a) A past or present officer³⁰ of the company, in liquidation, who has misapplied or retained, or become accountable for, any money or other property of the company, or been guilty of any misfeasance or breach of any fiduciary or other duty including negligence in relation to the company the direct consequence of which is misapplication or loss of assets will incur liability.
- (b)
 - (i) The liability for this offence is civil.
 - (ii) The court may order the director to repay, restore or account for the money or the property or any part of it, with interest at such rate as the court sees fit or to contribute such sum to the company's assets by way of compensation in respect of the misfeasance or breach of fiduciary or other duty as the court thinks fit.
 - (iii) The court has wide discretion with respect to the orders it may make under this provision. It is able to apportion the order made against individual directors in proportion to their involvement and culpability.
 - (iv) Aside from Statute of Limitations considerations there is no time period within which the impugned act must have occurred in order for liability to attach.
 - (v) There is a defence where the director has acted honestly and reasonably and the court concludes that he ought fairly to be excused³¹.

2.10 Re-using a prohibited company name³²

- (a) Any person who was either a director or shadow director of the company at any time during the period of 12 months ending with the company's liquidation is prohibited from being concerned in another company which uses the insolvent company's name or a name similar to that name so as to suggest an association with it. The extent of the prohibition is that, except with the leave of the court, a director (or a shadow director) is not permitted for a period of five years from the date of the commencement of the relevant liquidation:
 - (i) to be a director of any company that is known by a "prohibited name";
 - (ii) in any way, whether directly or indirectly, to be concerned or take part in the promotion, formation or management of such a company; or
 - (iii) in any way, whether directly or indirectly, to be concerned with or take part in the carrying on of a business carried on (otherwise than by a company) under a prohibited name.

A "prohibited name" is;

- (i) a name by which the company which went into insolvent liquidation was known at any time during the 12 months prior to the commencement of the liquidation; or
 - (ii) a name so similar to that name as to suggest an association with the company in insolvent liquidation. This would include a trading name as well as a registered name.
- (b) (i) Liability is both criminal³³ and civil³⁴.
- (ii) (A) Personal liability can be incurred in respect of such debts and other liabilities of the new company as are incurred at the time when that person was involved in the management of the new company; and
 - (B) in relation to a person who acts on or was willing to act on instructions given by someone whom he knows to be acting in contravention of section 216, personal liability can be incurred in respect of such debts and other liabilities of the new company as are incurred at a time when he was acting on or was willing to act on those instructions.
- (iii) Liability may arise where the re-use of the company name took place without the consent of the court during the period of five years beginning with the day on which the company went into liquidation if the re-used name is the same as the name used by the insolvent company during the 12 month period ending with the liquidation or is so similar to that name as to suggest an association with it.

- (iv) The court is empowered to grant dispensations from the prohibition imposed under this provision if the insolvency is not linked with any blameworthy conduct on the part of the director. Exemptions are also permitted where:
 - (A) the whole, or substantially the whole of the business of an insolvent company is acquired by a successor company and the liquidator gives the prescribed notice³⁵;
 - (B) for an interim period, whilst an application is made to the court³⁶; and
 - (C) where the new company has been known by the name in question for at least 12 months prior to the liquidation and has not been a dormant company³⁷.

2.11 Destroying, mutilating etc. company documents³⁸

- (a) Any officer³⁹ of a company who destroys, mutilates or falsifies or is privy to the destruction, mutilation or falsification of, a document affecting or relating to the property or affairs of the company, or makes or is privy to the making of a false entry in such documents is guilty of an offence. Furthermore, any such person who fraudulently either parts with, alters or makes an omission in such a document is likewise guilty of an offence.
- (b) (i) The liability under this provision is criminal and the answers to 2.3(b)(ii) and
 - (iii) above will apply.
 - (ii) There is no time period within which the relevant act must have been undertaken in order for liability to attach to a director.
 - (iii) Absence of an intention to conceal the company's state of affairs or to defeat the law is a defence.

2.12 Fiduciary duties owed to the company

- (a) The general fiduciary duties of a director are predominantly set out in the Companies Act 2006. Prior to 1 October 2007, the duties of directors were derived from the common law, equitable principles and some statutory provisions in the Companies Act 1985. The Companies Act 2006 now includes a statutory statement (codification) of the general duties of directors. These duties came into effect in two tranches on 1 October 2007 and 1 October 2008.

The key aim of codification was to make the law regarding directors' duties more accessible. With a couple of exceptions, the stated intention was principally to restate rather than change the previous law. Regard will continue to be had to the corresponding common law and equitable principles (both as applied to directors' duties prior to codification and as developed in other areas of law on an ongoing basis) when interpreting and applying the general duties. In addition, as there has been no codification of the remedies for breach of the general duties, the consequences of breach will be the same as they would have been for breach of the previous corresponding duties.

The codified duties are:

- (i) duty to act within powers⁴⁰;
- (ii) duty to promote the success of the company for the benefit of its members as a whole⁴¹;
- (iii) duty to exercise independent judgment⁴²;
- (iv) duty to exercise reasonable care, skill and diligence⁴³;
- (v) duty to avoid conflicts of interest⁴⁴;
- (vi) duty not to accept benefits from third parties⁴⁵; and
- (vii) the duty to declare interest in proposed transaction or arrangement⁴⁶.

In exercising the duty to promote the success of the company, directors must have regard (amongst other matters) to: the likely consequences of any decision in the long term, the need to foster the company's business relationships with suppliers, customers and others, the company's employees and the environment (that is, other stakeholders).

However, the duty to promote the success of the company has effect subject to any enactment or rule of law requiring directors, in certain circumstances, to consider or act in the interest of creditors of the company. This is a reference to the common law rule that, once a company becomes insolvent, the interests of the creditors over-ride those of the members of the company. Thereafter the directors' duties are subject to an overriding duty to have regard to the interests of the general creditors of the insolvent company.

To what extent directors of companies that continue trading during the “twilight” period are required to take account of the interests of the various other stakeholders has not yet been considered by the courts. The position under the Companies Act 2006 was left deliberately open with the intention of leaving the law to develop in this area. No doubt, the answer will very much depend on the facts and the exercise of commercial judgment based on those facts.

- (b) (i) Liability for breach of these duties is civil. Section 178 of the Companies Act 2006 provides that the consequences of breach (or threatened breach) of sections 171 to 177 (the statutory duties referred to above) are the same as would apply if the corresponding common law rule or equitable principle applied. The duties in those sections (with the exception of the duty to exercise reasonable care, skill and diligence) are, accordingly, enforceable in the same way as any other fiduciary duty owed to a company by its directors.
- (ii) Liability is for all loss to the company occasioned by the breach of duty subject to the usual rules of recoverability based on considerations of causation and remoteness of damage.
- (iii) Liability for breach of fiduciary duty is joint and several for the entire loss in the first instance. The Court can, however, allocate contributions as between the defendant directors taking into consideration their respective levels of culpability for what has taken place⁴⁷.
- (iv) Subject to Statute of Limitation considerations there is no time limit within which action may be taken against a director.
- (v) The Court has discretion to relieve the director either wholly or partly from liability on such terms as it thinks fit if:
 - (A) he acted honestly;
 - (B) he acted reasonably; and
 - (C) he ought fairly to be excused from liability in all the circumstances⁴⁸.

2.13 Standard of duties owed by executive and non-executive directors

- 2.13.1 A director must exercise due care and skill in fulfilling his functions⁴⁹. The standard of care that the director must satisfy is judged according to both an objective and a subjective test. The director must conduct himself in the manner of a “reasonably diligent person having both (a) the general knowledge, skill and experience that may reasonably be expected of a person carrying out the functions carried out by the director in relation to the company, and (b) the general knowledge, skill and experience that the director has”.

- 2.13.2 For listed companies, the Combined Code on Corporate Governance of July 2003 also provides significant guidance on the roles that directors are expected to fulfil (both generally and specifically in the cases of the chairman, chief executive, non-executive directors and directors on board committees).
- 2.13.3 In applying these standards no distinction is drawn between the position of an executive and a non-executive director. However, the reference to the general knowledge, skill and experience that may reasonably be expected of "a person carrying out the functions carried out by the director in relation to the company" does allow the Court to take into account such matters as, for example, the fact that a non-executive director's functions are discharged on a part-time basis.⁵⁰ In other words, whilst the standard of care required from non-executive directors is the same, in expression, as that required from executives, the required standard may differ in application due to the difference in the functions which non-executives are expected to fulfil and the extent of the care and diligence which they can be reasonably expected to exercise.
- 2.13.4 An executive director will normally have a service contract which may be the source of additional duties. It is not possible to create an exhaustive list in either the director's service contract or in the company's memorandum or articles to specify exactly what are the director's duties. The duties owed by a director to the company can be increased by reference to the terms of the service contract but they cannot be diminished.
- 2.13.5 In the absence of an employment contract, the non-executive will not owe any contractual duties of care to the company. It is accepted that the non-executive may rely on his co-directors to carry out various tasks and functions. This does not, however, abrogate his responsibility to inform himself about the company's affairs and to join with his co-directors in supervising and controlling them (that is, he cannot abrogate all responsibility for checking whether there are proper controls by claiming ignorance of the company's activities or claiming that he relied on others to check such matters). The non-executive may only rely on a co-director to the extent that any matter lies within the co-director's sphere of responsibility given the way the business of the company is organised and there exist no reasons for supposing that this reliance is misplaced. The extent to which a non-executive should inform himself about the company's affairs will depend on, for example, whether the board satisfactorily carries out regular risk management reviews and whether or not the auditors' report to the audit committee and any internal audit report (or absence of such reports) give rise to any cause for concern. In the case of listed companies, it will be relevant whether the company has followed the Turnbull guidance on risk management⁵¹. If a non-executive director becomes aware (or ought to have become aware) that the executive management are not fulfilling their duties properly, the non-executive management will be expected to exercise his monitoring and controlling functions more actively.

⁵⁰ In Equitable Life Assurance Society v Bowley [2003] B.C.C. 829, it was acknowledged that: "There is a considerable measure of agreement about the duty owed in law by a non-executive director to a company. In expression it does not differ from the duty owed by an executive director but in application it may and usually will do so."

2.13.6 For listed companies, changes made to the Combined Code on Corporate Governance of July 2003 following the Higgs review of the role and effectiveness of non-executive directors clarified and, probably, expanded the role of non-executive directors. In particular, non-executive directors should:

- (a) constructively challenge and help develop proposals on strategy;
- (b) scrutinise the performance of management in meeting agreed goals and objectives and monitor the reporting of performance; and
- (c) satisfy themselves on the integrity of financial information and that financial controls and systems of risk management are robust and defensible.

2.13.7 The emphasis put on the role of non-executive directors in the Combined Code (which is intended to apply to all companies with a UK official listing) and recent case law (for example, relating to the failure by former non-executives of Equitable Life in their attempt to obtain summary judgment against the claims of negligence and breach of fiduciary duty made against them) has led to some concern that the role of the non-executive director is becoming increasingly onerous.

2.14 Incurring further credit

2.14.1 The incurring of further credit may be the factual matrix for one of the grounds of liability discussed above, for example (and most probably) wrongful trading. For further discussion please see answer to question 11 below.

2.15 Liability of directors to disqualification for acts done in the 'twilight zone'

2.15.1 The relevant legislation is the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986 (CDDA 1986), under which a court may order that a person should be disqualified from being a director of a company or from taking part in its management (except with the leave of the court), for a period of up to fifteen years. While insolvency of the company concerned is not a prerequisite for the application of some of the grounds of disqualification set out in the CDDA 1986⁵², in practice almost all disqualification orders are made on the basis of conduct evidencing a person's 'unfitness' to act as director⁵³, for which it is a requirement that the person concerned has been a director of a company which has gone into insolvent liquidation or become the subject of other insolvency proceedings such as administration or administrative receivership. There is no provision in the CDDA 1986 for automatic disqualification. Disqualification orders can also be made where the person concerned has been held liable to make a contribution to the assets of a company in liquidation on the grounds of fraudulent or wrongful trading⁵⁴.

⁵² For example, conviction of an indictable offence in connection with the management of a company (section 2): persistent contravention of companies legislation (sections 3 and 5).

⁵⁴ Section 10 CDDA 1986. It is even possible for the disqualification proceedings and the wrongful trading allegations to be heard at the same hearing.

- 2.15.2 Since 1 April 2001, directors against whom disqualification proceedings would have otherwise been brought on the basis of 'unfitness' can instead voluntarily give an undertaking that they will not act as a director or be involved in the formation of a company for a set period of time.⁵⁵
- 2.15.3 Apart from the case where a disqualification order is made as part of the sentence imposed following conviction for a crime, disqualification proceedings have been consistently held to be civil and not criminal in nature, both by UK courts and by the European Court of Human Rights. (See further 7.9.3 below.) There is also, generally speaking, no anterior time limit in respect of the conduct of a director which can be examined. The only exception is where the disqualification order follows consequentially upon some other court ruling, such as a finding of wrongful trading, to which a limitation period applies.

Acts potentially giving rise to a disqualification order

- 2.15.4 As noted above, in all but a few instances, the ground on which an order is made is a finding of 'unfitness' based on the person's conduct in relation to one or more companies which have become insolvent. There is no statutory definition of 'unfitness'. Instead, the CDDA 1986 sets out in a schedule a list of typical factors on which a finding of unfitness may be based, such as breach of fiduciary duty by the director (see above), misapplication of moneys and failing to keep proper accounts and make returns. More pertinently, the list also includes various acts which will usually be linked with the company's insolvency – for example, the person's responsibility for the company entering into any transaction liable to be set aside as being at an undervalue, a preference or in fraud of creditors. However, the list of matters referred to in the schedule is not exhaustive, and in practice other types of conduct which commonly feature in disqualification cases include continuing to trade when the director knew, or should have known, that the company was insolvent, failing to account to the Inland Revenue for tax and social security moneys deducted from employees' wages, following a policy of discriminatory payment between creditors, drawing excessive remuneration and making excessive expenses claims.
- 2.15.5 In determining whether a director is unfit, the court considers the cumulative effect of the allegations as are proved against him.
- 2.15.6 Although it is a common feature in most cases that the director has displayed a lack of commercial probity, gross negligence or serious incompetence, this is not always so. Following the collapse of the Barings banking group, for instance, many of its most senior board members were disqualified because they had not ensured that there were adequate internal control and monitoring systems in place.
- 2.15.7 That said, the courts have recently expressed caution at holding that a director is unfit based on conduct that does not amount to a breach of any duty (contractual, tortious, statutory or equitable) to anyone, and is not dishonest.⁵⁶

Length of disqualification

2.15.8 The period of disqualification imposed is fixed in the discretion of the court by reference to the person's own degree of responsibility and blameworthiness (subject, in the case of disqualification based on unfitness, to a minimum period of two years). In fixing the length of disqualification, the court may also have regard to mitigating factors such as the person's general good reputation, his age and state of health, whether he has been influenced by others, and his frankness with the court. The Court of Appeal has laid down guidelines which divide the cases into three categories:

- (a) a period of from 10 to 15 years is merited only in the most serious cases, and in particular for a person who faces disqualification for a second time⁵⁷;
- (b) two to five years' disqualification is justified where the case is, relatively, not very serious⁵⁸; and
- (c) a middle 'bracket' of six to ten years for cases falling between (a) and (b)⁵⁹. Statistics show that most of the orders made range from three to seven years.

An appeal is in principle available against the imposition of a disqualification order, or against its duration. In some cases, however, an appeal will lie only with the leave of the court which made the order or of the appeal court itself. As noted in paragraph 2.15.1 above, a disqualification order may be made as part of the sentence imposed by a criminal court, or consequentially upon a finding of fraudulent or wrongful trading leading to an order to pay compensation. But the converse is not the case: where proceedings are commenced for the purpose of obtaining a disqualification order, there is no jurisdiction to impose a criminal or civil penalty in addition.

2.15.9 The same period of disqualification (two to fifteen years) applies in relation to disqualification undertakings but given the director's co-operative approach, one would expect a slightly lesser period of disqualification to be agreed upon in practice.

2.15.10 Other than those who have been formally appointed directors, and save where the conduct on which disqualification is based is a criminal offence⁶⁰ or fraudulent trading⁶¹, disqualification may only be made against de facto directors, shadow directors and former directors. A financing bank, holding company or other third party (including counterparties to voidable transactions) will not be liable unless its conduct brings it within one of these three categories.

⁶¹ Sections 4 and 10 CDDA 1986.

- 2.15.11 Enforcement is in practice (and, in the case of disqualification based on 'unfitness', by express provision) almost entirely in the hands of government or regulatory authorities. The only likely exception would be where a disqualification order is made incidentally to a finding of wrongful trading, in which case the proceedings would have been instituted by the company's liquidator. Office-holders, such as liquidators, are placed by statute under an obligation to submit a report to the appropriate government agency on the conduct of every director and former director of a company which has become insolvent, with a view to determining whether there is a case for disqualification proceedings on the ground of unfitness to be instituted.

Duty to co-operate

- 2.15.12 Directors and others concerned in an insolvency are placed under a general duty to provide information to the liquidator or other office-holder and to co-operate with him⁶² and by other legislation to give information to government officers investigating the affairs of a company. A detailed summary of a director's duties to co-operate and the relevant provisions are set out in question 7 below.

Limitation periods

- 2.15.13 Disqualification proceedings on the ground of unfitness may only be commenced within two years from the day when the company 'became insolvent' (i.e. went into insolvent liquidation, administration or administrative receivership). The court may, exceptionally, extend this period. In regard to disqualification proceedings based on other grounds, there is no time limit prescribed.

QUESTION 3

3. Other persons involved with the company's affairs who may become liable in respect of their actions during the "twilight" period
- (a) In addition to the formally appointed directors of the company, can others be held liable in respect of the company's activities during the "twilight" period if the company were to become subject to a formal insolvency procedure?
 - (b) In respect of which acts may other persons be held liable and to what extent does the liability of third parties differ from that for directors identified in question 2 above?
 - (c) Will liability be limited to that resulting from involvement with a particular transaction or more generally in relation to the overall loss suffered by creditors?

⁶² Sections 235 and 236 IA 1986.

3.1 Introduction

- 3.1.1 Subject to the particular act or offence in question, English law may impose liability on a potentially wide variety of persons who have been involved in the management of a company in some way during the twilight period. Although the management of a company's affairs is primarily undertaken by its directors, English law has an extended definition of this term which is capable of including a variety of persons who, while not formally appointed as directors may have played a role in the company's management during the twilight period. Such persons may be held personally liable in respect of certain acts taken by them which have caused loss to the company and its creditors during this time. In particular, English law will impose personal liability on "shadow" and "de facto" directors in certain circumstances. Both these concepts are explained below. In addition, officers of the company who have been guilty of wrong-doing may also be liable in damages to the company thereby increasing the fund available to meet the claims of the company's creditors.
- 3.1.2 Finally, a third party, even if not involved either directly or indirectly with the management of the company, may be liable to return assets to the company as a result of being a party to a transaction at undervalue, a preference or a transaction defrauding creditors. In addition, under general equitable principles of English law, a third party who had knowledge of a breach of duty by a director when entering into a transaction and either fraudulently assisted in that breach and/or received property from the company with knowledge of that breach may be held liable as a "constructive" trustee of such property and liable to return it or to pay compensation to the company. A table summarising those, other than the directors of a company, who may be liable in respect of actions taken in the twilight period is set out at paragraph 3.5 below.

3.2 De facto and shadow directors

- 3.2.1 At both common law and under statute, English law has widened the scope of those who may be regarded as directors or treated in the same way as directors. In particular, the common law has developed the concept of "de facto" directors - directors who, notwithstanding that they may not have technically been appointed as directors as a matter of company law are, as a result of their actions and the functions they carry out, treated as directors. Secondly, under statute and to catch figures who, although not on the board nor apparently taking day to day decisions at the company, are in fact pulling the strings from behind the scenes, there is the concept of the "shadow director".

De facto directors

- 3.2.2 A de facto director is one who acts as a director and is treated as such by the rest of the board even though he may never have been formally appointed a director or there is a defect in the technicalities of his appointment (for example he was appointed at a meeting at which a quorum was not present). "Director" is defined in section 250 of the Companies Act 2006 to include any person occupying the position of director, by whatever name called. Thus, if someone were to be called an "observer" on the board but in fact took director-type decisions, then the court may be prepared to conclude that that person is a de facto director.

- 3.2.3 De facto directors owe the same duties to the company as directors who have been formally appointed. However, they may be further liable if they dispose of company property because they are wrongdoers. Unless the shareholders in general meeting resolve to ratify the disposals, they are liable to compensate the company for the value of the assets wrongfully disposed of. This right of action vests in the company.
- 3.2.4 De facto directors are able to bind the company in making contracts with third parties acting in good faith. They are not personally liable under those contracts under principles of agency law, but may be liable in damages for breach of an implied warranty of authority if they can be deemed to have warranted that they had authority to act on behalf of the company when no such authority existed.

Shadow directors

- 3.2.5 A shadow director is defined in section 251 of IA 1986 and section 22(5) of the CDDA 1986 as: "a person in accordance with whose directions or instructions the directors of a company are accustomed to act (but so that a person is not deemed a shadow director by reason only that the directors act on advice given by him in a professional capacity)."

There is a similar definition for Companies Act purposes in section 251 of the Companies Act 2006.

- 3.2.6 There are a number of elements to note in the definition:

Person	can mean an individual or a corporation
Directions or instructions	these are clearly more than mere suggestions but may include non-professional advice in certain circumstances
Accustomed to act	there must be a pattern to the directions or instructions and occasional directions will not make someone a shadow director. However, again, the point at which conduct becomes habitual will depend upon the facts of a particular case
Advice given in a professional capacity	this was thought originally to have been inserted to protect those such as solicitors who may sit in on board meetings and/or advise the board of a company but clearly it applies to all advice of a professional nature

In practice, what conduct makes someone a shadow director?

3.2.7 After the 1986 Insolvency Act was passed, there was initial concern expressed by banks and others advising banks that banks, in particular, were at risk of being held to be shadow directors. However, various extra-judicial pronouncements, case law and official guidance from the Insolvency Service have established a number of guidelines in connection with the type of conduct that may make someone a shadow director. In respect of the actions banks are likely to engage in when a customer is in financial difficulty, it is unlikely that the following actions will lead to a bank being found to be a shadow director:

- (a) sending an investigating team to review the company's current financial condition;
- (b) requiring a reduction in existing overdraft facilities;
- (c) requiring security or further security in respect of amounts outstanding;
- (d) calling for information, valuations of fixed assets, accounts, cash flow forecasts, etc;
- (e) requesting the customer's proposals for the reduction of the overdraft, including the submission of a business plan, schedule of proposed sales, etc; and
- (f) advising on the desirability of strengthening management, seeking fresh capital, etc.⁶³

3.2.8 In addition to the above points, the disqualification unit of The Insolvency Service has indicated that it will look at the following grounds to see if an individual has acted as a de facto or shadow director:

- (a) whether the person was a signatory to the bank account;
- (b) whether memoranda of interviews with bank officials point toward shadow directorship or de facto directorship;
- (c) whether there is evidence of the person ordering goods or services;
- (d) whether there is any written documentation which the person has signed as a director;
- (e) whether he has been attending board meetings;
- (f) whether there is evidence from creditors or employees that he has acted as such; and
- (g) where the company has gone into liquidation, whether he is the only person able to give the insolvency practitioner (certain) information.

⁶³ See also Ultraframe (UK) Ltd v Fielding [2005] WL 1801204 (27 July 1995) (Ch D) at page 222/223 "...where the alleged shadow director is also a creditor of the company, he is entitled to protect his own interests as creditor without necessarily becoming a shadow director."

- 3.2.9 A review of the statutory definition of and the requirements for shadow directorship was provided by the Court of Appeal in SSTI v Deverell (2000). Lord Justice Morritt (delivering the unanimous decision of the Court), after reviewing the previous case law, set out a number of propositions concerning the statutory definition of a shadow director.
- (a) The term “shadow director” should not be narrowly construed so as to limit Parliament’s intention to protect the public from those involved in the management of a company which had become insolvent;
 - (b) The purpose of the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986 legislation was to identify those, other than professional advisers, who had exercised “real influence in the corporate affairs of the company” and it was not necessary that such influence should be exercised over the whole field of a company’s corporate activities;
 - (c) Classifying a particular communication from a shadow director as a direction or instruction, whether by words or conduct, must be objectively ascertained by the court in the light of all available evidence. It is not necessary to prove that it was understood or expected, as between the giver and receiver of the relevant instruction or direction, that the instruction or direction would be followed. In many cases it will suffice simply to show that the instruction or direction was subsequently followed. Whether the parties label the communication as an “instruction” or “direction” will be no more than a factor that the court will take into account;
 - (d) Non-professional advice may fall within the statutory description of an “instruction” or “direction”. The fact that the legislation expressly includes a proviso excluding advice provided in a professional capacity indicates that general non-professional advice may be included. The Court stated that “the concepts of “direction” and “instruction” do not exclude the concept of “advice” for all three share the common feature of “guidance”. In summary, “frequent non-professional advice usually acted on is sufficient”;
 - (e) There is no requirement for the properly appointed directors to whom directions or instructions are given to cast themselves in a subservient role or to specifically have surrendered their discretion. The Court concluded that such a requirement would be to add an unnecessary gloss to the statutory requirement that the board were “accustomed to act in accordance with” such directions or instructions;
 - (f) The use of epithets or descriptions in place of the actual statutory definition of a shadow director were not always helpful. For example, to describe the board of directors as the “cat’s paw, puppet or dancer to the tune of the shadow director implies a degree of control both of quality and extent over the corporate field in excess of what the statutory definition requires”; and

- (g) There is no requirement for a shadow director to “lurk in the shadows”: it may occur but it is not an essential ingredient to the recognition of a shadow director. The Court provided the example of a person resident abroad who owns all the shares in a company but chooses to operate that company through a local board of directors situated in the place of incorporation of the company. If, from time to time, the shareholder, to the knowledge of all of those to whom it may be of concern, gives directions to the board of directors but takes no part in the actual management of the company himself, he may well be a shadow director even though he makes no attempt to hide the part he plays in directing the affairs of the company.

3.2.10 It is clear that in recent years the courts have sought to move away from a narrow legalistic approach to the requirements of shadow directorship. In each case, regard must be had to the frequency of the advice or instructions (whether over the running of the business as a whole or merely in specific areas) and whether such advice was usually acted upon (whether or not the directors have expressly or impliedly surrendered their discretion) so that it may be said that the third party in question exerted a “real influence over the affairs of the company”⁶⁴.

3.2.11 Administrative receivers and administrators will not be shadow directors as they assume the functions of the directors but do not instruct the directors.

3.3 Officers

3.3.1 Liability for many of the acts identified in question 2 above is often imposed on an “officer” of the company. As noted above⁶⁵, there is no specific statutory definition of this term. Instead, the different persons who are covered by the term will usually depend on the statutory provision in question. Section 1173(1) of the Companies Act 2006 states that the term “officer” includes a director, manager⁶⁶ or secretary of a company. Others who may be officers of a company include auditors⁶⁷ and administrators. Receivers, including administrative receivers, will not be officers of a company⁶⁸.

3.4 Other third parties who may be held liable

3.4.1 Administrators, liquidators and administrative receivers may be found liable for misfeasance or breach of duty owed to the company⁶⁹ (although necessarily this will be in respect of the post-twilight period).

- 3.4.2 Third parties who receive property as a result of a transaction at undervalue, preference or as a result of a transaction defrauding creditors will be liable either to return such property or provide such compensation as the court may order. In addition, where a company is being wound up by the court, any disposal of the company's property made without the court's approval after the winding up order has been made will be void.
- 3.4.3 Any persons who are knowingly parties to the carrying on of a business with intent to defraud creditors may be liable for fraudulent trading.⁷⁰ It is not necessary for that person to have performed a managerial or controlling role within the company; it will be enough if that person has participated in the fraudulent trading, in the sense of taking some positive step. An employee who merely carries out orders will not be liable.⁷¹
- 3.4.4 It is also possible for any third party who has dishonestly assisted in a breach of duty by a director or other officer of a company or knowingly received property arising from such breach to be liable in respect of any loss arising. The legal rules relating to knowing assistance and/or receipt of property are applicable in any circumstance and not only in respect of actions taken during the twilight period. The power of the English court to apply these rules arises under its general equitable jurisdiction.

3.5 Actions for which liability may attach to persons not formally appointed as directors

Offence/activity	Persons liable	Extent of liability
Wrongful trading	Past and present shadow directors for the period during which wrongful trading occurred	Same as for director
Fraudulent trading	Any person who was knowingly a party to the carrying on of the business for a fraudulent purpose (this will include persons dealing with the company who receive property with knowledge of the fraud)	Same as for director
Fraud in anticipation of winding-up	Any past or present officer (incl. a shadow director) and third party recipient with knowledge of property obtained by fraud	Same as for director; third party with knowledge of fraud liable to the extent of property received
Transactions in fraud of creditors	Officers of company at time of fraud	Same as for director
Misconduct in course of winding-up	Any past or present officer (incl. shadow director)	Same as for director
Falsification of company's books	Officer of the company	Same as for director

QUESTION 4

4. Counterparties dealing with the company during the twilight period

- (a) From the point of view of a counterparty dealing with the company during the twilight period, what are the potential heads of challenge which may lead to transactions with the company being set aside?
- (b) What defences, if any, to the areas of vulnerability identified above will be available to a counter-party seeking to protect a transaction from being attacked?

4.1 Introduction

- 4.1.1 Most legal systems can be expected to have rules which seek to overturn transactions operating to the detriment of a company and/or are unfairly beneficial to a counterparty, which are entered into during the twilight period if a formal insolvency actually occurs.⁷³ This reflects the weakened state of a company which is in financial difficulty and the inequality of bargaining power that may have arisen.
- 4.1.2 Sensible insolvency laws should strike a balance between ensuring adequate 'clawback' powers for insolvency office-holders such as liquidators while not preventing a company effecting transactions which maximise its chances of survival where that is for the benefit of creditors.

4.2 Summary of heads of challenge

- 4.2.1 The potential heads of challenge which may lead to transactions being set aside relate to transactions⁷⁴:
 - (a) which are at an undervalue;
 - (b) which are preferences;
 - (c) defrauding creditors;
 - (d) which constitute extortionate credit bargains;
 - (e) comprising floating charges given for past value;
 - (f) in breach of the directors' fiduciary duties;or which involve the following elements:

⁷⁴ The heads of challenge in 4.2.1(g) and (h) do not apply in respect of market contracts or margin contracts effected by an exchange or clearing house - Companies Act 1989, s164.

- (g) onerous property;
- (h) dispositions of the company's property made after the commencement of winding-up;
- (i) unregistered charges.

4.3 Transactions at an undervalue⁷⁵

- 4.3.1 By way of overview a transaction at an undervalue is a transaction entered into at a time when the company is insolvent and it later goes into administration or liquidation and is one where the company receives significantly less than it gives and there are no counterbalancing reasons why it benefits the company. The attack may be made by an administrator or liquidator and the court has a range of options if it finds there has been a transaction at an undervalue in order to restore the position.

Conditions for setting aside a transaction at undervalue

- 4.3.2 The court can only make an order for restoration of the status quo by way of relief under this provision if the following conditions are satisfied:
- (1) The company is in liquidation or administration and an application is made by the liquidator or administrator (section 238(1) and (2)).
 - (2) The company entered into a transaction at an undervalue either:
 - (a) within the two years ending with the "onset of insolvency"; or
 - (b) between the time of presentation of an administration application and the making of an administration order on that application; or
 - (c) between the filing with the court of a copy of a notice of intention to appoint an administrator and the appointment of an administrator (sections 238(2), 240(1))(a), (c), (d)).

The "onset of insolvency" is not a reference to the company's financial state. It is defined, depending upon the circumstances, as:

- (a) the date on which an administration application is filed in court; or
- (b) the date of the filing in court of a copy of a notice of intention to appoint an administrator; or
- (c) where no such notice of intention to appoint is filed at court, the date on which the notice of appointment is filed at court; or ⁷⁵ Section 238 IA 1986. All statutory references in this question 4 are to the IA 1986 (as amended) unless stated otherwise.

- (d) the passing of a voluntary winding up resolution or the presentation of a winding up petition (except where the company has previously been in administration that has ceased to have effect or where the administration proceedings were opened as territorial proceedings under the EC Regulation on Insolvency Proceedings and are now being converted into secondary winding up proceedings pursuant to Article 37 of the EC Regulation, in which case, (a), (b) or (c), as appropriate, will be treated as the onset of insolvency) (section 240(3)).
- (3) The company was unable to pay its debts within the meaning of section 123 IA 1986 (see answer to question 1 but, briefly, this means that it fails either the cashflow or the balance-sheet test of insolvency) either: at the time of entering into the transaction or in consequence of entering into it (s 240(2)). Where the creditor is a person 'connected with' the company (see answer to question 1), there is a rebuttable presumption of the company's inability to pay its debts (section 240(2)).

What is a transaction at an undervalue?

4.3.3 A company enters into a transaction with a person at an undervalue if it:

- (1) makes a gift to that person; or
- (2) otherwise enters into a transaction with that person on terms that provide for the company to receive no consideration; or
- (3) enters into a transaction with that person for a consideration the value of which is significantly less than the value, in money or money's worth, of the consideration provided by the company (section 238(4)).

4.3.4 A transaction is defined as including a gift, agreement or arrangement, and references to entering into a transaction are to be construed accordingly (section 436). In Phillips v Brewin Dolphin [2001] 1 All ER 673 the court accepted that as between the company and the counterparty or counterparties it will look beyond the form to the substance in ascertaining what constitutes the transaction. Thus two contracts between the company and the counterparty may, if sufficiently intertwined, be viewed as a whole.

4.3.5 The value of the consideration must be assessed as at the date the transaction was entered into. If, at that date, value was dependent on the occurrence or non-occurrence of some event and that event occurred before the assessment of value, then regard might be had to it but regard should also be had to all other matters relevant to the determination of value. Subsequent events should not be taken into account unless and to the extent that they were both relevant and foreseeable at the time the transaction was entered into.⁷⁶

- 4.3.6 In valuing the consideration, the incidental value to the transferee must also be considered. For example, a lease at full market rent may nevertheless be a transaction at an undervalue if the lease has a ransom or surrender value (for example, because it is a protected tenancy under the Agricultural Holdings Act 1986): Agricultural Mortgage Corp plc v Woodward [1994] BCC 688. In other words, the real value of any incidental benefits to the transferee (and the real value of the what the company is providing in exchange) have to be considered. In Phillips v Brewin Dolphin [2001] 1 All ER 673 it was held that identification of the consideration is a question of fact and that the consideration for a transaction can include the benefit of a covenant given by a third party, where a company agrees to sell an asset to A on terms that B agrees to enter into some collateral agreement with the company. However, the value of B's covenant in money or money's worth must be determined by discounting the present value of future payments by the probability of non-payment.

Defences

- 4.3.7 The court may not make an order under this provision if it is satisfied:
- (1) that the company which entered into the transaction did so in good faith and for the purpose of carrying out its business; and
 - (2) that at the time it did so there were reasonable grounds for believing that the transaction would benefit the company (section 238(5)).

Further, the court may not make an order which would prejudice certain purchasers in good faith and for value. There are specific rules governing the meaning of good faith in the context of notice of the circumstances giving rise to the undervalue (section 241(2) and (3)).

Examples of financial transaction that may fall within the section

- 4.3.8 In Re M C Bacon (No.1) [1990] BCC 78 the court held that the creation of security over a company's assets as security for a company's own liabilities was not a transaction at an undervalue but merely attaches a particular liability to a particular asset. The provision required, it was held, a comparison to be made between the value of the consideration obtained by the company and the value of the consideration provided by the company. Both values have to be measured in money or money's worth and have to be considered from the company's point of view. Ordinarily, the mere creation of security over the company's assets does not deplete them or diminish their value. That said, there may be circumstances where, on the facts, the creation of security may be regarded as a transaction at an undervalue⁷⁷.
- 4.3.9 A guarantee by a company to a bank of the liabilities of a parent or sister company might be a classic example of an undervalue transaction - if, say, the idea is simply to bleed the company to benefit its financially troubled parent or sister company. In relation to guarantees there is no authority on the test to apply to ascertain the value provided by the guarantor and provided by the bank. An interest-free loan might also constitute a transaction at an undervalue.

4.4 Preferences⁷⁸

- 4.4.1 By way of overview, a preference is something which a company does, at a time when it is insolvent and it later goes into liquidation or administration, to put a creditor in a better position than he would have been if the thing had not been done and the company had instead just gone into liquidation. The attack is made by an administrator or a liquidator and, as for undervalues (above), the court has a range of options to restore the position.

Conditions for setting aside a 'preference'

- 4.4.2 The court can only make an order for restoration of the status quo by way of relief under this provision if the following conditions are satisfied:
- (1) The company is in liquidation or administration and an application is made by the liquidator or administrator (section 239 (1) and (2))
 - (2) The company gave the preference within a vulnerability period ending with the 'onset of insolvency' (section 239(2))⁷⁹. The vulnerability period is either six months or two years depending on the identity of the counterparty:
 - (a) in the case of a preference given to a connected person⁸⁰ (other than by reason of being its employee) the vulnerability period is two years; and (section 240(1)(a));.
 - (b) In the case of a preference given to any other person, the vulnerability period is six months (section 240 (1)(b)).
 - (3) The company was unable to pay its debts as described above in connection with transactions at an undervalue save that there is no presumption of insolvency in the case of a connected person.⁸¹

What is a preference?

- 4.4.3 A company gives a preference to a person if:
- (1) that person is one of the company's creditors or a surety or guarantor for any of the company's debts or other liabilities; and
 - (2) the company does anything or suffers anything to be done which (in either case) has the effect of putting that person into a position which, in the event of the company going into insolvent liquidation, will be better than the position he would have been in if that thing had not been done (section 239(4)).

Examples of preferences include the payment of a debt or giving of security to a particular creditor who would otherwise only have received partial payment on a winding-up.

⁷⁹ This concept is the same as for transaction at undervalue - see paragraph 4.3.2(2) above.

⁸¹ See paragraph 4.3.2(3) above.

- 4.4.4 In determining whether a creditor has been preferred, the critical test is whether what is done would have the effect of disturbing the statutory order of priorities in an insolvent liquidation. The phrase “going into insolvent liquidation” is not expressly defined in this provision but is presumed to mean a liquidation where creditors are not paid in full.

Defences

- 4.4.5 The court shall not make an order under this provision in respect of a preference given to any person unless the company which gave the preference was influenced in deciding to give it by a desire to have the effect of giving a preference to that person (section 240(5)). This is a question of fact - board minutes prepared when the relevant transaction was taken will be a starting point in this respect.

- 4.4.6 In Re M C Bacon (No. 1) at: 87 the court emphasised the distinction between a desire and an intention:

“Intention is objective, desire is subjective. A man can chose the lesser of two evils without desiring either ... A man is not to be taken as desiring all the necessary consequences of his actions ... It will still be possible to provide assistance to a company in financial difficulties provided that the company is actuated only by proper commercial considerations ... a transaction will not be set aside as a voidable preference unless the company positively wishes to improve the creditor's position in the event of its own insolvent liquidation” (emphasis added).

Accordingly it was held that a decision by a company to give its bank a charge to secure existing borrowings (when the only alternative, if the bank withdrew its support, was liquidation) was not voidable as a preference as the directors’ desire was to obtain continued funding, not to put the bank in a better position.

- 4.4.7 Where the beneficiary is connected with the company at the time the preference is given (otherwise than by reason of being its employee), the company, unless the contrary is shown, is presumed to have been influenced in deciding to give a preference by the relevant desire.
- 4.4.8 There are the same protections for purchasers in good faith and for value as for transactions at an undervalue (see paragraph 4.3.7 above)⁸².

4.5 Transactions defrauding creditors⁸³

Conditions

- 4.5.1 Where a transaction at an undervalue is entered into by a company for the purpose of putting assets beyond the reach of a person who is making or may at some time make a claim against the company or of otherwise prejudicing the interests of such person in relation to the claim he is making or may make, the court may make an order restoring and protecting the interests of the persons who are victims of the transaction.

- 4.5.2 It is not necessary that the company shall be in liquidation or administration, nor is there any statutory time limit. Essentially, this provision uses the same concept of 'undervalue' as for section 238 (discussed above) with the additional requirement that the company or person effecting the transaction does it for the purpose of putting assets beyond the reach of creditors but there is no requirement that the company be in an insolvency procedure.

Defences

- 4.5.3 There are protections for good faith purchasers for value without notice of the relevant circumstances (section 425(2)).

4.6 Extortionate credit transactions⁸⁴

Conditions

- 4.6.1 The court may set aside or vary a transaction for, or involving, the provision of credit to the company where the following conditions are satisfied:
- (1) the company is or has been a party to the transaction;
 - (2) the company is in liquidation or administration (section 244(1) applying section 238(1)) and the administrator or liquidator brings an action;
 - (3) the transaction is or was 'extortionate'; and
 - (4) the transaction was entered into within the three years prior to the day on which the company entered administration or (as the case may be) the company went into liquidation.⁸⁵
- 4.6.2 A transaction is regarded as extortionate if, having regard to the risk accepted by the person providing the credit:
- (1) the terms of it are or were such as to require grossly exorbitant payments to be made (whether unconditionally or in certain contingencies) in respect of the provision of the credit, or
 - (2) it otherwise grossly contravenes ordinary principles of fair dealing (section 244(3)).

The concept is one of a party taking improper advantage of an imbalance in bargainers power so as to produce a result that is oppressive.

- 4.6.3 There is a rebuttable presumption that a transaction with respect to which an application is made under this provision is extortionate (section 244(3)).

Defences

- 4.6.4 There are no statutory defences (other than successfully to disprove the allegation).

⁸⁴ Section 244 IA 1986.

4.7 Avoidance of floating charges for past value⁸⁶

- 4.7.1 This provision, which is in addition to the law of preferences (above), is specifically aimed at preventing creditors obtaining floating charge security for past debts in certain circumstances. It is not designed to impugn security given for new credit.

Conditions for setting aside

- 4.7.2 A floating charge is void under this provision if the following conditions are satisfied:

- (1) the company is in liquidation or administration; and
 - (2) the floating charge was created,
 - (a) in the case of a charge created in favour of a connected person within the period of two years ending with the onset of insolvency⁸⁷ (section 245(3)(a)); or
 - (b) in the case of a charge created in favour of any other person, within the period of 12 months ending with the "onset of insolvency" (section 245(3)(b)); or
 - (c) in the case of a charge created in favour of any person, between the presentation of an application for an administration order and the making of an order on that application (section 245(3)(c)); or
 - (d) in the case of a charge created in favour of any person, between the filing with the court of a copy of a notice of intention to appoint an administrator and the making of that appointment (section 245(3)(d))
 - (3) the charge was given otherwise than for new consideration (see below); and
 - (4) in the case of a charge given to a person not connected with the company, the company was then unable to pay its debts within the meaning of section 123⁸⁸ or became unable to do so in consequence of the charge (section 245(4)).
- 4.7.3 Under section 245(2), the charge will be invalid except to the extent of the aggregate of:
- (1) the value of so much of the consideration for its creation as consists of money paid, or goods or services supplied, to the company at the same time as, or after, the creation of the charge;
 - (2) the value of so much of the consideration as consists of the discharge or reduction, at the same time as, or after, the creation of the charge, of any debt of the company; and

- (3) the amount of interest (if any) payable on those sums which fall within paragraph (1) or (2) above in pursuance of any agreement under which money was paid, the goods or services supplied, or the debt reduced or discharged.

4.7.4 The new consideration must be for the charge and it must go to the company itself or in the reduction of the company's indebtedness. Where goods or services are provided rather than new money, it is the true value of the goods and services that counts, not the value that the parties may ascribe to them (section 245(6)).

Defences

4.7.5 There are no specific statutory defences available but, as discussed above, the charge will not be invalid to the extent that new value is provided.

4.7.6 It is worth considering two practical situations:

- (a) Refinancing or rollover - in a two party situation this usually involves the discharge of an old debt and the creation of a new debt. Even where it cannot be said that the arrangement is a sham, a paper transaction such as this may not amount to new consideration.
- (b) Overdraft turnover - a bank which operates an overdraft may benefit from the fact that fresh consideration may be provided at any time after the creation of the security. Drawings out of the account, even if replaced by payments into the account, represent new credit for these purposes⁸⁹ - and, over time, the whole balance in the account may be represented by these new withdrawals 'hardening' the security (i.e. rendering it invulnerable from attack under this head of challenge).

4.8 Breach by directors of general fiduciary duties

4.8.1 If the directors cause the company to contract with another party on terms disadvantageous to the company, they may be in breach of their general fiduciary duties to the company. Where the counterparty has knowledge of this, there may be circumstances where there are proprietary or restitutionary rights to recover the property. These are rights under the general law and whilst not dependent upon insolvency as such, they are more likely to be examined and/or exercised after a formal insolvency event.⁹⁰

4.9 Disclaimer of onerous property⁹¹

4.9.1 When the company is being wound up, the liquidator may, by giving the prescribed notice, disclaim any onerous property and may do so notwithstanding that he has taken possession of it, endeavoured to sell it, or otherwise exercised rights of ownership in respect of it.

⁸⁹ This is known as the rule in Clayton's Case (1816) 1 Mer 572.

- 4.9.2 Onerous property includes (a) any unprofitable contract; and (b) any other property of the company which is unsaleable or not readily saleable or is such that it may give rise to a liability to pay money or perform any other onerous act.
- 4.9.3 An example of onerous property would be a lease under which the company was the tenant and where the rent was greater than market rent. Where the counterparty has a proprietary as opposed to a personal interest in the property, there can be no disclaimer: for example, where the company is selling land, contracts have been exchanged and the buyer tenders the purchase price, the buyer is likely to be able to obtain specific performance of such a contract.
- 4.9.4 There can be no disclaimer of an executed contract (one which has been wholly performed by one party but not the other) as opposed to an executory contract (where neither party has wholly performed its obligations).
- 4.9.5 The disclaimer does not affect rights and liabilities already accrued. It determines, as from its date, the future rights interests and liabilities of the company in or in respect of the property disclaimed. The disclaimer does not (except so far as necessary for the purpose of releasing the company from any liability) affect the rights or liabilities of any other person. Any person sustaining loss or damage as a consequence of the disclaimer is deemed to be a creditor of the company to the extent of such loss or damage and may prove as such.
- 4.10 Dispositions of the company's property made after the commencement of winding-up⁹²
 - 4.10.1 In a winding up by the court, any dispositions of the company's property, and any transfer of shares, or alteration in the status of the company's members, made after the commencement of the winding up is void. For example, a payment out of a company's bank account, whether in credit or debit, after the commencement of the winding up will constitute a void disposition in favour of the payee. A payment into a company's overdrawn bank account will also constitute a void disposition in favour of the bank.⁹³
 - 4.10.2 Commencement of the winding up backdates to the date of presentation of the petition (section 129 IA 1986) and the time of presentation of any petition for compulsory winding-up if an order is ultimately made. The voidness applies unless the court otherwise orders - so a company or a counterparty may seek a court validation order in respect of transactions in this period, when perhaps it is unclear whether the company will be able to pay off the petitioning creditor.

4.11 Failure to register a charge⁹⁴

4.11.1 English law operates a system of registration of security created over certain property by English companies and by overseas companies which have an established place of business in England. Failure to register within 21 days of creation renders the charge void against an administrator or liquidator or a creditor (in practice a secured creditor). Whilst it is the company's obligation to register the charge under section 860 Companies Act 2006, any party interested in the charge is able to and, indeed, is well advised to effect the application itself. Any fees properly paid in doing this can be recovered from the company.

4.11.2 Section 860(7) defines the charges which have to be registered⁹⁵:

- (a) a charge on land or any interest in land, other than a charge for any rent or other periodical sum issuing out of the land
- (b) a charge created or evidenced by an instrument which, if executed by an individual, would require registration as a bill of sale;
- (c) a charge for the purpose of securing any issue of debentures;
- (d) a charge on uncalled share capital of the company;
- (e) a charge on calls made but not paid;
- (f) a charge on book debts of the company (where a negotiable instrument has been given to secure the payment of any book debts of a company, the deposit of the instrument for the purpose of securing an advance to the company is not treated as a charge on those book debts);
- (g) a floating charge on the company's property or undertaking;
- (h) a charge on a ship or aircraft, or any share in a ship;
- (i) a charge on goodwill, or on any intellectual property (i.e. any patent, trade mark, registered design, copyright or design right; or any licence under or in respect of any such right).

QUESTION 5

5. Enforcement

By whom may action be brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3 above)?

⁹⁴ Part 25 Companies Act 2006, the provisions of which will come into force on 1 October 2009. Until then, registration of charges continues to be governed by sections 395 and 396 Companies Act 1985.

⁹⁵ Certain of the charges referred to in section 860(7) do not need to be registered – in essence, security over "financial collateral" (very broadly, cash, shares and tradeable bonds) if the security is taken within the context of a "security financial collateral arrangement" within the meaning given to that expression in the Financial Collateral Arrangements (No.2) Regulation 2003 (SI 2003/3226), which implements in the UK the Financial Collateral Directive (Directive 2002/47/EC).

5.1 Introduction

- 5.1.1 In the event of a company going into liquidation, administration or administrative receivership, the authority and powers of the directors are superseded following such an appointment and taken over by the liquidator, administrator or administrative receiver respectively. It is these office holders (and primarily a liquidator or administrator) who are required to review the action taken by the directors and others during the twilight period and where relevant bring proceedings to obtain compensation for the benefit of creditors in respect of any loss caused to the company. Consequently, in most cases it is the office holder only who is empowered to bring actions against directors and others where there has been a breach of either the legal or fiduciary duties owed to the company. There are a few exceptions to this rule in respect of certain transactions/offences for which action may be brought by creditors or others directly. These are detailed in the table below.
- 5.1.2. There are two main exceptions to this general rule. First, where criminal proceedings are brought against directors or others in respect of some form of criminal action, such proceedings must be brought by the Director of Public Prosecutions (DPP) on behalf of the relevant government department or authority⁹⁶. Secondly, only the Secretary of State (SST), or the Official Receiver (appointed where the company is being wound-up by the court) acting at his direction, may bring proceedings for disqualification under sections 6 ("unfitness" to be a director) and 8 (disqualification after investigation by the SST in a company's affairs) of the CDDA 1986.

5.2 Criminal proceedings

- 5.2.1 The following acts are criminal offences in respect of which the DPP may bring an action against the directors and others involved. The office holder (such as a liquidator) of a company is under a duty to bring any such offences to the attention of the DPP. Those who may be liable in respect of the following offences in addition to the directors are listed in question 3 above.

Offences⁹⁷

- (a) Fraud in anticipation of winding-up - section 206
- (b) Transactions in fraud of creditors - section 207
- (c) Misconduct in course of winding-up - section 208
- (d) Falsification of company's books - section 209
- (e) Material omission from statement relating to company affairs - section 210
- (f) False representations to creditors - section 211
- (g) Restriction on re-use of company name - section 216
- (h) Fraudulent trading - section 993 Companies Act 2006

5.3 Civil proceedings

- 5.3.1 In relation to civil proceedings, the ability to bring actions against directors and others is primarily held by the relevant office-holder. However, in respect of certain actions which have caused loss to the company and its creditors, the law allows a wider range of persons to bring action to recover funds for the benefit of the company's creditors. Where an action for a contribution to the company's assets is successful, even if the person bringing the action is not the office-holder, any recoveries made will be for the benefit of all creditors of the company and will be distributed amongst the creditors in accordance with the normal rules relating to priority.
- 5.3.2 The table below sets out those people who may bring an action against the directors and others in connection with certain transactions which the company has entered into or for disqualification proceedings.

Activity/transaction	Person able to bring proceedings
Misfeasance	Liquidator, Official Receiver, a creditor or, with leave of the court, a contributory ⁹⁸ and, if the misfeasance action is pursuant to paragraph 75 of Schedule B1 to the IA 1986, the administrator of the company
Fraudulent trading	Liquidator only ⁹⁹
Wrongful trading	Liquidator only
Personal liability for unlawful re-use of company name	DPP ¹⁰⁰
Transaction at undervalue	Liquidator or administrator only
Preference	Liquidator or administrator only
Extortionate credit transactions	Liquidator or administrator only
Transactions defrauding creditors	Liquidator, administrator, the Official Receiver and, with leave of the court, a "victim" ¹⁰¹
Disqualification as a director (1)	For offences under sections 2-5 CDDA 1986, SST, Official Receiver, liquidator, any past or present member or creditor of the company
Disqualification as a director (2)	For offences under sections 6 and 8 CDDA, SST and Official Receiver only

⁹⁹ An action brought under this provision is for a contribution towards the assets of the company. Criminal proceedings will be brought under section 993 Companies Act 2006.

¹⁰¹ A "victim" is defined as being a person who is, or is capable of being, prejudiced by the relevant transaction.

QUESTION 6

6. Remedies: orders available to the domestic court

In respect of the offences identified in questions 2, 3 and 4 above, what remedies are available in the domestic court?

Offence	Remedy Available
Wrongful Trading	The director may be ordered to make such contribution to the company's assets as the court thinks fit. However jurisdiction under section 214 IA 1986 is primarily compensatory.¹⁰² Where the court makes a contribution declaration, it may make further directions to give effect to it as set out below in connection with section 213 IA 1986. Where the court makes a declaration under section 214 IA 1986 that an individual is liable to make contribution to a company's assets, then whether or not an application has been made for his disqualification, the court may make an order that he be disqualified from acting as a company director for a period of up to 15 years.
Fraudulent Trading ¹⁰³	If tried by a jury, the penalty is up to ten years imprisonment and/or a fine and, on summary conviction, a term of imprisonment of up to 12 months and/or a fine up to the statutory maximum (currently £5,000).
Fraudulent Trading ¹⁰⁴	The director may be ordered to make such contribution to the company's assets as the court thinks fit. The court may not include a punitive element in its order. Where the court makes a contribution declaration, it may make further directions to give effect to the declaration such as, for example, imposing a charge on any debt or obligation due from the company to him or the deferral of debts due from the company to him. Where the court makes a declaration under section 213 that an individual is liable to make contribution to a company's assets, then whether or not an application has been made for his disqualification, the court may make an order that he be disqualified from acting as a company director for a period of up to 15 years.

¹⁰² Based on Morphitis v Bernasconi [2003] All ER (D) 33 which, in the context of fraudulent trading, held that the court's order may not include a punitive element. Hence,, it is doubtful that this may form part of a wrongful trading order.

Offence	Remedy Available
Fraud in anticipation of a winding up	If prosecuted on indictment and tried by a jury the penalty is up to seven years' imprisonment and/or a fine and, on summary conviction (non-jury trial), a term of imprisonment of up to six months and/or a fine up to the statutory maximum (currently £5,000).
Transactions in fraud of creditors	If tried by a jury the penalty is up to two years' imprisonment and/or a fine and, on summary conviction, a term of imprisonment of up to six months and/or a fine up to the statutory maximum (currently £5,000).
Misconduct in winding up	If tried by a jury the penalty is up to seven years' imprisonment and/or a fine and, on summary conviction, a term of imprisonment of up to six months and/or a fine up to the statutory maximum (currently £5,000).
Falsification of Company Books	If tried by a jury the penalty is up to seven years' imprisonment and/or a fine and, on summary conviction, a term of imprisonment of up to six months and/or a fine up to the statutory maximum (currently £5,000).
Material omissions from statement relating to the company's affairs	If tried by a jury the penalty is up to seven years' imprisonment and/or a fine and, on summary conviction, a term of imprisonment of up to six months and/or a fine up to the statutory maximum (currently £5,000).
False representations to creditors	If tried by a jury the penalty is up to seven years' imprisonment and/or a fine and, on summary conviction, a term of imprisonment of up to six months and/or a fine up to the statutory maximum (currently £5,000).
Misfeasance	This section provides a mechanism for summary trial and does not create any new category of liability. The court may order the director to repay, restore or account for the money or the property or any part of it, with interest at such rate as the court sees fit or to contribute such sum to the company's assets by way of compensation in respect of the misfeasance or breach of fiduciary or other duty as the court sees fit.
Re-using a prohibited company name	Criminal liability If tried by jury the court can order imprisonment for up to 2 years and/or a fine. If tried summarily the court can order imprisonment for up to six months and/or a fine up to the statutory maximum (£5,000). Civil liability The director may be held personally liable for the debts of the company incurred whilst trading under the restricted name.

Destroying, mutilating company documents including making an omission in a document¹⁰⁵	These offences can lead to imprisonment for six months and/or a fine of £1,000 for a summary conviction and imprisonment for seven years and/or a fine for a conviction on indictment.
Fiduciary Duties	The director may be ordered to compensate for any loss or damage caused by breach of his fiduciary duty, to restore to the company any property appropriated or acquired in breach of his fiduciary duty and to account to the company for any benefit obtained in breach of fiduciary duty.
Duties of skill and care	The director may be ordered to compensate the company for all loss and damage caused by breach of his fiduciary duty.
Conduct rendering a director unfit to be a director¹⁰⁶	The court may order disqualification for a period of between 2 and 15 years. There is no financial penalty.
Transactions at an undervalue and preferences	The court may make such order as it thinks fit in order to restore the position to that which would have existed if the company had not entered into the impugned transaction. It may, for example, order: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> (a) that any property transferred as part of the impugned transaction be re-vested in the company; (b) that any property which represents the application of either the proceeds of sale of the property or money wrongfully transferred be vested in the company; (c) the release or discharge of any security given by the company; (d) require any person to pay such sums as represent the value of any benefits received by him from the company in breach of sections 238 or 239 IA 1986; (e) provide for any surety or guarantor whose obligations to any person were released or discharged (in whole or in part) under the transaction, or by giving of the preference, to be under such new or revived obligations to that person as the court thinks appropriate; (f) that security be provided for the discharge of any obligation imposed by or arising under the order; or

	(g) provide for the extent to which any person whose property is vested by the order in the company, or on whom obligations are imposed, is to be able to prove in the winding up of the company for debts or other liabilities which arose from, or were released or discharged under or by, the transaction or the giving of the preference. An order under these provisions cannot prejudice any interest acquired from a person other than the company which was acquired in good faith and for value. It cannot prejudice any interest deriving from such an interest. It must not require a person who received a benefit from the impugned transaction in good faith and for fair value to make payment except where that person was a party to the transaction with the company or was a creditor of the company at the time of the transaction.
Transactions defrauding creditors¹⁰⁷	The court may: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> (a) require that any property transferred as part of the transaction be vested in any person, either absolutely or for the benefit of all the persons on whose behalf the application for the order is treated as made; (b) require any property to be vested in any person's hands which represents either the proceeds of sale of property or of money so transferred; (c) release or discharge (in whole or part) any security given by the debtor; (d) require any person to pay to any other person in respect of benefits received from the debtor such sums as the court may direct; (e) provide for any surety or guarantor whose obligations to any person were released or discharged (in whole or part) under the transaction to be under such new or revived obligations as the court thinks appropriate; (f) provide for security to be provided for the discharge of any obligation imposed by or arising under the order for such an obligation to be charged on any property and for such security or charge to have the same priority as a security or charge released or discharged (in whole or in part) under the transaction.

	Any order made must not prejudice any interest in property acquired from a person other than the debtor which was acquired in good faith for value and without notice of the relevant circumstances. The court shall not require any person who derived a benefit from the impugned transaction in good faith without notice of the relevant circumstances, to pay any sum unless he was a party to the transaction.
Extortionate Credit Transactions ¹⁰⁸	The impugned transaction may be set aside or the court may make an order to vary the transaction on such terms as it sees fit. It may, for example, make an order: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> (a) setting aside the whole or part of any obligation created by the transaction; (b) varying the terms of the transaction or the terms on which any security for the purposes of the transaction is to be held; (c) requiring any person who is or was a party to the transaction to pay to the office-holder any sums paid to that person by virtue of the transaction, by the company; (d) requiring any person to surrender to the office-holder any property held by him as security for the purposes of the transaction; (e) directing accounts to be taken between any persons.
Avoidance of a floating charge business ¹⁰⁹	The court can declare that the floating charge is invalid in whole or in part.

QUESTION 7

7. Duty to co-operate

- (a) To what extent are directors (and others identified in question 3 above) obliged to co-operate with an investigation into the company's affairs following its insolvency?

¹⁰⁸ Section 244 IA 1986. See explanation of the provisions of this section in the answer to question 5. Liability is civil.

¹⁰⁹ Section 245 IA 1986. See explanation of these provisions in answer to question 5. Liability is civil.

- (b) Are any human rights laws applicable in the domestic jurisdiction in relation to any such obligations (e.g. in the UK and other European jurisdictions, Article 6 of the European Convention of Human Rights may apply if domestic law compels a person to provide potentially self-incriminating information at the request of the office-holder appointed under the relevant insolvency procedure adopted)?

7.1 Obligation to co-operate with investigation into company's affairs

General duty to co-operate

7.1.1 Section 235 IA 1986 applies in the case of a company where:

- (a) the company enters into administration; or
- (b) an administrative receiver is appointed; or
- (c) the company goes into liquidation; or
- (d) a provisional liquidator is appointed¹¹⁰.

7.1.2 Under section 235, there is a duty imposed on certain people to co-operate with any administrator, administrative receiver, liquidator, or provisional liquidator of a company or the 'Official Receiver'¹¹¹. The duty is:

- (a) to give to the office-holders mentioned above such information concerning the company and its promotion, formation, business dealings, affairs or property as the office-holder may at any time after the effective date reasonably require; and
- (b) to attend on the office-holder at such times as the latter may reasonably require.

7.1.3 The "effective date" is whichever is applicable of the following dates:

- (a) the date on which the administration order was made; or
- (b) the date on which the notice of appointment of an administrator was filed in court (if appointed out of court); or
- (c) the date on which the administrative receiver was appointed or, if he was appointed in succession to another administrative receiver, the date on which the first of his predecessors was appointed; or
- (d) the date on which the provisional liquidator was appointed; or
- (e) the date on which the company went into liquidation (i.e. the date it passed a resolution for voluntary winding up or the court made an order for its winding up).

¹¹⁰ Such a person is appointed by the court at any time after the presentation of a winding-up petition and before the making of a winding-up order: section 135 IA 1986.

¹¹¹ The Official Receiver is a civil servant from The Insolvency Service, an agency operating under the aegis of the Department of Business, Enterprise and Regulatory Reform. He is often appointed liquidator on a winding-up order being made, although where there are assets in the liquidation a creditors meeting will be likely to appoint a private accountant liquidator.

7.1.4 The duty is imposed on the following people:

- (a) those who are or have at any time been officers of the company - this will include a director, manager or secretary of a company;
- (b) those who have taken part in the formation of the company at any time within one year before the effective date;
- (c) those who are in the employment of the company, or have been in its employment (including employment under a contract for services - which includes those who have provided professional services to the company, for example, accountants) within that year, and are in the office-holder's opinion capable of giving information which he requires;
- (d) those who are, or have within that year been, officers of, or in the employment (including employment under a contract for services) of, another company which is, or within that year was, an officer of the company in question; and
- (e) in the case of a company being wound up by the court, any person who has acted as administrator, administrative receiver or liquidator of the company.

Sanction

7.1.5 If a person without reasonable excuse fails to comply with any obligation imposed by section 235 IA 1986, he is liable to a fine and, for continued contravention, to a daily default fine.

7.2 Obligation to assist with getting in the company's property¹¹²

7.2.1 Section 234 IA 1986 applies in the case of a company where:

- (a) the company enters into administration; or
- (b) an administrative receiver is appointed; or
- (c) the company goes into liquidation; or
- (d) a provisional liquidator is appointed.

7.2.2 Where any person has in his possession or control any property, books, papers or records to which the company appears to be entitled, the court may require that person forthwith (or within such period as the court may direct) to pay, deliver, convey, surrender or transfer the property, books, papers or records to the office-holder.¹¹³

Sanction

7.2.3 There are no specific sanctions for breach of this section; but the court would use its inherent powers to enforce.

¹¹² Section 234 IA 1986.

7.3 Obligation to provide information¹¹⁴

7.3.1 Section 236 IA 1986 applies in the same circumstances as does section 235 and “office-holder” has the same definition as in that section. Under section 236, the court may, on the application of the office-holder, summon to appear before it:

- (a) any officer of the company;
- (b) any person known or suspected to have in his possession any property of the company or supposed to be indebted to the company; or
- (c) any person whom the court thinks capable of giving information concerning the promotion, formation, business, dealings, affairs or property of the company.

This section therefore has a potentially very wide application.

7.3.2 Such person may be required (a) to submit an affidavit to the court containing an account of his dealings with the company; or (b) to produce any books, papers or other records in his possession or under his control relating to the company or its promotion, formation, business, dealings, affairs or property.

Sanctions

7.3.3 If a person does not appear before the court when summoned, or if there are reasonable grounds to believe that a person is intending to avoid his appearance, the court may issue a warrant for the arrest of the person and the seizure of any relevant property. The courts’ enforcement powers with respect to section 236 also include powers (under section 237) to:

- (a) order any person who, as it appears to the court, on consideration of any evidence obtained under sections 236 or 237, has in his possession any property of the company, to deliver the whole or any part of the property to the officer-holder at such time, in such manner and on such terms as the court thinks fit; and
- (b) order any person who, as it appears to the court, on consideration of any evidence so obtained, is indebted to the company, to pay to the office-holder, at such time and in such manner as the court may direct, the whole or any part of the amount due, whether in full discharge of the debt or otherwise, as the court thinks fit.

There are also powers to examine persons either in the UK or abroad.

7.4 Company’s statement of affairs¹¹⁵

7.4.1 Where the court has made a winding-up order or appointed a provisional liquidator, the official receiver may require certain persons to make out and submit to him a statement of the affairs of the company. The persons who may be required to provide such a statement are as follows:

¹¹⁵ Section 131 IA 1986. Equivalent obligations are imposed by section 2(3)(b) IA 1986 where a company is subject to a voluntary arrangement, section 47 IA 1986 if it is in administrative receivership, para 47 of Schedule B1 to the IA 1986 if in administration and sections 99 and 95(3)(a) IA 1986 if in voluntary liquidation.

- (a) those who are or have been officers of the company;
- (b) those who have taken part in the formation of the company at any time within one year before the relevant date;
- (c) those who are in the company's employment, or have been in its employment within that year, and are in the official receiver's opinion capable of giving the information required; or
- (d) those who are or have been within that year officers of, or in the employment of, a company which is, or within that year was, an officer of the company.

Sanction

- 7.4.2 Under section 210 IA 1986, past or present officers of the company may commit an offence if they make material omissions from the statement of affairs.

7.5 Public examination of officers¹¹⁶

- 7.5.1 Where a company is being wound up by the court, the Official Receiver may at any time before the dissolution of the company apply to the court for the public examination of any person who (a) is or has been an officer of the company; or (b) has acted as a liquidator or administrator of the company or as receiver or manager of its property; or (c) not being such a person, is or has been concerned, or has taken part in the promotion, formation or management of the company.

Sanction

- 7.5.2 Under section 134 IA 1986, if a person fails to attend his public examination without reasonable excuse he is guilty of contempt of court and liable to be punished accordingly. A warrant for his arrest and the seizure of any books, papers, records, money or goods in that person's possession may also be issued if he fails to attend or if there are reasonable grounds for believing that he has absconded or is about to do so.

7.6 Obligation to provide accounts¹¹⁷

- 7.6.1 In a creditors' voluntary liquidation¹¹⁸ a liquidator, or, in a compulsory liquidation, the official receiver, may request any of the people who may be required to co-operate with an office-holder under section 235(3) to furnish him with the accounts of the company of such nature, as at such date, and for such period, as he may specify.

7.7 Enforcement – Sanction for failing to discover to the liquidator the company's property and papers when it is being wound up¹¹⁹

- 7.7.1 Section 208 IA 1986 imposes a penalty (imprisonment or a fine) on any person who, being a past or present officer of the company which is being wound up, amongst other things:
- (a) fails to discover to the liquidator all the company's property and how any of it may have been disposed of (if other than in the ordinary course of business); or
 - (b) fails to deliver up to the liquidator all property or books and papers belonging to the company which are in his custody or control; or
 - (c) fails to inform the liquidator of any false debt which he believes has been proved by any person in the winding up; or
 - (d) after the commencement of the winding-up prevents production of books and papers relating to the company's property or affairs.

7.8 Human rights

- 7.8.1 On 2nd October, 2000, the Human Rights Act 1998 (the HRA) came into force. The HRA incorporates into domestic law the rights and freedoms set out in the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (Treaty of Rome, 4th November, 1950) (the Convention) as well as the 1st and 6th Protocols (which are defined together as the Convention Rights).
- 7.8.2 The directors and others identified in question 3 will have Convention Rights. This is the case whether they are individuals or companies. In an insolvency context, a director or other person with Convention Rights under the HRA will be able to:
- (a) require that a particular provision of insolvency law is construed in accordance with those rights or otherwise declared incompatible; or
 - (b) claim that the insolvency practitioner is a public authority and is acting unlawfully in breach of that person's Convention Rights.
- 7.8.3 The application of the HRA will also have the following effects:-
- (a) Legislation - Primary and subordinate legislation will be read in a way that is compatible with the Convention Rights. If this is not possible, the court may make a declaration of incompatibility. In the case of subordinate legislation (for example the Insolvency Rules 1986), the court may give relief against any incompatibility provided that this is not inconsistent with the primary legislation (for example the Insolvency Act 1986).

- (b) Public authorities - It will be unlawful for public authorities to act in a way which is incompatible with a Convention Right. A victim may bring proceedings for judicial review or damages. "Public authority" is not defined under the HRA, but it includes persons whose functions are of a public nature. If the nature of the act is private, then the performer of the act is not a public authority. As officers of the court, the Official Receiver, administrators, compulsory liquidators, provisional liquidators and court appointed receivers are all "public authorities" when carrying out functions of a public nature. Voluntary liquidators and administrative receivers are not officers of the court but have public functions so are also likely to fall within the definition.

7.8.4 However, it should be recognised that the Convention Rights are not absolute and may well be limited by authorised interference by the state where such interference is (a) justified by a limited aim and/or (b) proportionate to the need in hand.

7.8.5 In the context of insolvency, and the duties of co-operation discussed above, certain Convention Rights may be particularly relevant. These include:

- (a) Article 6 - the right to a fair trial;
- (b) Article 4 - prohibition of slavery and forced labour
- (c) Article 8 - right to respect for private and family life;
- (d) Protocol 1, Article 1 - right to the peaceful enjoyment of possessions.

7.9 Article 6 – Right to a fair trial

7.9.1 Article 6(1) provides that:

"In the determination of his civil rights and obligations or of any criminal charge against him, everyone is entitled to a fair and public hearing within a reasonable time by an independent and impartial tribunal established by law. Judgment shall be pronounced publicly but the press and public may be excluded from all or part of the trial in the interests of morals, public order or national security in a democratic society, where the interests of juveniles or the protection of the private life of the parties so require, or to the extent strictly necessary in the opinion of the court in special circumstances where publicity would prejudice the interests of justice."

These provisions apply in respect of both civil and criminal proceedings.

- 7.9.2 In criminal proceedings, the use of compelled statements makes those proceedings unfair.¹²⁰ Accordingly, section 433 IA 1986 provides that any statement of affairs or other statement made in pursuance of a requirement imposed by the IA 1986 shall be inadmissible in criminal proceedings¹²¹. In civil proceedings, however, the use of compelled evidence does not per se mean that a hearing is unfair.¹²² It would be a matter for the defendant to raise, as he thought fit, at the civil proceedings.
- 7.9.3 There is some debate whether directors' disqualification proceedings (under CDDA 1986) are criminal or civil in nature. The case-law suggests that such proceedings are regulatory and not criminal, although they are capable of being described as penal.¹²³ Thus the Court of Appeal has held that the use of statements obtained by an insolvency practitioner under section 235 IA 1986 in disqualification proceedings does not necessarily involve a breach of Article 6(1). However, statements taken under section 236 of the IA 1986 may be treated differently¹²⁴. The public examination of officers of a company being wound up by the court (under section 133 IA 1986 – see above) is not contrary to Article 6.¹²⁵
- 7.9.4 It has been suggested that, whilst the original application for an examination under section 236 IA 1986 will be governed by Article 6, the examination itself will not because this is not a hearing for the determination of substantive rights.¹²⁶

7.10 Article 4 - Prohibition of slavery and forced labour

- 7.10.1 Under Article 4(2), no one shall be required to perform forced or compulsory labour. There is an argument that work that a director (or other person) may be required to do in complying with the obligations to co-operate with an investigation into the company's affairs following its insolvency may be forced labour contrary to Article 4. However, forced or compulsory labour does not include any work or service which forms part of normal civic obligations (Article 4(3)(d)). Therefore, any such argument is, in most cases, likely to fail, as the duties of co-operation are almost certainly part of a director's normal civic obligations.

7.11 Article 8 – Right to respect for private and family life, home and correspondence

- 7.11.1 Article 8 provides as follows:

¹²⁴ Re Westminster Pty Management Ltd, Official Receiver v Stern (ibid).

- (1) Everyone has the right to respect for his private and family life, his home and his correspondence.
- (2) There shall be no interference by a public authority with the exercise of this right except such as is in accordance with the law and is necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security, public safety or the economic well-being of the country, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others.”

7.11.2 This article may give grounds for challenge where the investigation intrudes into the director’s personal correspondence¹²⁷. The exception in Article 8(2) means that the interests of the creditors are likely to prevail over most arguments that any examination or investigation is in breach of Article 8.¹²⁸

7.12 First Protocol, Article 1 – Protection of property

7.12.1 This provision provides that:

“Every natural or legal person is entitled to the peaceful enjoyment of his possessions. No one shall be deprived of his possessions except in the public interest and subject to the conditions provided for by law and by the general principles of international law.”

“The preceding provisions shall not, however, in any way impair the right of a State to enforce such laws as it deems necessary to control the use of property in accordance with the general interest or to secure the payment of taxes or other contributions or penalties.”

7.12.2 It is quite likely that any challenge, under Article 1 of Protocol 1, to the directors’ or others’ liability to contribute to the assets of the company (for example under one of the heads listed in question 2) is likely to fail because there is a general interest in such contribution (for example to protect creditors and to ensure the good management of companies).

There is still the requirement of proportionality.

7.13 Human Rights law in practice

7.13.1 Undoubtedly the HRA does have practical relevance and cannot be ignored. Cases based on a breach of the HRA have been reported regularly in the insolvency arena since it came into force¹²⁹ and nor are these cases restricted to those matters dealt with in this question. There have, for example, been a number of claims based on an infringement of the right to a fair trial within a reasonable time (Article 6) in the context of director disqualification proceedings which have taken an inordinate amount of time to reach court. Its ambit is therefore wide reaching and full consideration of its implications is beyond the scope of this work.

¹²⁷ Cf Haig v Aitken [2000] 2 All ER 80, where, in the context of bankruptcy, the Article 8 right confirmed the judge’s view that private correspondence was not property within the bankrupt estate.

¹²⁹ And the European Court of Human Rights has held that the HRA can apply retrospectively to cases which predate the HRA and the amended section 433 IA 1986: Kansal v The United Kingdom, 27 April 2004.

- 7.13.2 Each case has been dealt with on its facts. But the general sense is that the courts have been robust in resisting spurious human rights arguments following the introduction of the HRA ¹³⁰ and have sensibly adopted the "proportionate" response necessary in the context of insolvency legislation designed to administer the affairs of the insolvent and to protect creditors and the public generally¹³¹.

QUESTION 8

8. Appeals and limitation periods

- (a) What limitation period, if any, will apply to actions brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3) in connection with the offences identified in question 2?
- (b) Please indicate whether an appeal is available from the decision of the lower courts.

8.1 Limitation periods

Limitation period for criminal proceedings

- 8.1.1 No limitation periods apply to the offences attracting criminal liability which have been identified in the answers to questions 2 and 6.

Limitation period for civil actions

- 8.1.2 In relation to any liabilities created by sections of the Insolvency Act 1986 the limitation period is 6 years from the date on which the cause of action accrued¹³².
- 8.1.3 In relation to breaches of the director's fiduciary duties the limitation period is generally 6 years from the date on which the cause of action accrued¹³³. No limitation period will apply if there has been a fraudulent breach of trust or to recover trust property or the proceeds of trust property which have been retained by the director or received by him and converted to his own use¹³⁴. Case law has interpreted this widely so as to include the use of trust proceeds by a director for the benefit of a company he indirectly controls.¹³⁵

- 8.1.4 In relation to breaches of the director's common law duties the limitation period is also 6 years from the date on which the cause of action accrued¹³⁶.
- 8.1.5 The limitation period applying to disqualification applications pursued under section 6 of the CDDA 1986 is 2 years from the date on which the company went into either insolvent liquidation, administration or administrative receivership.¹³⁷ The court does enjoy a discretion, however, to extend this period which may be exercised in circumstances where, for example, the director has contributed to the delay in bringing proceedings, the charges laid against the director are particularly serious and there is a public interest in ensuring that they are pursued and where it is still possible for the director to receive a fair trial.

8.2 Appeals

- 8.2.1 The Court of first instance may be invited to review, rescind or vary any order made by it in the exercise of its insolvency jurisdiction¹³⁸.
- 8.2.2 Appeal may take the form of an appeal from the decision of the court of first instance or from its refusal to review, rescind or vary its order. These appeals are based on the decision of the lower court being (a) wrong (because of an error in law, fact or discretion) or (b) unjust because of a serious procedural or other irregularity in the proceedings of the lower court.¹³⁹
- 8.2.3 Hearings take place at first instance before either a County Court Judge, a Registrar of the High Court or a Judge of the High Court depending upon the complexity of the case and the value of the amount in issue. An appeal from the decision of the County Court Judge and the Registrar of the High Court lies to the Judge of the High Court without permission. The permission of either the Judge of the High Court or of the Court of Appeal is required for an appeal from the decision of the Judge of the High Court sitting as a court of first instance to the Court of Appeal. If the Judge of the High Court is hearing the matter on appeal from the County Court or a Registrar of the High Court, permission from the Court of Appeal is required for a further appeal¹⁴⁰.
- 8.2.4 These provisions apply to civil proceedings brought under the Court's insolvency jurisdiction. Where criminal offences are concerned, the procedure of the criminal courts applies. Instead of the County Court and the High Court, the process evolves in:
- (1) the Magistrates' Court dealing with less serious offences; and
 - (2) the Crown Court dealing with more serious offences and appeals from the Magistrates' Courts.

¹³⁶ Section 2 of the Limitation Act 1980 in the case of liability founded in tort. This time limit may be extended under section 14A of the 1980 Act in the event that the facts relevant to the cause of action were not known at the date on which it accrued. The extension allowed under this section is a further 3 year period from the date on which the claimant had both the knowledge required to bring the claim and the right to do so. This is subject to a long stop under section 14B of the 1980 Act which provides that no action shall be brought in respect of a negligence claim more than 15 years after the date on which the act of negligence relied upon occurred.

The Criminal Division of the Court of Appeal hears appeals from the Crown Court.

- 8.2.5 It may also be possible to appeal civil proceedings based on breach of the director's duties (which are not insolvency proceedings).¹⁴¹

QUESTION 9

9. Foreign Corporations

Do the legal provisions and procedures outlined above apply to both domestic and foreign corporations?

9.1 Introduction

- 9.1.1 As noted in question 5 above, subject to criminal proceedings, the ability to enforce the rights and duties of directors will usually be undertaken by an "office holder" appointed pursuant to either a winding-up order or appointed upon the company going into administration. In particular, the tables set out in question 5 above specify who may bring actions against a director. Consequently, the ability to bring actions against directors of foreign companies will, first and foremost, depend on the jurisdiction of the English courts to wind-up a foreign company or alternatively to place a foreign company in administration.
- 9.1.2 A foreign company may be wound up or made subject to administration proceedings in England in the following circumstances:
- (a) the foreign company is a company to which the EC Regulation on Insolvency Proceedings (see below) applies and has its "centre of main interests" or an "establishment" in England;
 - (b) the foreign company may be wound up under section 221 IA 1986 as an "unregistered company";
 - (c) the foreign company is one in respect of which a winding up or administration proceedings could be opened pursuant to an application under section 426 IA 1986;
 - (d) the foreign company is incorporated in Norway, Iceland and Liechtenstein;

¹⁴¹ CPR Part 52.3 sets out the standard permission requirements.

- (e) the foreign company may apply for recognition under the Cross-Border Insolvency Regulations 2006.

9.2 Foreign company to which the EU Regulation on Insolvency Proceedings applies

9.2.1 On 31 May 2002, the EC Regulation on Insolvency Proceedings¹⁴² (The Regulation) came into force across the European Union (with the exception of Denmark)¹⁴³ The Regulation applies only to companies with their “centre of main interests” (see below) in the European Union; in respect of such companies, it determines in which Member State(s) insolvency proceedings for a company can be commenced and hence whether there is jurisdiction in England to wind-up or place a foreign company into administration.

9.2.2 The Regulation provides for two types of insolvency proceedings:

- (a) “Main insolvency proceedings” which can only be opened in the Member State where the company has its “centre of main interests” (CoMI). There is no comprehensive definition of CoMI in the Regulation but there is a rebuttable presumption that it is the place of its registered office. Recital (13) to the Regulation also states that CoMI “should correspond to the place where the debtor conducts the administration of his interests on a regular basis and is therefore ascertainable by third parties.” Main insolvency proceedings have universal scope, encompassing all the debtor’s assets on a Community-wide basis and affecting all creditors, wherever located. Both liquidation and administration proceedings may be opened as main proceedings in England.
- (b) “Secondary proceedings” which may be opened in any Member State where the company possesses an “establishment”. “Establishment” is defined in the Regulation as “any place of operations where the debtor carries out a non-transitory economic activity with human means or goods”. This is likely to include a branch office of a foreign company or an established place of business, but the mere presence of assets, such as a bank account, will not constitute an establishment. Secondary proceedings are limited in scope to assets located in the Member State where they are opened. Liquidation and administration proceedings (but only if for the purpose of a winding up, known as ‘winding up through administration’) can be opened as secondary proceedings in England.

9.2.3 Accordingly, if a company has its CoMI or establishment in England, it may (notwithstanding that the company was incorporated elsewhere) become subject to liquidation and administration proceedings in England.

¹⁴² Council Regulation (EC) No 1346/2000 of 29 May 2000.

- 9.2.4 Article 4 of the Regulation provides that where English insolvency proceedings are opened as main proceedings, English insolvency law will apply to the insolvency proceedings and their effects and will, amongst other matters, determine the powers of the liquidator¹⁴⁴ and the rules relating to the voidness, voidability or unenforceability of legal acts detrimental to all the creditors. As noted in paragraph 5.1.1 above, it is the office holders (that is, primarily the liquidator and administrator) who are required to review the actions of directors (and others) in the twilight period and to bring proceedings, as appropriate. Hence, the powers of a liquidator or administrator outlined above in question 5 will apply equally in respect of directors of a foreign company which is subject to the Regulation.¹⁴⁵
- 9.2.5 Moreover, article 18(1) of the Regulation further provides that the liquidator or administrator appointed in main proceedings may exercise all the powers conferred on him by English law in any other Member State (so long as no other insolvency proceedings have been opened in that Member State nor any preservation measure to the contrary has been taken there further to a request for the opening of insolvency proceedings in that State) and may, in particular, remove assets from other Member States in which they are situate. In exercising his powers, the office-holder must comply with the local laws of the Member State.
- 9.2.6 In relation to the matters considered in question 4 above, the vulnerability of any transaction at an undervalue or preference entered into during the twilight period will be subject to the application of article 13 of the Regulation.¹⁴⁶
- 9.2.7 Where a foreign company has an establishment but no CoMI in England, secondary proceedings can be opened in England but the effect of those proceedings will be restricted to the assets located in England¹⁴⁷. English law will apply.
- 9.2.8 The powers of the liquidator or administrator outlined above will apply to all assets situate in England. Additionally, an office holder in secondary proceedings has a specific power to repatriate, through the courts or out of court, any assets which have been removed from England to another Member State after proceedings have been opened and to bring any action to set aside which is in the interests of the creditors¹⁴⁸.

¹⁴⁴ "Liquidator" under the Regulation means any person or body whose function is to administer or liquidate assets of the debtor or to supervise the administration of the debtor's affairs and includes both a liquidator and an administrator of a company.

¹⁴⁵ If English insolvency proceedings are opened as main proceedings in respect of a foreign corporation, the Regulation provides that English law will apply to the conduct of the insolvency proceedings. An action for wrongful or fraudulent trading, which is an insolvency-related action and which can only be brought in the context of insolvency proceedings, should therefore be caught by the terms of the Regulation and English law would apply. But English law will not determine, for example, whether there has been a breach of the directors' fiduciary duties since this is not a matter of insolvency law but, rather, local corporate law. Equally, director disqualification proceedings under the CDDA 1986 may not apply to directors of a foreign corporation either. Whilst such proceedings are often brought in the context of insolvency proceedings, they are not insolvency proceedings per se and may accordingly fall outside of the jurisdictional ambit of the Regulation. This approach accords with that adopted by the German courts in the Regional Court of Kiel 10.S.44.05 April 20 2006. (Contrast this with the position of a foreign company to which the Regulation does not apply but which may become subject to English insolvency proceedings under section 221 IA 1986 or pursuant to a section 426 request – refer to paragraphs 9.4.3 and 9.4.4 below, the caselaw on which predates the Regulation).

¹⁴⁶ A separate question, which has been referred by the German courts to the European Court of Justice, in Case BGH 1X ZR 39/06 is which court has jurisdiction to hear any such challenge – the court in the jurisdiction in which the insolvency proceedings have been opened or the court in the jurisdiction in which the foreign company is incorporated.

¹⁴⁸ Article 18(2) of the Regulation.

- 9.2.9 A point, which has not yet been considered by the English courts, is whether proceedings for wrongful or fraudulent trading may be brought by a liquidator appointed in secondary proceedings in England against the directors of a foreign corporation. Secondary proceedings are restricted to the company's assets in the jurisdiction in which the secondary proceedings have been opened and, on a strict interpretation, wrongful/fraudulent trading proceedings are not an asset of the company. One view is that a liquidator in secondary proceedings cannot therefore bring an action for wrongful or fraudulent trading. A, perhaps, more practical and pragmatic interpretation of the Regulation would be that a liquidator can bring such proceedings (even if the directors are or may become subject to a similar proceedings elsewhere in the main proceedings¹⁴⁹) but that the proceedings must be restricted to assets and trading relating to or situate in England. The office-holder in the main proceedings and the office holder in any secondary proceedings would, in any event, be required under the Regulation to co-operate with each other and one would therefore expect a coordinated approach to such matters to be adopted.
- 9.2.10 The comments in footnote 156 with regard to the CDDA 1996 director disqualification proceedings apply equally to secondary proceedings opened in respect of a foreign corporation.
- 9.2.11 In relation to the matters considered in question 4 above, the vulnerability of any transaction at an undervalue or preference entered into during the twilight period will be subject to the application of Article 13 of the Regulation¹⁵⁰.

9.3 Winding up of a foreign company as an “unregistered company” under section 221 IA 1986

- 9.3.1 A foreign company may be wound up in England and Wales, in certain circumstances, as an “unregistered” company¹⁵¹. In general, all the provisions of the IA 1986 will apply equally on the winding-up of an “unregistered” company¹⁵². (see further 9.4.3 and 9.4.4 below)
- 9.3.2 The IA 1986 provides no specific criteria for determining when it is appropriate for the English courts to assume jurisdiction and wind-up an unregistered company. Instead, the courts have developed a general test consisting of three “core” requirements. These can be summarised as follows:
- (a) there must be a sufficient connection with England and Wales which may, but does not necessarily have to, consist of assets within the jurisdiction of the English court;
 - (b) there must be a reasonable possibility, if a winding-up order is made, of benefit to those applying for the winding-up order; and ¹⁴⁹ If proceedings for wrongful trading and its equivalent in another jurisdiction were brought against the directors in both main and secondary proceedings, the directors should not have to contribute more than the total loss caused by their wrongful trading. A judgment handed down by a court with jurisdiction in the main or the secondary proceedings and which concerns the course of those insolvency proceedings must be recognised in all other Member States without further formality; consequently any amount which the directors are ordered to pay under the first set of proceedings should be taken into account when quantifying any contribution they are required to make under any order made in another jurisdiction.

- (c) one or more persons interested in the distribution of the assets of the company must be persons over whom the court can exercise jurisdiction.

9.3.3 In practice, it would normally be considered sufficient for the company to have, or have had, a place of business or a branch office or to have assets within the jurisdiction of the English court. However, other examples of where the English court has determined that there is a sufficient “connection” with the English jurisdiction include; a company having a claim against an insurer based in England; making a winding-up order which would entitle former employees of the foreign company to claim statutory redundancy payments; that the debt upon which the winding-up petition is founded was incurred within the English jurisdiction; and where the liquidator would be entitled to launch a claim against the former directors of the foreign company for wrongful trading which may subsequently produce a realisation to be distributed to creditors. It will usually be fairly clear whether or not the making of a winding-up order will potentially benefit creditors of the foreign company if the potential return will be more than de minimis. Likewise, the court will need to be satisfied that those who may benefit are either subject to the jurisdiction or have submitted to the jurisdiction of the English court.

9.4. Application under section 426 IA 1986

9.4.1 Under section 426 of the IA 1986, the English court is under a duty to assist, as far as possible, with a request for assistance in matters of insolvency received from a court in any other part of the United Kingdom or from any “relevant country or territory”¹⁵³. This could include a request to wind up or make an administration order in respect of a foreign company.¹⁵⁴ In particular, where the English court receives such a request, the court may apply, in relation to the issues specified in the request, either the insolvency law applicable in the jurisdiction of the court making the request (in relation to comparable matters falling within the English court’s jurisdiction) or the normal insolvency law of England. This apparently wide authority is limited by the normal rules of private international law and consequently, the English court retains a discretion to refuse to provide assistance in certain circumstances (for example, where providing such assistance would prejudice local creditors).

9.4.2 However, where it is appropriate to respond to a request to wind up or, more likely, to appoint an administrator over a foreign company¹⁵⁵, the English court will have the power to make such an appointment and the administrator (or liquidator) so appointed will enjoy the normal powers afforded to an administrator (or liquidator, as appropriate) of an English company including the ability to review transactions and if necessary to apply to the court to have any transactions at undervalue or preferences set aside.

¹⁵⁴ Re Dallhold Estates (UK) Pty Ltd [1992] BCC 394.

- 9.4.3 Of the relevant provisions concerning the enforcement of directors' duties, the English courts have confirmed that directors (whether resident in the UK or not) of a foreign company which is being wound-up by the English court will be subject to the court's jurisdiction in connection with an application by the liquidator against those directors for either wrongful or fraudulent trading.¹⁵⁶ This will be the case even if the country of incorporation of the relevant company does not contain an equivalent provision within its insolvency laws. However, the English court would take account of the standard of care and other duties owed by those directors in the country of incorporation of the company when deciding whether to make those directors liable for their actions. The English courts have also held that in the winding-up of a foreign company the provisions of the IA 1986 relating to transactions at undervalue and preferences will apply.¹⁵⁷ It should also be noted that the provisions of section 236 IA 1986 placing directors under an obligation to provide information will apply equally to directors domiciled abroad. The same would, prima facie, apply to a foreign company subject to English administration proceedings.
- 9.4.4 In addition, various provisions of the CDDA 1986 relating to the disqualification of a director may be applied by the English courts. This will be the case irrespective of whether the director was resident within the jurisdiction, whether the conduct of that director took place within the jurisdiction or whether or not the director is a British citizen. This will be important for directors of foreign companies as a disqualification order may be made on the basis of "unfitness" to be a director not only as a result of wrongful or fraudulent trading but also as a result of being a director of a company which has entered into a transaction at undervalue or given a preference. A director may also be found "unfit" to be a director as a result of a breach of the various other requirements imposed on directors under the Companies Act 2006 or the IA 1986 and which are detailed in the responses to questions 2 and 3 above.

9.5 Norwegian, Icelandic and Liechtenstein companies

- 9.5.1 By virtue of the definition of "company" in paragraph 111(1A) of Schedule B1 to the IA 1986, a company incorporated in Norway, Iceland or Liechtenstein may become subject to English administration proceedings.
- 9.5.2 "Company" is defined to mean:
- (a) a company within the meaning of section 735(1) of the Companies Act 1985,
 - (b) a company incorporated in an EEA State other than the United Kingdom, or
 - (c) a company not incorporated in an EEA State but having its centre of main interests in a member State other than Denmark.

- 9.5.3 Norway, Iceland and Leichtenstein are the only countries that are EEA States but not members of the European Union. As a consequence, a company incorporated in any of these countries may become subject to administration proceedings even though its centre of main interests is not in England (as is required under the Regulation).
- 9.5.4 The author is not aware of any cases in which this definition has been relied upon to appoint an administrator to a Norwegian, Icelandic or Leichtensten company. However, in the event of any such appointment, the administrator would have, prima facie, all the powers referred in section 5 above to enforce the rights and duties of a director (subject to the comments above in 9.4.3 and 9.4.4 in relation to the powers of a liquidator in respect of a foreign company).

9.6 Foreign company able to avail itself of the provisions of The Cross-Border Insolvency Regulations 2006

- 9.6.1 On 4 April 2006, the UNCITRAL Model Law on Cross-Border Insolvency was implemented in Great Britain by The Cross-Border Insolvency Regulations 2006, SI 2006/1030 (the Cross-Border Regulations). The Cross-Border Regulations enable officeholders in a foreign insolvency (known as the foreign officeholder) to seek recognition of their insolvency in England (and the rest of Great Britain) and, in appropriate circumstances, to commence English insolvency proceedings in respect of the foreign company. Under English law, there is no restriction on the countries (and therefore the foreign officeholder) that may take advantage of the Cross-Border Regulations although, as a general matter, an English court will only have jurisdiction to consider a recognition application if the debtor company has a place of business or assets in Great Britain or the court considers for any other reason that England (or Great Britain) is the appropriate forum to consider the question or provide the assistance requested.
- 9.6.2 Recognition may be sought in respect of two types of foreign insolvency proceedings:
- (a) "foreign main proceedings" which are proceedings taking place in the State in which the debtor has its "centre of main interests" which is not defined but is subject to a rebuttable registered office presumption substantially similar to the presumption in the Regulation; and
 - (b) "foreign non-main proceedings" which are proceedings taking place in a State where the debtor has an "establishment" which is defined to have a meaning similar to the definition in the Regulation.

The effect of obtaining recognition will depend upon whether the proceedings in respect of which recognition is sought are foreign main or foreign non-main proceedings; relief will apply on either an automatic or discretionary basis.

- 9.6.3 Upon obtaining recognition, the foreign officeholder is granted a right to bring proceedings under English law (known as an art. 23 application) to challenge transactions at an undervalue, preferences, extortionate credit transactions and transactions in fraud of creditors (even if English administration or liquidation proceedings have not been commenced).¹⁵⁸ So, for example, where in a foreign insolvency a transaction at an undervalue or a preference has been made in favour of an English creditor (but it is not appropriate to open English insolvency proceedings) a foreign officeholder can still enforce the anti-avoidance provisions referred to in section 4 above by obtaining recognition of the foreign insolvency proceedings under the Cross-Border Regulations and making an art. 23 application.
- 9.6.4 Additionally, a foreign officeholder is granted the right under the Cross-Border Regulations to apply directly to the English courts to commence English insolvency proceedings.¹⁵⁹ This right is not conditional upon the foreign officeholder having first obtained recognition of the foreign proceedings in England. However, it is subject to the conditions for commencing such a proceeding being met as a matter of English (or British) insolvency law.
- 9.6.5 Accordingly, in relation to administration proceedings, this means that administration will only be available to a foreign company if it falls within the definition of “company” in paragraph 111(1A) of Schedule B1 to the IA 1986 - see 9.5.2 above - in effect, if it is a company with its centre of main interests in the European Union or if it is a Norwegian, Icelandic or Liechtenstein company, discussed above. In relation to liquidation proceedings, this will depend upon the tests set out in 9.3.2 above.

QUESTION 10

10. Insurance

Is directors’ and officers’ insurance available in your jurisdiction? If so, to what extent will the availability of such insurance provide effective protection to directors against personal liability which may arise in connection with the issues raised in questions 1-9 above?

¹⁵⁸ If English insolvency proceedings are afoot, the permission of the court will be required first and, if the foreign proceedings are non-main proceedings, the court will need to be satisfied that the art. 23 application relates to assets that, under the law of England, should be administered in the foreign non-main proceeding.

- 10.1 It is permissible (and common) for a director to take out insurance against liability for negligence, default, breach of duty or breach of trust and the company may lawfully pay the premiums¹⁶⁰. Directors may not exclude their liability for these matters. Further as a general rule, the company cannot indemnify a director against liability for his negligence, default, breach of duty or breach of trust in relation to the company.¹⁶¹ However, as an exception to this general rule, the company may provide a director with third party indemnity cover (an indemnity against liability incurred to a person other than the company or an associated company) subject to the indemnity meeting certain qualifying terms (namely, it may not indemnify the director against liability incurred in defending criminal proceedings in which he is convicted, in defending civil proceedings brought by the company in which judgment is given against him or in respect of a fine imposed in criminal proceedings or a sum payable to a regulatory authority in respect of non-compliance with any regulatory requirement)¹⁶².
- 10.2 The insurance policy cannot enable the director to insure against his own wilful or fraudulent wrongdoing as it will be struck down on grounds of public policy. However, it is felt that it is possible to insure against wrongful trading. It would not, however, be possible to insure against fraudulent trading given the public policy considerations.
- 10.3 The main insurance policy available to directors and recommended by the Institute of Directors is the director's personal liability cover. This specifically excludes any claims based on or arising out of any insolvency proceedings and insolvency is defined in similar terms to that laid out in question 1.¹⁶³ A policy is, however, available by which directors can insure against actions arising out of insolvency, but such cover must be obtained from specialist brokers through Lloyds.

¹⁶¹ Section 232(2) Companies Act 2006 renders void any such indemnity provided by the company (directly or indirectly).

¹⁶² Section 234 Companies Act 2006.

¹⁶³ Information obtained from Chubb Insurance Limited, the official insurers recommended by the Institute of Directors.

QUESTION 11

11. How safe is it for directors and others to incur further credit during the twilight period?

11.1 Overview

11.1.1 The details of directors' duties are considered above at question 2. Directors, when their company is insolvent or may become insolvent, must think primarily of the interests of the creditors of their company rather than the shareholders - as it is the creditors' money that is now at risk. So, for example, while a transfer of assets at less than full market value may, when a company is solvent, be ratified by the shareholders (they can in a sense do what they like with their money - although note that they cannot make an illegal return of capital, see Aveling Barford -v- Perion), in the case of insolvency or potential insolvency the breach of duty inherent in the sale at less than market value cannot be ratified by the shareholders. This is the position at common law but is also reflected in the clawback provision under section 238 IA 1986 in connection with transactions at undervalue (see question 4 above). Similarly, generally speaking some creditors should not be paid ahead of others (the law of preferences - the successor to the Roman Paulian action).

11.1.2 Usually the most difficult decision for directors is whether to incur more credit. English law tackles this in two, not entirely, compatible ways. The main focus of attention as described at question 2 above, is the question of whether it can be said there is a reasonable (objectively considered) prospect of the company avoiding an insolvent liquidation. If that is not a reasonable prospect then the directors will be liable unless they do everything to minimise losses to creditors. But suppose doing the best by creditors is to conduct a process of selling crucial assets as a going concern without going into an insolvency procedure. Yet to do so will involve incurring more credit to keep the business going. It is of little comfort to a creditor who comes into the picture for the first time by supplying goods during this period to know that the creditors who were already owed money at the critical point are going to get a better dividend on their debts as a result of the continued trading and sale as a going concern. Where it can be said that the director is dishonest in incurring the credit - knowingly going beyond what a reasonable man of business would regard as honest - then he will be fraudulently trading even though doing his best for the general body of creditors.

11.1.3 English law therefore seeks to strike a balance between the need to stop directors running their companies at the expense of creditors and exploiting them and, on the other hand, not putting undue pressure on directors in what is a very difficult time. Directors need to be strong but not reckless. They need robust, helpful, legal advice but must be stopped from believing in "pie in the sky" schemes.

11.1.4 In practice, in England, well-advised directors will get independent professional help on the legal and accounting sides to bolster any decision they make to carry on trading.¹⁶⁴ They will get on top of the financial position of the company - perhaps for the first time: just how often is it that a significant part of a company's problem is its failure to understand its own financial position. They will develop a plan of recovery with their accountants and seek the support of their creditors (often banks and major suppliers). Lawyers will assist in ensuring that board meetings are held regularly to consider responsibly and objectively the company's position and its prospects and document these in the minutes of the meetings.

11.2 Can an unconnected third party rely on the validity of transactions entered into by the company (in particular guarantees and securities) during the twilight period?

11.2.1 The risk of dealing with a company which is or may become insolvent is that most legal systems, and English law is no exception, have a vulnerability period running back from the moment the insolvency procedure commences. In English law, the main periods are six months for preferences and two years for transactions at undervalue. Other heads of attack have no such time limit, for example, section 423 IA 1986 - transactions defrauding creditors - or cases where directors have been acting in breach of duty and this is something of which a counterparty dealing with the company is fully aware. We look at the two main statutory clawback provisions.

11.3 Preferences

11.3.1 The law here is concerned with the clawback of payments and the over-turning of security. There are two philosophical approaches to the doctrine of preference and English and U.S. law are quite different in their approach. In the US, it is a defence to a preference claim that the transaction was entered into in the ordinary course of business and on ordinary terms (ie the position is viewed from an objective perspective) whereas, in England, the focus is on what the directors are subjectively trying to do. If pressure is operating on the mind of the directors - pressure from creditors who threaten winding-up proceedings for example - then it is unlikely that the directors are going to be motivated by a 'desire' to put any particular creditor in a better position but are in fact likely to be simply trying to ensure their own survival. This encourages creditors to put pressure on a company in trouble, the opposite of the effect in the United States.

11.3.2 What is the practical reality for a creditor considering the preference law? The practical answer almost always will be: 'take the money/security'. It may well be hard to show what the subjective intention of the directors was and particularly to show that it was to benefit a particular bank or other creditor. Why should the director want to achieve that end? Where the director had given a personal guarantee to that creditor the answer may be all too obvious, but in the absence of those incriminating circumstances preference law in the U.K., certainly on the basis of the leading first instance decision of Re M.C. Bacon, has few teeth.

¹⁶⁴ Although it will not be enough to take advice if that advice is predicated on the directors' honest and reasonable belief that the company will be able to avoid insolvent liquidation if, in the light of the directors' actual knowledge, there is no reasonable basis for that belief: Re The Rod Gunner Organisation Ltd (Rubin v Gunner) [2004] All ER (D) 05.

11.4 Transactions at an undervalue

- 11.4.1 The law quite properly wishes to prevent a company dissipating its assets at less than market value where that will reduce the dividend to creditors. But how can a counterparty wishing to buy assets from a company facing insolvency know that a liquidator or administrator will not try and set the transaction aside if an administration or liquidation does indeed ensue? Well, the answer is that he does not know. If the price is less than market value, then unless the transaction is for other reasons in the interests of or benefit to the company and for the purposes of its business carrying on, it is likely to be attacked. English law has not fully resolved what the court will do where it finds undervalue but common sense suggests that in most cases the counterparty will be expected to make up the difference in value.
- 11.4.2 Thus, in many cases a robust counterparty will 'do the deal' (i.e. complete the transaction) and fight any attack by a liquidator or administrator later. If they have got a very keen price which is insupportable then they have to expect they might have to disgorge the benefit. The difficulty probably arises where they buy a business in substantial need of investment and they are concerned that the court may in fact reverse the entire transaction. However, where someone has altered their position and further invested it seems hard to believe the court would seek to reverse the transaction when there is an alternative simply to require a cash payment to make up the undervalue. A practical answer is to seek comfort that the directors have taken proper professional - often accounting but perhaps also legal - advice on their position and confirmation that the directors are satisfied that the transaction is in the interests of the company. A solvency certificate would be useful if the company is not actually insolvent at the time or as a result of the transaction. In practice that is unlikely to be forthcoming. The temptation may well be to say that the deal can only be done with an insolvency practitioner and require the company to go into a formal insolvency procedure but again that can often damage the goodwill of the business or render key contracts or assets liable to termination and may harden the attitude of counterparties to such key contracts who might otherwise have been prepared to agree to a sale or assignment to a purchaser.

APPENDIX

Summary of primary English insolvency procedures

1. Introduction

- 1.1 When a corporate borrower faces insolvency there are a variety of insolvency options available, some of which are open to the company and some of which are only open to its secured creditors.
- 1.2 There are four principal insolvency regimes for English companies:
 - (a) receivership (including administrative receivership);
 - (b) voluntary arrangements and schemes of arrangement with creditors;
 - (c) administration; and
 - (d) liquidation (also known as winding-up).
- 1.3 Receivership may be classified as a self-help remedy for secured creditors. Voluntary arrangements involve compromises of the companies' debts with its creditors which can be statutory and formal or out of court arrangements. Administration and liquidation are the formal statutory procedures for dealing with companies which are insolvent.

2. Receivership

- 2.1 Although in certain circumstances, often arising out of litigation, the court may appoint a receiver for specific purposes, in English insolvency law when the term receiver is used it is almost always taken to mean the appointment of someone to enforce security given by a company to those to whom it has obligations - normally its bankers. If the holder of the security has the power to appoint a receiver or administrative receiver under the terms of the security (see paragraph 2.3 below) and that power has arisen (for example on default by the borrower to make payment), then the charge holder may appoint a receiver or administrative receiver to take control of the assets and/or business of the borrower without the need for any authorisation of the court.
- 2.2 An administrative receiver (not to be confused with an administrator) is someone appointed over all or substantially all the assets of a company under debentures secured by charges which include a floating charge. The significance of a receiver being an administrative receiver rather than an ordinary or non-administrative receiver is two-fold. First, there are certain powers and certain duties affecting specifically an administrative receiver under the legislation and, secondly, where an administrative receiver has been appointed, no administrator may be appointed unless the secured creditor consents. (See paragraph 4 below)

- 2.3 Since 15 September 2003, the ability of the holder of a floating charge to appoint an administrative receiver has been severely curtailed.¹⁶⁵ Unless one of a limited number of exceptions applies or the floating charge was created prior to 15 September 2003, the secured creditor will be prohibited from appointing an administrative receiver. Instead, the secured creditor will be able to appoint an administrator as a means of enforcing its security (see paragraph 4 below). The key commercial difference between administrative receivership and administration, insofar as the secured creditor is concerned, is the level of control which the creditor has (which is greater in a receivership) and the more rigid statutory objectives of administration (see paragraph 4 below).
- 2.4 An administrative receiver's functions are to realise the assets and property charged and to repay the charge holder the amounts due to it after deduction of his costs, expenses and remuneration and, in the case of floating charge assets, after setting aside an amount (known as the prescribed part) for the benefit of unsecured creditors¹⁶⁶ and paying preferential creditors (the categories of preferential debts are set out in schedule 6 IA 1986 but are, primarily, employee liabilities). An administrative receiver or non-administrative receiver (who has been provided with management powers) may continue to trade the company's business prior to a sale on a going concern basis.
- 2.5 Receivership is not an "insolvency proceeding" for the purposes of the EC Insolvency Regulation and so the appointment of a receiver or administrative receiver in the UK would be outside the scope of the Regulation; the receiver would not automatically be recognised in other Member States pursuant to the Regulation. Recognition and the ability of the receiver to take possession of assets located in other Member States would be a matter of the private international law of the Member State concerned.

3. Schemes and voluntary arrangements

- 3.1 Where a company is essentially profitable but its debt burden and interest burden is too great, it may be able to persuade its creditors to convert some of their debt into equity and to continue funding the company. This is a simple example of a restructuring which might be effected through a voluntary arrangement or a scheme of arrangement. Arrangements can be pursued through the formal procedures set out in the IA 1986 and the Companies Acts or effected on a contractual basis, conducted out of court.

4. Administration

- 4.1 Administration is a procedure pursuant to which a company and its business may be rescued, reorganised or its business and assets realised under the protection of a statutory moratorium (a protective breathing space from creditor action). It is loosely modeled on the American chapter 11 procedure though it is dangerous to take this analogy too far.

- 4.2 The corporate insolvency provisions of the Enterprise Act 2002, which came into force on 15 September 2003, had a significant impact on the administration regime. In particular, the Enterprise Act 2002 introduced two new out-of-court routes into administration for (i) the company and (ii) a “qualifying floating charge-holder” (see paragraph 4.4 below). The objective was to enable administrators to be appointed more quickly, cheaply and efficiently than before and, in particular, to provide an easy out-of-court route for secured creditors in place of appointing of administrative receivers. Tighter timeframes for the administration process and a new power for the administrator to make distributions, with the leave of the court, to unsecured creditors were also provided for.
- 4.3 An administrator may still be appointed by the court on the application of a creditor (including a secured creditor), the directors of the company or the company itself. The court will decide at a hearing whether the order should be made and it may only be made if the company is insolvent, or likely to become so, and the court is satisfied that the administration order is reasonably likely to achieve the purpose of administration. The purpose of administration is, first, to rescue the company as a going concern, second (if the first purpose cannot be achieved), to achieve a better result for the company’s creditors as a whole than would be likely if the company were wound up and, third (if neither of the first two purposes can be achieved), to realise property in order to make a distribution to one or more secured or preferential creditors.
- 4.4 As noted above, an administrator may now also be appointed without involving the court (i.e. out of court) by the holder of a “qualifying floating charge” or by the company itself or its directors. The holder of a “qualifying floating charge” must hold security, which includes a floating charge, over the whole or substantially the whole of the assets of the company and which meets certain drafting requirements. A qualifying floating charge holder can appoint if the floating charge is enforceable – the company need not necessarily be insolvent. The company and directors can only appoint if the company is unable to pay its debts.
- 4.5 If a creditor, the company or the directors wish to appoint an administrator (either via the court or out of court), notice of their intention to appoint must first be given to any holder of a qualifying floating charge. This enables the floating charge holder to get in first with an out-of-court appointment of an administrator of its choosing or, if not prohibited, the appointment of an administrative receiver (see paragraph 2 above) thereby blocking the proposed appointment of the administrator. The qualifying floating charge holder is required only to give notice of its intention to appoint to any prior qualifying floating charge holder.
- 4.6 The purpose of administration is the same whether the administrator is appointed out of court or by the court – refer to paragraph 4.3 above.

- 4.7 Regardless of who appoints, the administrator effectively displaces the directors in running the company and he is required to produce proposals within eight weeks of his appointment, which he must put to a meeting of the creditors within ten weeks of his appointment, detailing how he proposes to achieve the purpose of administration. The administrator must perform his functions in the interests of the company's creditors as a whole although he may not include in his proposals any action which would affect the right of any secured creditor to enforce his security without that secured creditor's consent. This is subject to the specific powers granted to an administrator referred to in paragraph 4.8 below.
- 4.8 The administrator may use assets subject to a floating charge as if they were not subject to that charge, save only that any proceeds representing the floating charge assets are themselves again subject to the floating charge. With the sanction of the court the administrator may sell fixed charge assets free of the fixed charge, subject only to accounting to the fixed charge holder for market value or, if greater, the sale proceeds actually received. The effect for a secured creditor is, therefore, loss of control.
- 4.9 One important feature of administration is that, on the presentation to court of an administration application or the filing in court of a notice of intention to appoint an administrator, a statutory moratorium on creditor action (without the leave of the court) comes into effect. The statutory moratorium is continued, in nearly identical terms, if the company goes into administration. The prohibition covers peaceable re-entry by a landlord, distraint, the levying of execution, the repossession of leased goods and the taking or continuing of proceedings and it also includes the enforcement of security.¹⁶⁷ The only enforcement of security which may take place is that a creditor entitled to appoint an administrative receiver may (subject to the prohibition referred to in paragraph 2.3 above) do so on being notified of the application to court to appoint an administrator or the notice of intention to appoint an administrator out of court. The appointment of an administrative receiver has the effect of preventing the appointment of an administrator. No other enforcement of security may take place and, if an administrative receiver is not appointed before the administrator has been appointed, no enforcement of security (including the appointment of an administrative receiver) may then take place. Effectively, the secured creditor has one chance to appoint his administrative receiver (if not prohibited from so doing) or to choose who is appointed as administrator.
- 4.10 There is one set of circumstances in which the court may still make an administration order, notwithstanding the fact that an administrative receiver has been appointed by secured creditors. If the security under which the administrative receiver has been appointed is vulnerable, either as a preference or under section 245 IA 1986 or as a transaction at an undervalue the court may discharge the administrative receiver and make an administration order.

¹⁶⁷ There is an exception for certain types of security over "financial collateral" (very broadly, cash, share and tradeable bonds) if the security is taken within the context of a "security financial collateral arrangement" within the meaning given to that expression in the Financial Collateral Arrangements (No 2) Regulations 2003 (SI 2003/3226) which implement in the UK the Financial Collateral Directive (Directive 2002/47/EC).

5. Liquidation

- 5.1 Liquidation (or winding-up) is the dissolution procedure for companies under English law. In that sense, it might be thought similar to Chapter 7 in the United States ('Bankruptcy' is a term applied only to individuals in England, never to companies).
- 5.2 Liquidation can take one of two forms. First, it can be a voluntary liquidation which occurs where the shareholders of the company pass a resolution to place the company into liquidation and, where the company is insolvent, a meeting of creditors will be called to confirm the identity of the person to be appointed as liquidator of the company. This procedure is known as a creditors' voluntary liquidation. Alternatively, the company or a creditor may present a petition to the court for a compulsory winding-up, and if the company is insolvent, a winding-up order will be made by the court in due course. Liquidation has long been the standard dissolution procedure for English companies. There is no freeze on enforcement of security by creditors.

FRANCE

1. The start and duration of the “twilight” period

What is the length of the period ending with formal insolvency proceedings during which transactions entered into by a company are vulnerable to attack or are liable to give rise to personal liability on the part of directors and/or others involved in the management of the company?

1.1 Overview

- 1.1.1 For the purposes of assessing the vulnerability of transactions to attack (as opposed to the possible personal liability of directors), the twilight period is in practice known in France as the “suspect period” (la période suspecte)¹. Under French law this period is treated separately from the period during which transactions entered into by a company are liable to give rise to personal liability on the part of directors and/or others involved in the management of the company.
- 1.1.2 The date on which the suspect period is deemed to begin is that on which the company first became unable to pay its debts as they fall due or, to use the French terminology, in a state of cessation of payments (cessation de paiements) – a cash-flow insolvency test. In principle, there is no suspect period prior to a safeguard procedure (procédure de sauvegarde), as only debtors that are not yet in cessation of payments are permitted to enter the safeguard procedure.²
- 1.1.3 The determination of the date on which the company first became unable to pay its debts (and therefore on which the suspect (twilight) period commenced) is made in one of three ways (in each case by the court with jurisdiction over the insolvency proceedings):
 - (a) the court finds in its judgment opening the formal insolvency proceedings that the date is the same as the date of the judgment opening the proceedings. In such a case, there is no suspect or “twilight” period.
 - (b) the court finds, as a question of fact, that the date occurred prior to the date of its order to open formal insolvency proceedings.
 - (c) subsequent to the order to open formal insolvency proceedings, the court, upon application by the court-appointed administrator, the creditor representative, the court-appointed liquidator or the Public Prosecutor, decides, after a prior consultation of the debtor, to revisit its original determination on the basis of new facts and modifies the date of cessation de paiements. Such an application must be made within one year of the judgment opening the procedure.

- 1.1.4 The suspect or twilight period ends on the date on which the tribunal orders the opening of formal insolvency proceedings.
- 1.1.5 Except in respect of transactions made for no consideration, the maximum duration of the suspect or twilight period is 18 months³. Such period is not calculated as a function of the nature of the act in question. The maximum period of 18 months applies notwithstanding that the actual date of cessation de paiements is determined to be earlier.
- 1.1.6 With respect to transactions made for no consideration, the suspect or twilight period may be extended for up to an additional period of 6 months prior to the date of cessation de paiements (that is, above and beyond the period of 18 months discussed above).
- 1.1.7 The duration of the period during which transactions entered into by the company are liable to give rise to personal liability on the part of directors and/or others involved in the management of the company is not specifically determined by law. Each of the different types of transaction in question is considered in more detail in response to question 2. In certain circumstances, the risk of liability arises only after the date of cessation de paiements. In other circumstances, liability may arise if there is a causal link between the relevant act of the defendant-manager and the companies' difficulties. There is in the latter type of situation, therefore, no formal period during which transactions are vulnerable.

1.2 Summary

- 1.2.1 If a company is cash-flow insolvent and thereafter (maximum eighteen months or twenty-four months in the case of transactions without consideration) goes into formal insolvency proceedings, certain specifically defined transactions may or must be declared null and void.
- 1.2.2 Further, directors and/or others involved in the management of the company may be personally liable for certain types of transaction either if such transaction is entered into during the "twilight" period or if there is a causal link between the companies' difficulties and the transaction in question.

QUESTION 2

2. Actions potentially giving rise to liability for directors

- (a) In respect of which acts during the "twilight" period may a director be held personally liable or which may otherwise have adverse consequences for him?
- (b) In relation to each act identified in (a) above:

³ Article L.631-8 of the Commercial Code.

- (i) is any resulting liability against a director civil, criminal or both?
- (ii) can a director be made personally liable in respect of the whole loss caused to the company or the deficit to creditors?
- (iii) will liability attach to individual directors in proportion to their specific involvement?
- (iv) is there a specified period before commencement of a subsequent insolvency procedure within which the relevant act must have been undertaken in order for liability to attach to a director?
- (v) what defences, if any, will be available in relation to each offence?

2.1 General

French law does not approach the question of the possible liability of directors and/or others involved in the management of a company in formal insolvency proceedings on the basis of the type of acts such persons are alleged to have performed. Rather French law starts from the causes of action available against such persons based on their behaviour. The responses to this question are therefore explained below on the basis of the different types of causes of action available, enumerating (not in all cases exhaustively, since this would be impossible) the types of behaviour concerned.

2.2 Action “en responsabilité pour insuffisance d’actif” (based on the insufficiency of assets)

2.2.1 De jure and de facto managers⁴ of the debtor may be subject to personal liability in the event that, following the court’s approval of a safeguard or recovery plan, the debtor fails to respect the terms of the plan. In the case of liquidation proceedings, liability may attach to such persons where the following criteria are met (cumulatively):⁵

- (i) a de jure or de facto manager of the company has committed a fault in the management of the company (“faute de gestion”). The notion of fault in the management of the company is not specifically defined by statute. Case law has refined the concept to cover errors in the management of the company, lack of care (negligence) or breaches of law, regulation or the by-laws of the company. Determination of whether a faute de gestion has occurred is a question of fact for the court.
- (ii) the liabilities of the company exceed the value of its assets, such difference to be assessed at the time the court determines liability. Notwithstanding the foregoing, debts that arise after the opening of formal insolvency proceedings are not included in the company’s liabilities for purposes of the foregoing analysis.

- (iii) there exists a causal link between the insufficiency of assets and the faute de gestion, meaning that the faute de gestion must be found to have contributed (in the sense of caused) the insolvent situation of the company. It is not, however, necessary that the faute be the exclusive cause; it only has to be one of the determining causes.

2.2.2 If (i) to (iii) of 2.2.1 above are satisfied:

- (i) Liability is civil.
- (ii) The person found liable will be required to pay damages which are included in the assets of the debtor for distribution to creditors. It is up to the judge to decide, on the basis of the seriousness of the fault and the strength of the causal link, whether the person in question should pay damages or not. (That is, even if (i) to (iii) of 2.2.1 above are satisfied, the judge is not required to impose a sanction on the defendant).
- (iii) It is up to the judge to decide the amount of damages that the person found liable must pay to the company. This amount is not necessarily proportional to the level of contribution of the fault to the debts of the company. The maximum amount of damages is the total amount of the liabilities of the company in excess of the available assets.
- (iv) There is no specific time limit prior to the commencement of formal insolvency proceedings during which the faute de gestion must have occurred. In practice, of course, the period of time is limited by the need for there to be a causal link between the faute de gestion and the insolvency of the company. In the vast majority of cases, the last possible faute de gestion that can be committed by management occurs when the declaration of cessation de paiement is not filed within the legal limitation period of 45 days after the date of cessation of payments⁶. This is also the fault most commonly sanctioned by the courts.
- (v) Other than the general defences of an absence of faute (including, in the case of an alleged de facto manager, absence of the person's implication in the management of the company as a matter of fact) or an absence of causal link or an absence of insufficiency of assets, there are no specific defences to the action.

2.3 Liability for the debts of the company

- 2.3.1 In the course of liquidation proceedings, the court may decide that one of the de jure or de facto managers of the legal entity should bear all or part of the latter's debts.⁷ To do so, the court must determine that the manager committed one of the faults referred to below, and that such fault has contributed to the cessation of payments:

⁷ Article L. 652-1 of the Commercial Code.

- (i) used property of the company as his or her own property; this concept covers a wide range of different types of behaviour including most typically excessive remuneration, withdrawals from the company's bank account for personal ends, performance of renovation or other works by the company for personal ends, payment of personal expenses, etc.;
- (ii) undertook commercial transactions for his or her personal interest under the guise of the corporate entity; this typically applies to directors who abuse their majority position in the company and direct the company in their own personal interest.
- (iii) used the property or credit of the company in a manner contrary to the company's own interest for personal ends or the ends of another company in which the manager has a direct or indirect interest; this type of behaviour is in practice very similar to that covered by (i).
- (iv) abusively and for personal ends pursued a loss-making activity which would inevitably lead to the company falling into a situation of cessation of payments; this concept covers, typically, directors who, using artificial financial methods, maintain a company afloat for the purpose of continuing to receive remuneration, to reduce the amount of a personal shareholder loan or to pay off company debts that he or she has guaranteed.
- (v) misappropriated or concealed all or part of the assets of the company or fraudulently increased the liabilities of the company. This is the most serious type of behaviour. It involves the individual seeking to organise the insolvency of the company or dealing with the assets of the company to the detriment of the company's creditors.

2.3.2 If any of (i) to (v) above are satisfied:

- (i) Liability is civil.
- (ii) Damages payable by the guilty person to the company are quantified by the judge. The amount of damages is not necessarily proportional to the level of contribution of the fault to the debts of the company. The maximum amount of damages is the total amount of the liabilities of the company. If there are several de jure or de facto managers found liable, the judge will decide the amount of damages according to their respective faults. He may declare them jointly and severally liable. If a manager is found liable under these provisions, he may not be subject to action "en responsabilité pour insuffisance d'actifs" as mentioned in 2.2 above.
- (iii) There is no specific time limit prior to the commencement of formal insolvency proceedings during which the specific wrongful action must have occurred. In practice, of course, the period of time is limited by the "informal" requirement that there be a link between the act in question and the insolvency of the company.
- (iv) Other than the general defences of an absence of one or more of the specific requirements for the offence, there are no specific defences to the action.

2.4 Personal bankruptcy – prohibition on management

2.4.1 An individual de jure or de facto director may be subject to personal bankruptcy in any of the following cases during the course of formal insolvency proceedings commenced against the company⁸:

- (i) having abusively carried out an unprofitable business activity that would necessarily lead to the legal entity's insolvency;
- (ii) misappropriating or concealing all or part of the assets of the company or fraudulently increasing the liabilities of the company;
- (iii) committing any of the violations enumerated in 2.3.1 above;
- (iv) having carried out a management function of a company when forbidden to do so;
- (v) with the intention of avoiding or delaying the opening of formal insolvency proceedings, having made purchases with a view to resale at a lower price or used ruinous means to obtain funds;
- (vi) having entered into, for the account of a third party, and without consideration, undertakings judged to be too significant or important at the time of signature given the situation of the company;
- (vii) having paid or caused to be paid, after the date of cessation des paiements, one creditor in preference to others;
- (viii) having intentionally failed to co-operate with the good progress of the insolvency proceedings;
- (ix) having kept accounts that are fictitious, manifestly incomplete or irregular according to applicable law, not keeping accounts when required by applicable law, or having caused accounting books and records to disappear.

Although the provisions of the law do not specifically so require, typically there must be a link (if not formally so found to be causative) between the wrongful act in question and the insolvency of the company – apart from those cases where, by definition, no link is necessary, for example, in respect of (vii) and (viii) above.

2.4.2 If any of (i) to (ix) are satisfied:

- (i) the judge is not required to impose sanctions on the guilty person. If he does so, liability in both the cases of personal bankruptcy and prohibition on management is civil – albeit that they have certain characteristics of penal sanctions.

- (ii) (a) The sanction of personal bankruptcy carries with it a prohibition on directly or indirectly managing, administering and controlling a commercial enterprise or any form of company which has an economic activity. A certain number of professions are also prohibited (for example, the judiciary, the legal profession, activity as a financial intermediary, insurance agent, etc.) as well as all public functions.
- (b) Alternatively, the court may adopt the sanction of prohibition on management, which is a diluted form of personal insolvency. The most severe form of this sanction is the prohibition on managing, administering and controlling a commercial enterprise or any form of company which has an economic activity.
- (iii) The court has discretion over the duration of the personal bankruptcy or the prohibition on management, noting that the maximum period in any case is 15 years.⁹
- (iv) Except in certain limited circumstances, there is no specific time limit prior to the commencement of formal insolvency proceedings during which the wrongful action must have occurred. In practice, of course, the period of time is limited by the "informal" requirement that there be a link between the act in question and the insolvency of the company. In respect of (vii) and (viii) above, by definition the wrongful act must have taken place after the date of cessation of payments which, as explained above, depends upon a finding of fact by the court. Such date cannot be more than 18 months prior to the date of the order opening formal insolvency proceedings.

Other than the general defences of an absence of one or more of the specific requirements for the offence, there are no specific defences to the action. A person found liable may have some or all of the prohibitions lifted if he or she can show that he or she has made a sufficient contribution to the payment of the insolvent company's debts.

2.4.3 The following persons may also be subject to personal bankruptcy:

- (i) Any director who has been found liable for responsabilité pour insuffisance d'actif, or who has been found liable for the debts of the company and has not satisfied the penalty imposed;
- (ii) Any director who has been found guilty of criminal bankruptcy.

In either of these cases, personal bankruptcy or prohibition on management is a complementary penalty decided by the Criminal Court and, can be either permanent or temporary in nature and if temporary must not exceed five years.¹⁰

2.5 Criminal bankruptcy (Banqueroute)

2.5.1 This criminal offence may be committed in any of the following circumstances, provided that formal insolvency proceedings have been commenced in respect of the company¹¹:

- (i) where the person, with the intention of avoiding or delaying the opening of formal insolvency proceedings, has made purchases with a view to resale at a lower price or used ruinous means to obtain funds;
- (ii) where a person has misappropriated or concealed all or part of the company's assets;
- (iii) where a person has fraudulently increased the debts of the company;
- (iv) where a person has kept fictitious accounts or caused accounting books and records to disappear or failed to keep accounts contrary to legal requirements;
- (v) where a person has kept manifestly incomplete sets of accounts or kept accounts that do not comply with legal requirements.

2.5.2 If any of (i) to (v) are satisfied:

- (i) Liability is criminal.
- (ii) A person guilty of this offence is liable to imprisonment (maximum of five years, increased to seven years for a company providing investment services) or a fine (maximum of 75,000 euros, increased to 100,000 euros for a company providing investment services) or both.

In addition, the court can impose any of the following sanctions:

- (a) deprivation of civic, civil and family rights;
- (b) prohibition for a maximum period of five years on having a public function or conducting a professional activity in the same field as that in which the offence was committed;
- (c) exclusion from being permitted to bid for public tenders for a period of at least five years;
- (d) prohibition for a maximum period of five years from issuing cheques other than those enabling the drawer to draw funds deposited with the drawee or certified cheques;
- (e) publication of the judgment;
- (f) personal bankruptcy or prohibition on management;

¹¹ Article L.654-2 of the Commercial Code.

(g) further, if there is a civil party to the criminal proceedings, the court may award damages to such civil party provided that it is the victim of the offending behaviour – typically the company – on the basis of the principles of tort (Articles 1382 et seq. of the Civil Code).

(iii) The gravity of the offence will be reflected in the length of imprisonment or the size of the fine that is ordered and in the nature and extent of any of the other sanctions that may be imposed. In exercising its punitive jurisdiction, the court is not seeking to compensate the company. The amount of damages that may be awarded will depend upon the extent of the loss caused by the offending act.

(iv) Except in the case of the offence of misappropriation or concealment of assets of the company (for which the acts in question must have been committed once the company is in a state of cessation de paiements), there is no specific time period prior to the commencement of formal insolvency proceedings during which the acts concerned must have been committed.

(v) Absence of intent to defraud is a defence to a charge under 2.5.1(i) and (iii). Absence of a voluntary and positive act of disposal is a defence to a charge under 2.5.1(ii).

2.6 Fraudulent organisation of insolvency

2.6.1 Any officer or associated person can be held liable for this offence if:¹²

- (i) he or she fraudulently misappropriates or conceals part of his or her own personal property to avoid paying the debts of the company in insolvency;
- (ii) he or she fraudulently acknowledges and accepts debts that do not exist.

2.6.2 If (i) or (ii) are satisfied:

- (i) liability is criminal. The answers to 2.5.2 (ii) and (iii) are applicable.
- (ii) The offence can only be committed once a company is in a situation of cessation de paiements.
- (iii) Absence of intent to defraud is a defence.

QUESTION 3

3. Other persons involved with the company's affairs who may become liable in respect of their actions during the "twilight" period

- (a) In addition to the formally appointed directors of the company, can others be held liable in respect of the company's activities during the "twilight" period if the company were to become subject to a formal insolvency procedure?
- (b) In respect of which acts may other persons be held liable and to what extent does the liability of third parties differ from that for directors identified in question 2 above.
- (c) Will liability be limited to that resulting from involvement with a particular transaction or more generally in relation to the overall loss suffered by creditors?

3.1 Introduction

- 3.1.1 French insolvency law provides expressly that the liability that may attach to a formally appointed director or manager of a company extends to "de facto" managers or directors – known in French as dirigeants de fait. The definition of de facto director is explained below.
- 3.1.2 In certain circumstances, third parties may be found liable to the company subject to formal insolvency proceedings. For example, third parties who commit certain faults, in particular if their behaviour has provoked the insolvency of the company or aggravated its consequences, may be liable for the damage that they have caused.

3.2 De facto directors (dirigeants de fait)

- 3.2.1 A de facto director can be defined as a person (individual or corporate entity) who behaves as if he were a de jure director, (e.g. carrying out acts that only a de jure director would be empowered to perform) without being empowered to do so. More precisely, a person can be considered as a de facto director where he has become involved in the management or administration of a company without any corporate mandate, and held an active and positive decision-making role in such management and administration, without restriction and with full independence.
- 3.2.2 Under French law, a de facto director is generally a person who has some form of an express link with the company in question. Typically the person is either a member of the company (in the form of shareholder, partner, etc.), is associated (such as married) with a formal director, or is in a business relationship with the company (for example, as a supplier, a bank or customer).

- 3.2.3 In all cases, the de facto director exceeds the powers that have officially and formally been given to it with regard to the management of the company's affairs.
- 3.2.4 The characterization of a de facto management situation therefore requires that two criteria be met:
- (i) the management or administrative acts of the de facto director have been carried out without restriction and in total independence, which requires that such director is granted an autonomous decision-making power. This implies that the de facto management situation is inconsistent with a position of subordination, such as the one that may result from an employment contract (for example, if the claimed de facto director is given orders by another person to whom he is subordinated, such other person is the real de facto director).
 - (ii) an active and positive decision-making role, which implies that the de facto director has directly intervened in the management of the company, behaved as the master of the business and "unofficially" run such company. There is no need to find that the person is treated as a director by the other directors. The key to the notion is the active involvement by the person in the determinative management of the company.
- 3.2.5 Whether a person has become a de facto director or not is a question of fact. Among the factors that the courts frequently take into account are: the nature of the technical functions granted to the alleged de facto director (for example, commercial management, supply management), the powers granted to him (for example, power to place orders with suppliers, to sign checks, to hire or dismiss employees) and his behavior (for example, the fact that he considers that the company belongs to him, that he behaves as the manager of such company).

3.3 Other third parties who may be held liable

- 3.3.1 Third parties who are involved with a company which enters into formal insolvency proceedings may be subject to liability in tort if all or part of the loss suffered by the insolvent company's creditors is caused by their wrongful action. The existence of a fault (tort), damage and a causal link between the two must be established by the claimant seeking recovery. Most typically this type of action is brought by the creditors of an insolvent company against the banks of the company on the basis that they contributed to the insolvent situation of the company by their dealings with it ("soutien abusif"). With respect to bankruptcy proceedings commenced after 1 January 2006, the actions available against banks under this cause of action are limited to cases of fraud, egregious involvement in the management of the debtor or guarantees taken by the bank which are disproportionate to the amounts loaned.¹³

- 3.3.2 The loss may be general – suffered by all of the creditors – in which case only the representative of the creditors can bring the action. Alternatively the loss may be specific to one creditor in which case the action can only be brought by the injured creditor. In order to be allowed to bring such a specific action, the creditor must be capable of establishing to the satisfaction of the court the existence of a prejudice which is (i) specific and (ii) personal to him. The action is a civil action and sounds in damages (either to the company in the event of a general action or to the injured creditor in the event of an individual claim).

3.4 Actions for which liability may attach to persons not formally appointed as a manager or director

Offence/activity	Persons liable	Extent of liability
Action “ en responsabilité pour insuffisance d'actif ”	All directors and de facto directors (whether remunerated or not)	Same as for director
Liability for debts of the company	All directors and de facto directors (whether remunerated or not)	Same as for director
Personal bankruptcy	All directors and de facto directors (whether remunerated or not)	Same as for director
Prohibition on management	All directors and de facto directors (whether remunerated or not)	Same as for director
Criminal bankruptcy	All directors and de facto directors (whether remunerated or not)	Same as for director
Fraudulent organisation of insolvency	All directors and de facto directors (whether remunerated or not)	Same as for director

QUESTION 4

4. Counterparties dealing with the company during the twilight period

- From the point of view of a counter-party dealing with the company during the twilight period, what are the potential heads of challenge which may lead to transactions with the company being set aside.
 - What defences, if any, to the areas of vulnerability identified above will be available to a counter-party seeking to protect a transaction from being attacked?

4.1 Introduction

- 4.1.1 Like many other legal systems, out of a concern to protect creditors and the company itself, French law recognises the right to bring proceedings for the nullity of certain payments and transactions made during the période suspecte (which as explained above begins with the date on which the company finds itself in a situation of cessation de paiements and ends on the date of the order commencing formal insolvency proceedings). The basis of such concern is the fear that the company facing financial difficulties may, either on account of the unequal bargaining power that exists on account of its situation or in an attempt to use whatever means it can to face up to its financial difficulties, grant certain favours and enter into certain transactions which are to the detriment of the company and/or unfairly beneficial to a creditor or counter-party and thus are detrimental to the overall body of creditors.
- 4.1.2 The actions in nullity¹⁴ are intended to reconstitute the assets of the company by sanctioning either the fraud committed by the company or the breach of the general principle of equality between creditors. A third party contracting with the company can, thus, see the transactions that it entered into with the company during the suspect period annulled on the basis of French insolvency law.
- 4.1.3 In addition to the statutory bases of the action in nullity, French civil law also recognises an action, known as the “action paulienne” (a right of action given by Article 1167 of the French Civil Code to the creditors of a debtor to challenge transactions or other acts undertaken by the debtor defrauding the creditors’ rights). Such right of action is not linked to the suspect period and can be used for example in the event that the conditions for the statutory bases of a preference action are not satisfied.

4.2 Summary of heads of challenge

- 4.2.1 The transaction or payment must have occurred during the suspect period (that is, after the date of cessation de paiements and prior to the judgment opening formal insolvency proceedings). It must have been undertaken by the company and not by a third party. It must fall within one of the eight heads of challenge enumerated in Article L.632-1 of the Commercial Code. It is not, however, necessary for an interested person bringing the action in nullity to show that the act has caused a loss to the company. The heads of challenge fall into two different categories: (a) those which must be annulled by the court if the legal requirements are met; and (b) those which, if the legal requirements are met, may be annulled by the court.
- 4.2.2 The potential heads of challenge are the following:
- (a) Transactions which are null and void:
 - (i) Transactions transferring movable or immovable property undertaken by the company without consideration;
 - (ii) Any ‘commutative’ transaction in which the company’s obligations far exceed those of its counter-party;

¹⁴ On the basis of Article L.632-1 of the Commercial Code.

- (iii) Payment of debts which are not due, by any means whatsoever;
 - (iv) Payments of debts which are due, but made in a manner not commonly admitted in business relationships;
 - (v) All deposits and consignments made upon a court's request during the suspect period, unless such guarantees were given as a result of a definitive decision requiring such deposit or consignment issued prior to the opening of bankruptcy proceedings;
 - (vi) All security interests granted on the debtor's assets for existing debts;
 - (vii) All conservatory measures made against the company or its assets;
 - (viii) Any authorization, exercise or resale of options defined in Articles L. 225-17 & seq. of the Commercial Code (that is, "stock-options");
 - (ix) Any transfer of assets or rights into a "fiducie" (a sort of French statutory quasi-trust).
- (b) Transactions which may be annulled:
- (i) Transactions mentioned in (a) (i) may be annulled where they have been completed during a six-month period prior to the date of cessation of payments. As stated above however, such transactions, if made during the suspect period (for example, after the cessation of payments date and prior to the formal opening of bankruptcy proceedings) must be annulled.
 - (ii) Pursuant to Article L. 632-2 of the Commercial Code, any transaction, including payments for debts that have fallen due or transactions for consideration entered into during the suspect period if the counter-party knew that the company was in a situation of cessation of payments. In addition, any notice to a third-party holder, seizure or objection may also be annulled where it has been delivered or done by a creditor with knowledge of the situation of cessation of payments.

4.3 Transactions for no consideration

The statutory text defines such transactions as "les actes à titre gratuit translatifs de propriété mobilière ou immobilière" (transactions for no consideration as a result of which real or personal property is transferred). The purpose of this text, covering all forms of gift, is to avoid transactions that plainly result in a reduction in the assets of the company.

4.4 Unequal transactions

- 4.4.1 The statutory text defines such transactions as “tout contrat commutatif dans lequel les obligations du débiteur excèdent notablement celles de l'autre partie” (any bilateral “commutative” transaction in which the debtor's obligations clearly exceed those of the counter-party). A contract is “commutative” if, at the time of signature, the nature of the advantage that each party obtains from the contract can be clearly ascertained. It covers, for example, the sale of personal property, the sale of merchandise, the creation of a guarantee, and the transfer of a trademark. Consequently, contracts which include an element of risk are not included in the definition.
- 4.4.2 The advantages drawn from the contract by each of the parties must be clearly unequal and to the detriment of the company. The difference (a) must be objectively ascertained and ascertainable and (b) must be, economically and mathematically, clear. In addition, there must be an element of subjectivity or bad faith concerning the importance of the inequality between the two parties. Examples from case law include the sale of horses at 2/7th of their true value and the sale of merchandise at less than two-thirds of their value.

4.5 Payment of debts which have not fallen due

The statutory text defines this head of challenge as “tout paiement, quel qu'en ait été le mode, pour dettes non échues au jour du paiement” (any payment, regardless of the manner in which it is effected, of debts which are not due at the date of payment). The reasoning behind this head of challenge is clear, given the clear advantage to the creditor in question.

4.6 Payments not normally recognised in business relations

- 4.6.1 The statutory text provides: “tout paiement pour dettes échues, fait autrement qu'en espèces, effets de commerce, virements, bordereaux de cession visés par la loi n° 81-1 du 2 janvier 1981 facilitant le crédit aux entreprises, ou tout autre mode de paiement communément admis dans les relations d'affaires” (any payment for debts that have fallen due made in a manner other than in cash, bills of exchange (and the like), wire transfer, global transfer of credits in accordance with Law 81-1 of 2 January 1981 facilitating credit to enterprises, or any other method of payment commonly recognised in business relations).
- 4.6.2 The purpose is to avoid payments that, on account of the unusual nature, grant an advantage to one creditor. The notion of payments commonly recognised in business relations covers any method of payment which professionally is generally and habitually used in the appropriate field of business affairs.

4.7 Deposits and consignments

- 4.7.1 The statutory text provides: “tout dépôt et toute consignation de sommes effectués en application de l'article 2350 du Code Civil, à défaut d'une décision de justice ayant acquis force de chose jugée” (any deposit or consignment of monies effected pursuant to Article 2350 of the Civil Code unless made pursuant to a final and binding court ruling). Article 2350 of the Civil Code relates to any deposit or consignment of sums of money, bills of exchange and the like, or securities which an entity has been ordered to make as a guarantee or as a conservatory measure.
- 4.7.2 The purpose is to avoid the priority right that such deposit or consignment grants to the creditor in question in accordance with Article 2333 of the Civil Code.

4.8 Creation of security for existing debts

- 4.8.1 The statutory text provides: “toute hypothèque conventionnelle, toute hypothèque judiciaire, ainsi que l'hypothèque légale des époux et tout droit de nantissement constitués sur les biens du débiteur pour dettes antérieurement contractées” (any mortgage whether contractual, judicially-ordered or pursuant to law as between spouses, and any pledge over property of the debtor granted for debts which have been incurred previously). The text covers all forms of security over property, whether real or personal. The key is the date on which the security is granted as compared to the date on which the debt in question was incurred by the company. If the debt was incurred before the grant of security, and if the security has been granted during the suspect period, the action for nullity must succeed.
- 4.8.2 Again, the reasoning behind the existence of this head of challenge is clear given the absence of any justifiable rationale for granting security over a debt that already exists, such security not having been a sine qua non condition for the creation of the obligation. The existence of an advantage to the creditor in question, through the giving of additional or new security, is presumed.

4.9 Conservatory measures

- 4.9.1 The statutory text provides: “toute mesure conservatoire, à moins que l'inscription ou l'acte de saisie ne soit antérieur à la date de cessation de paiements” (any conservatory measure unless the filing or the act of seizure took place prior to the date of cessation of payments).
- 4.9.2 The purpose of this action in nullity is to protect the company against conservatory measures obtained by a creditor which would have the effect of giving such creditor an advantage. The reasoning behind this head of challenge is similar to that underlying the nullity of security granted for existing debts.

4.10 Transactions on stock-options

- 4.10.1 This head of challenge was recently adopted as part of the “sauvegarde” Act dated 26 July 2005. It covers transactions relating to stock-options either passed by the debtor company (“authorization”) or performed by the beneficiaries of such options (“exercise and resale”).

- 4.10.2 The purpose of such provision is to prevent managers from making important profits just before the opening of a formal insolvency proceeding due to their inside knowledge of the company's financial difficulties.

4.11 Transfers to a fiducie

- 4.11.1 This head of challenge was recently adopted as part of the law adopting the fiducie, dated 19 February 2007. The statutory text defines the head of challenge as “tout transfert de biens ou de droits dans un patrimoine fiduciaire” (any transfer of assets or rights to a fiducie).
- 4.11.2 The purpose is to protect creditors against transfers by the company of assets or rights into a fiducie, which is a sort of French quasi-trust which would otherwise shelter the assets or rights from the insolvency procedure relating to the debtor.

4.12 Nullity of transactions for no consideration relating to real or personal property, implemented during a six month period prior to the cessation of payments

- 4.12.1 If made during the suspect period, such acts must be annulled. However, if made during a six month period preceding the cessation of payments date (that is, the suspect period) such acts may be annulled. In this particular case, knowledge by the counterparty of the fact that the debtor is in a state of cessation of payments is not required.

4.13 Nullity when the counter-party was aware that the company was in a state of cessation of payments

- 4.13.1 Contrary to the other forms of the action in nullity, this head of challenge is discretionary for the judge. The statutory text¹⁵ provides: “les paiements pour dettes échues effectués après la date de cessation de paiements et les actes à titre onéreux accomplis après cette même date peuvent être annulés si ceux qui ont traité avec le débiteur ont eu connaissance de la cessation des paiements” (payments for debts that have fallen due after the cessation of payments date and transactions for consideration entered into after that same date may be annulled if the person dealing with the debtor was aware of the cessation of payments).

Since the entry in force of the “sauvegarde” Act, in addition to those transactions by the debtor, certain transactions by third parties may also be annulled. The Law refers to any notice to a third-party holder, seizure or objection delivered or done by a creditor aware of the cessation de paiements. The purpose is to ensure equal treatment between creditors, in particular regarding public creditors (such as the tax administration).

¹⁵ Article L.632-2 of the Commercial Code (formerly, Article 108 of the French Insolvency Law).

- 4.13.2 The transaction or payment must have taken place during the suspect period. There is no need to show that the company has suffered a loss as a result of the transaction. The purpose is to reconstitute the assets of the company in an attempt to assist recovery. The key element is the counter-party's knowledge that it was dealing with a company that was in a state of cessation of payments. It is not enough that the counter-party knew that the company was in financial difficulties. A fraudulent intent is thus necessary.
- 4.13.3 Given that this head of challenge is discretionary for the judge, the tendency is for the courts to take into account the seriousness of the bad faith and fraudulent intent of the creditor.

4.14 Action Paulienne

The action "Paulienne" is based on Articles L. 632-1 and L. 632-2 of the Commercial Code. It may not be brought by a creditor. It may only be brought by the representative of creditors, the administrator or the public prosecutor (acting jointly or individually) or, in the absence of action by the creditors' representative, the controlleurs (discussed below – it being noted here simply that with respect to the controlleurs there is some disagreement among commentators).

If the administrator or a representative of creditors fails to bring the action, article 1167 of the Civil Code provides a general right to any creditor to challenge transactions made defrauding its rights. This right of action is available regardless of whether the company is in a state of cessation of payments. A fraudulent intent must be shown to have existed on the part of the counter-party to the transaction with the company – such fraudulent intent aiming at harming the creditor. If such fraudulent intent can be shown to exist and if the creditor can show that it has a valid and existing debt against the company, it can request that the transaction be annulled.

QUESTION 5

5. Enforcement

By whom may action be brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3 above) and before which courts?

5.1 Introduction

- 5.1.1 The persons who may bring proceedings, whether civil or criminal, against the directors or associated persons are defined in the Commercial Code.

- 5.1.2 Actions for “responsabilité pour insuffisance d’actif”, liability for debts of the company, personal bankruptcy and prohibition on management, can only be brought by the liquidator, the judicial representative, or by the supervisors “contrôleurs” appointed by the court among the creditors to help the creditors’ representative in the course of the formal insolvency proceedings in the event the judicial representative fails to bring an action after formal notice to do so, and the public prosecutor. Actions for “comblement de passif” can also be brought by the court on its own motion. These civil actions are brought before the Commercial Court (Tribunal de Commerce) which has jurisdiction over insolvency proceedings against the company.
- 5.1.3 The criminal actions based on bankruptcy (banqueroute) or on organising an insolvency may only be brought by the public prosecutor, the liquidator, the administrator, the creditors’ representative, the employees’ representative, the person appointed by the court to execute the plan of reorganization or the supervisors “contrôleurs” appointed by the court among the creditors to help the creditors’ representative in the course of the formal insolvency proceedings in the event the judicial representative fails to bring the action after formal notice to do so. These criminal actions are brought before the Tribunal Correctionnel. Any creditor may also initiate a civil action if the criminal action has already been brought if he is able to establish an individual specific loss that is different from the amount of his credit and resulting directly from the offence.

6. Remedies: orders available to the domestic court

In respect of the offences identified in questions 2, 3 and 4 above, what remedies are available in the domestic court.

Offence	Remedy available
Action “en responsabilité pour insuffisance d’actif”	Liability is civil The director or associated person may be ordered to compensate for all or part of the insufficiency in assets that his fault in management has contributed to.
Liability for debts of the company	Liability is civil. The director or associated person may be liable for all or part of the company’s debts. Managers can be liable jointly.

Personal bankruptcy	Liability is civil The director or associated person will be prohibited from managing, administering and controlling any commercial enterprise and any form of company which carries on an economic activity. He or she shall also be prevented from conducting certain professions such as the judiciary, legal profession, financial intermediary, and insurance agent. He or she shall be deprived of his or her civil and political rights.
Prohibition on management	Liability is civil. The director or associated person will be prohibited from managing, administering and controlling any commercial enterprise and any form of company which carries on an economic activity. The court may limit such prohibition to certain sectors of activity.
Criminal bankruptcy	Liability is criminal. The maximum penalty is five years imprisonment and/or a fine up to 75,000 euros (seven years and 100,000 euros for investment service providers) In addition the director or associated person may be punished by any of the following orders: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> - deprivation of civil rights; - prohibition for a maximum period of five years on having a public function or conducting a professional activity in the same field as that in which the offence was committed; - exclusion from participating in public tender offers for a period of at least five years; - prohibition for a maximum period of five years on issuing certain forms of cheque; - publication of the judgment. If civil proceedings are associated with the criminal proceedings, the director or associated person in question may be ordered to compensate for any loss that his offending conduct has caused.
Fraudulent organisation of insolvency	The same as for bankruptcy.
Actions in nullity	Liability is civil. The payment or transaction which is avoided is rendered null and void. The assets transferred pursuant to the avoided transaction or payment must be returned to the company.

QUESTION 7

7. Duty to co-operate

- (a) To what extent are directors (and others identified in question 3 above) obliged to co-operate with an investigation into the company's affairs following its insolvency?
- (b) Are any human rights laws applicable in the domestic jurisdiction in relation to any obligations (for example, in the UK and other European jurisdictions Article 6 of the European Convention on Human Rights may apply if domestic law compels a person to provide potentially self-incriminating information at the request of the office-holder appointed under the relevant insolvency procedure adopted)?

7.1 Obligation to commence insolvency proceedings

- 7.1.1 French law imposes a duty on the legal representative of a company (that is, the Executive Officer (directeur général) in a traditional société anonyme, the President of the management board (directoire) of a two-tier managed société anonyme, the manager (gérant) of a société à responsabilité limitée) which is in a state of cessation of payments first to hold a meeting of the workers' representatives (for example, the workers' council where such exists or the personnel delegates where a workers' council does not exist) and to inform them of the situation and thereafter, within 45 days of the state of cessation of payments occurring, to file a declaration of cessation de paiements at the registry of the commercial court where the company is registered (except if the company has commenced a court-supervised conciliation procedure).
- 7.1.2 Given that the other members of the management, such as the directors or the members of the management board, are liable along with the legal representative if the declaration of cessation de paiements is not made within the 45 day period (thus being exposed to the sanctions of a prohibition to manage and liability for insuffisance d'actif) albeit that such persons do not themselves have the authority to file such a declaration, typically the filing of the declaration of cessation de paiements is made by the legal representative in close co-operation with the other members of the management of the company in question.
- 7.1.3 The declaration should contain:
 - (i) the last available annual financial accounts of the company;
 - (ii) an excerpt of the registration of the company;
 - (iii) a recent (no more than three months old) statement of the cash flow position of the company;

- (iv) the number of employees of the company;
- (v) the company's net turnover for the last financial year;
- (vi) a statement of the amounts due and owing to and by the company and the names and addresses of the creditors and debtors;
- (vii) a statement of the guarantees granted to and by the company and all off-balance sheet liabilities;
- (viii) a summary statement of the assets of the company;
- (ix) when judicial liquidation is requested, all elements necessary to demonstrate that the company has ceased activity or that the re-establishment of the company is impossible;
- (x) the names and addresses of the representatives of the workers' council (where one exists) and the employee delegates (where no workers' council exists) empowered to represent the personnel of the company.

7.1.4 It should be noted that insolvency proceedings¹⁶ may also be commenced in a number of different ways by persons other than the legal representative of the company (for instance by one or more creditors of the company, by the public prosecutor or by the courts by their own motion), provided that the company is not under a conciliation procedure.

7.1.5 The legal representative of a company which is not yet in a state of cessation of payments has the possibility (this is not obligatory as it is when a company is in a state of cessation of payments) to file for the opening of a sauvegarde procedure, which is an anticipated bankruptcy proceeding created by the "sauvegarde Act" dated July 26, 2005. The safeguard procedure may only be commenced by the company's legal representative on a voluntary basis (opening of the procedure by third parties as described above is excluded).

The filing for a safeguard procedure should contain a description of the financial difficulties encountered by the company and the grounds for which it is unable to overcome them, as well as a very similar set of documents to those required for the filing of a procedure when the company is already in a state of cessation of payments (see documents listed in 7.1.3).

As mentioned above, the legal representative has to inform the workers' representatives before the filing of the safeguard procedure.

7.2 Participation in the initial steps of the proceedings

- 7.2.1 Prior to determining whether a company is in a state of cessation of payments and after having been seized by a request to such end, whether in the form of a request by the legal representative for a declaration of cessation de paiements, a writ of action by a creditor, an originating summons by the public prosecutor or by the court by its own motion, the court must carry out a preliminary investigation. As part of such preliminary investigation, the court must summon the legal representative of the company to be heard. The participation of the legal representative in the initial investigation is of course of utmost importance given the knowledge and understanding of the difficulties faced by the company that such person would normally have.
- 7.2.2 In addition to summoning the legal representative, the court must also convoke the representatives of the personnel (that is, workers' council representatives or if no workers council exists the personnel delegates) as well as any other person who can provide the court with information as to the actual situation in which the company is placed.

7.3 Right to be heard during the proceedings

- 7.3.1 Throughout the insolvency proceedings, the legal representative has numerous specific rights to intervene either before the administrator, the juge commissaire or the court.
- 7.3.2 Examples include article L.623-3 of the Commercial Code which provides that the legal representative must be consulted by the administrator, once the latter has been appointed by the court, to inform the company of the reorganization measures he will propose based on the information and the offers received.

7.4 Obligation to collaborate during the proceedings

- 7.4.1 Given that the legal representative of the company in question is often the person best placed to know and understand the company and its activity, his or her collaboration with the judicial organs/officers instituted to conduct the insolvency or reorganisation proceedings is invaluable. French law thus provides for the close involvement of the legal representative of the company in all stages of the proceedings.
- 7.4.2 Article L.623-1 of the Commercial Code provides that, under the general regime of a reorganization proceeding (redressement) or a safeguard procedure, the administrator appointed by the court must draw up a report on the economic and social situation of the company. The legal representative is obliged to collaborate with the administrator in this process. The report must identify the origin, significance and nature of the difficulties affecting the company. The administrator is also to propose in the report either a programme for the reorganisation of the company or the judicial liquidation of the company.

- 7.4.3 Article R.622-5 of the Commercial Code provides that within eight days of the judgment opening the bankruptcy proceedings (either sauvegarde, reorganization or liquidation), the legal representative of the company must, if such list is not attached to the declaration of cessation de paiements, prepare and deliver to the trustee, the creditors' representative or, if the judicial liquidation of the company is immediately ordered, the liquidator, a list setting forth the names and addresses of the creditors of the company, the amounts due and owing at the date of the commencement of the insolvency proceedings, the amounts becoming due and at what date, the nature of the debts and any guarantees or charges relating to them. The trustee, the creditors' representative or the liquidator must then file the list with the court. Failure, in bad faith, to provide the list within the eight-day period exposes the legal representative to the penalty of prohibition to manage, administer or control a legal entity (article L.653-8 of the Commercial Code).
- 7.4.4 The legal representative of the company (and the other members of the management organ) retains the power to call meetings of the shareholders whenever a shareholders' meeting is required in the course of the insolvency proceedings (for example, when the reorganization programme involves a modification of the share capital of the company) (article L.626-3 of the Commercial Code). In the event of a failure by the legal representative to call any such shareholders' meeting, the administrator has the power to do so.
- 7.4.5 At the request of the administrator, the legal representative of the company must perform all steps and acts necessary to preserve the company's rights against its debtors and to preserve the production capabilities of the company (article L.622-4 of the Commercial Code).
- 7.5 Rights granted to the legal representative (applicable in both sauvegarde and reorganization (redressement) procedures)
- 7.5.1 The legal representative of the company in question has the right (locus standi) to request the juge commissaire to seize the court with a view to replacing the administrator or expert(s) appointed by the court (article L.621-7 of the Commercial Code).
- 7.5.2 At any time during the proceedings, the legal representative has the right (locus standi) to file a request with the court for the total or partial cessation of the company's activities or the judicial liquidation of the company (article L. 622-10 of the Commercial Code).
- 7.5.3 The legal representative has the power on behalf of the company to challenge any decisions taken by the judicial organs during the procedure that by law are open to challenge (for example, against the decision of the juge commissaire to admit, reject or contest debts of the company declared by the creditors in the course of the insolvency proceedings (article L.624-3 of the Commercial Code)).

The legal representative has the right (locus standi) to request that the court extends the observation period (article L.621-3 of the Commercial Code).

- 7.5.4 Throughout the observation period following the commencement of the insolvency proceedings, the legal representative has a right to be informed by the administrator of the progress of the administrator's mission (see 7.6.4 below).
- 7.5.5 The creditors' representative must seek the legal representative's observations on the proposals to admit or reject or contest before the competent court the debts owed by the company and duly declared by the creditors (article L.624-1 of the Commercial Code).
- 7.5.6 The court must summon the legal representative of the company before it takes any decision with respect to the extension of the observation period (article R.621-9 of the Commercial Code), the modification of the mission granted to the administrator (article R.622-1 of the Commercial Code), to order the judicial liquidation of the company following the commencement of an observation period or to order a plan of reorganization (article L.622-10 of the Commercial Code).

7.6 Rights retained by the legal representative

- 7.6.1 In the event that the court orders the immediate judicial liquidation of the company at the commencement of the proceedings, the legal representative of the company is immediately stripped of all rights of action, power and authority with respect to the activity of the company. All such rights of action, powers and authorities are vested in the judicially-appointed liquidator.
- 7.6.2 In all other cases, the legal representative remains at the head of the company with varying degrees of power and authority over the conduct of the company's activities depending upon the nature of the mission granted to the judicially-appointed administrator (see 7.6.4 below).
- 7.6.3 The principal powers retained by the legal representative are twofold – namely, the power to take conservatory measures and the power to undertake acts in the ordinary course of business.
 - (i) The power to take conservatory measures. Conservatory measures in this context means those measures necessary to protect the rights of the company and to preserve the production capabilities of the company. Measures to protect the rights of the company include acts to stop statutes of limitation from running, the giving of formal letters before legal action (mises en demeure) to debtors of the company, and the creation or renewal of guarantees, charges and the like. Measures to preserve the company's production capabilities include the renewal of the company's stocks, replacement of used or worn material, repair of damaged machinery and acts to prevent the theft or other wrongful disappearance of the assets of the company.

- (ii) The power to undertake acts in the ordinary course of business of the company. Article L.622-3 of the Commercial Code (applicable to both sauvegarde and reorganization procedures) provides that “acts taken in the ordinary course of business alone by the legal representative are deemed valid vis-à-vis third parties acting in good faith”. Acts in the ordinary course of business in the sense of article L.622-3 of the Commercial Code are those which fall within the scope of the normal business activity of the company, which are of such a nature as to be reproduced on a regular and frequent basis, which do not have a significant financial impact on the company and which would not be likely to be detrimental to the reorganization of the company. Examples include the issuing of orders for office supplies of minor financial significance, the issuing of orders for materials necessary for the conduct of the company’s business for amounts that are ordinary for the company, and the sale of goods typically sold by the company on normal terms and conditions. The third party must be in good faith which means that it must not be aware of any restrictions on the legal representative of the company from undertaking the act in question. It is not however typically necessary for the third party to have undertaken any specific investigation into the powers and restrictions actually affecting the legal representative to prove its good faith.

7.6.4 The extent and nature of the other powers of the legal representative with respect to the activities of the company in question depend upon the nature of the mission granted to the administrator. It should be noted that the description of the mission granted to the administrator by the court when it opens an observation period with respect to any given company is noted on the register of the company and filed with the court clerk of the competent commercial court. The mission granted to the administrator falls within three broad categories in accordance with articles L.622-1 (for the sauvegarde procedure) and L.631-12 of the Commercial Code – namely, supervision, assistance or representation.

- (i) A mission of supervision. This is the situation where the legal representative of the company in question retains the widest powers over the management of the company. The legal representative must simply ensure that he or she does not commit any acts that are specifically forbidden by the law (see below) and does not encroach upon the powers which, by definition, are vested in the administrator. Apart from the foregoing caveats, the legal representative of the company retains the power to act alone with respect to the management of the company. His actions are simply subject to an ex-post facto control by the administrator.

Such mission of supervision is only available under the safeguard procedure, where the court appointing the administrator has the option to vest the administrator with a mission of supervision or a mission of assistance (see below).

- (ii) A mission of assistance. A mission of assistance results in a situation of co-management of the company by the legal representative and the administrator, subject always to the caveat that those acts specifically forbidden by the law cannot be undertaken by the legal representative (see 7.7 below). In practice, this type of mission means that the acts undertaken by the legal representative (other than those which the legal representative can always undertake (see 7.6.3 above)) are systematically verified and approved by the administrator before they are made. Thus the administrator will be involved in all decisions to enter into new contracts, to order significant amounts of material or merchandise, to issue letters of credit, etc. The court may alleviate the burden of this type of involvement of the administrator in the management of the company by limiting the need for assistance and thus co-management to specific types of acts – generally those considered to be the most important or significant for the company.

The situation where the administrator is granted a mission of assistance is common under the reorganization procedure (redressement). However, in such cases, the court may also vest the administrator with a mission of representation as stated below.

- (iii) A mission of representation. A mission of representation granted to an administrator is the most intrusive. The legal representative is to all intents and purposes stripped of his or her power to manage the company, such power being vested in the administrator during the observation period, except for those acts which the legal representative can always undertake (see para. 7.6.3 above).

7.7 Acts that the legal representative cannot undertake

7.7.1 The acts which the legal representative is prohibited from taking as a general matter are the following:

- (i) The legal representative cannot reimburse debts which existed prior to the commencement of the insolvency proceedings, any such reimbursement being at the risk of being cancelled (article L.622-7 of the Commercial Code). Except for a very limited number of exceptions specifically provided for by the law, the reimbursement of any such debts must receive the prior approval of the juge commissaire.
- (ii) The legal representative cannot pay any debts incurred outside the ordinary course of business of the company in question (article L.622-7 of the Commercial Code). This prohibition is of course the corollary to the right of the legal representative to undertake acts that fall within the ordinary course of business of the company noted above. If such an act, such as the sale of assets (as opposed to stock) of the company or the entering into of a settlement of a dispute, becomes necessary, it must receive the prior approval of the juge commissaire.
- (iii) The legal representative is prohibited from granting any form of security over the assets of the company without the prior approval of the juge commissaire.

- (iv) The legal representative cannot take any decision with respect to the continuation or cessation of existing contracts binding the company to its customers or suppliers, the right of decision being vested in the administrator.¹⁷
- (v) In the context of the redressement procedure, layoffs may be made only after consultation with the juge commissaire.
- (vi) The administrator alone has the exclusive right to authorize the payment of the price for goods purchased prior to the commencement of the insolvency proceedings but subject to a reservation of property clause. The special treatment of this type of situation which amounts to the payment of a pre-existing debt, which is in general prohibited by law, lies in the fact that without the payment of the totality of the purchase price the seller could exercise its rights under the reservation of property clause and thus obtain the possession of the goods in question endangering the chances of success of the insolvency proceedings.

7.8 Human rights

- 7.8.1 France is a contracting party to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (signed in Rome on November 4, 1950) (the "Convention") the provisions of which are incorporated into French law.

¹⁷ This rule is not applicable in the safeguard procedure to certain small companies. Article L. 627-2 of the Commercial Code.

- 7.8.2 The persons identified in response to question 3 will thus be entitled to rely upon the rights contained in the Convention (the "Convention Rights"). This is the case whether such persons are individuals or companies. In an insolvency context, a legal representative, director or other person with Convention Rights under the Convention will be able to:
- (i) require that a particular provision of insolvency law is construed in accordance with those rights or otherwise declared incompatible; or
 - (ii) claim that the judicial organs are each a public authority and are acting unlawfully in breach of that person's Convention Rights.
- 7.8.3 It should be recognized that the Convention Rights are not absolute and may well be limited by authorized interference by the state where such interference is justified by a limited aim and/or is proportionate to the need in hand.
- 7.8.4 In the context of insolvency, and the duties of co-operation discussed above, certain Convention Rights may be particularly relevant. These include:
- (i) Article 6 – the right to a fair trial;
 - (ii) Article 4 – prohibition of slavery and forced labor;
 - (iii) Article 8 – right to privacy;
 - (iv) Protocol 1, Article 1 – right to the protection of property.
- 7.8.5 Case law on the application of the Convention to insolvency proceedings is however particularly scarce in France.

QUESTION 8

8. Appeals and limitation periods

- (a) What limitation period, if any, will apply to actions brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3) in connection with the offences in question 2?
- (b) Please indicate whether an appeal is available from the decision of the lower court.

8.1 Limitation periods

Limitation period for criminal proceedings

- 8.1.1 Criminal bankruptcy (banqueroute) and fraudulent organisation of insolvency fall within the category of offences known as délits correctionnels. The applicable limitation period is three years. Article L.654-16 of the Commercial Code provides that the limitation period starts to run only from the date on which formal bankruptcy proceedings have been initiated. Should the facts of bankruptcy or insolvency organisation occur after the commencement of formal insolvency proceedings, then according to most of the commentators, the three-year limitation period should start, pursuant to general principles of criminal law, on the date on which these facts were discovered.

Limitation period for civil proceedings

- 8.1.2 Actions en responsabilité pour insuffisance d'actifs are barred three years after the date on which the court orders the termination of the plan of continuation or safeguard or the judicial liquidation.¹⁸
- 8.1.3 The action on liability for corporate debts (discussed in 2.3 above) is statute-barred three years after the date on which the court orders the judicial liquidation of the company.¹⁹
- 8.1.4 There is no specific limitation period for actions based on personal bankruptcy or prohibition to manage. Given that these actions relate to personal sanctions the general five year²⁰ limitation period which is applicable to commercial actions, should apply.

8.2 Appeals

Appeal in criminal proceedings

- 8.2.1 Appeal from a decision at first instance (before the “correctionnel” court) in respect of délits correctionnels is to the Court of Appeal of the district in which the court at first instance was sitting. Where the manager is present at the hearing at which the judgment is rendered at first instance, the period for appeal is 10 days from the date of the judgment. Alternatively the 10 day period runs from the date on which the judgment is served on the manager.

Appeal in civil proceedings

- 8.2.2 Appeal is to the Court of Appeal of the district in which the first instance court was sitting. Appeal is of right and is a re-hearing of the case at first instance. The appeal must be filed within one month of the date on which the judgment at first instance is served on the manager. Appeal normally suspends the execution of the attacked judgment, unless provisional execution is of right or ordered by the first instance court.

QUESTION 9

9. Foreign corporations

Do the legal provisions and procedures outlined above apply to both domestic and foreign corporations?

9.1 Jurisdiction of the French courts

- 9.1.1 The tribunal which has jurisdiction over civil actions brought against managers is the one with jurisdiction over insolvency proceedings.

The French Tribunal Correctionnel has jurisdiction over criminal actions against directors of a company under formal insolvency proceedings commenced in France. Therefore it is essential to determine which court has jurisdiction over insolvency proceedings.

In all cases, a French court will implement French law, that is:

- (i) the EC Regulation on European insolvency proceedings²¹, and
- (ii) international treaties or articles 1 and 163 of the French Decree implementing the French Insolvency Law²² for international non-European insolvency proceedings.

9.1.2 European insolvency proceedings

Since 31 May 2002, EC Regulation 1346/2000 has replaced the former law that is, international treaties and provisions of article 1 of the French Decree in respect of insolvencies over entities located in the EU. This regulation applies to “European Insolvency Proceedings”, (that is, insolvency of a company²³ which has its “center of its main interests” or “COMI” in a Member State of the EC, with the exception of Denmark). Under the Regulation, French courts can have jurisdiction in two different cases with distinct consequences:

- (i) when a company has its COMI in France, French courts will have jurisdiction over a Principal Insolvency Proceeding;
- (ii) when a company has one or more establishments (as defined in the Regulation) in France but its COMI is located in another Member State, the French courts have jurisdiction only over a Secondary Insolvency Proceeding.

Under the Regulation there is a rebuttable presumption that a company's COMI is at the place of the company's statutory registered office. The Regulation further indicates that the COMI "should correspond to the place where the debtor conducts the administration of [its] interests on a regular basis and is therefore ascertainable by third parties." (preamble ¶(13) to the Regulation; see also Eurofood (ECJ case C-341/04)). The Principal Insolvency Proceeding is said to be "international" or "universal": it aims at reaching all the assets of the company located in any Member State. The decisions of the French court are in principle recognized of right (subject only to a limited public policy exception) and therefore enforceable in all the Member States, without the necessity of any court order of enforcement; all the creditors, regardless of their nationality, are entitled to prove their debts before the French court in the Principal Insolvency Proceeding.

Once Principal Insolvency Proceedings have been commenced in the Member State in which the debtor's COMI is located, the judgment opening the proceeding must be recognized by the courts of all other Member States (see article 17(1) of the Regulation; Eurofood ¶ 39; see also SAS ISA Daisytek, N° RG 03/05038 (Cour d'appel de Versailles (4 Sept. 2003) (deferring to an English court's decision concluding that the COMI of a company incorporated in France (a subsidiary of an English company) was located in England); SAS Rover France, N° RG 2005P00666 (Tribunal de Commerce de Nanterre (19 mai 2005)) (authority for the same principle)). Once a court of a Member State has determined that the COMI is located within its jurisdiction, the sole recourse is to pursue remedies provided for by that court's national law (see Eurofood ¶ 43).

If the company has its COMI in another Member State, a Secondary Insolvency Proceeding can be opened before the French courts provided that the company has one or more establishments in France. Secondary Insolvency Proceedings may be opened in France independently from (and even before the commencement of) a Principal Insolvency Proceeding abroad if it is required by a local creditor (that is, a creditor who has his residency or registered office in France, or whose claim arises out of the activity of the establishment) or if the local law of the State where the registered office is located does not allow insolvency proceedings to be commenced against the company in question at the time.

An establishment is defined under the Regulation as any place where the debtor conducts a regular business activity involving human and material resources for this activity. It may be an office or a branch or even a subsidiary where the COMI of the subsidiary is located elsewhere.

The effects of Secondary Insolvency Proceedings are limited to the assets of the company located in the State of the establishment. All creditors, regardless of their nationality, are however entitled to declare their debts before the court in charge of the Proceeding. Furthermore, if a Principal Insolvency Proceeding has been commenced in the State where the registered office is located, any Secondary Insolvency Proceeding opened in France afterwards can only be a judicial liquidation.²⁴

Only these two criteria of the center of the main interests and of the establishment give jurisdiction to French courts under EC Regulation, which is a significant change from the former applicable law. French courts no longer have jurisdiction under articles 14 and 15 of the Civil Code when the applicant or the respondent is a French national, and when the company has no establishment in France but only assets or contractual relations.

9.1.3 International non-European insolvency proceedings

Non-European proceedings are not included in the scope of application of the EC Regulation: they cover the cases where a company has interests both in France and in a state which is not a party to the EC Regulation as well as those specially excluded from the field of application of the EC Regulation (insolvency proceedings without appointment of an administrator, or concerning banks or insurance companies²⁵). Since the EC Regulation has abrogated the bilateral Treaties with other Member States of the EU, only the Treaty with Monaco is still applicable. Therefore, the applicable law for international non-European insolvency proceedings is set forth in articles 1 and 163 of Decree 85-1388 implementing the French Insolvency Law, as interpreted by the courts.

Article 1 of the Decree provides that French courts will have jurisdiction if the registered office of the company is located in France. The notion of "registered office" is construed as the actual decision-making and administrative centre of the company (effective registered office) and not the literal meaning of the term, namely, the office registered as such at the Trade and Companies Registry (statutory registered office)²⁶. However in practice, the statutory registered office is assumed (subject to contrary evidence) to be the effective one, as under EC Regulation.

Article 1 of the Decree also provides that French courts have jurisdiction when the Company has its registered office abroad but one of the centers of its interests is located in France, which means in practice an establishment with no juridical personality. The insolvency proceedings are then said to be "subsidiary", which corresponds to the secondary insolvency proceedings of the EC regulation. This subsidiary proceeding can be opened in France independently of an insolvency proceeding opened in the State where the company has its registered office and can even reach a different solution to the same issue as the courts in such Member State.

The commencement of insolvency proceedings abroad in respect of a given company will not prevent the commencement of insolvency proceedings against the same company in France unless the foreign judgment has already been recognized and received an order of exequatur (that is, an enforcement order) from a French court.

The jurisdiction of French courts over non-EU international insolvency proceedings is more extensive than under the EC Regulation. Case law admits that French courts have jurisdiction over insolvency proceedings for a company which has only business relations, assets like buildings²⁷, or even business facilities rented under a leasing agreement²⁸ in France. Moreover, articles 14 and 15 of the French Civil Code give privileged jurisdiction to French courts if the claiming or defending party is a French national. For example, a French court may decide to start a personal insolvency proceeding against a company having its registered office in the U.S. and no establishments in France, when this company is a partner jointly and severally liable and without limitation for the debts of a French company under insolvency proceedings²⁹.

A principal insolvency is said to be universal: it includes all the assets of the company throughout the world. However, the French judgment must be recognized by an enforcement order from the court of the State in which the assets are located (while under the provisions of EC Regulation, recognition is of right).

All creditors regardless of their nationality can declare their debts before the court in charge of the insolvency proceedings, whether such proceedings are principal or subsidiary.

All causes of action arising under French insolvency law will be available³⁰, regardless of where the assets or persons in question are situated. The only difficulty would be that the orders issued by French courts, will require a foreign enforcement order in the country where the assets or the persons are located to be enforceable. Therefore, a foreign director could theoretically be liable for insuffisance d'actifs and transactions undertaken during the suspect period with a foreign counterparty (that is, after the date of cessation of payments) would be treated by the French courts as being either null and void (if falling within the provisions of Article L.632-1 of the Commercial Code) or at risk of being annulled if the circumstances fulfill the conditions of article L.632-2 of the Commercial Code (see question 4 above). A French court may also order a personal insolvency proceeding against a foreign director who has not performed his penalty for *insuffisance d'actifs*³¹, or who is a partner jointly and severally responsible and without limitation for the company's debts, which is no longer possible under EC Regulation.

QUESTION 10

10. Insurance

Is directors' and officers' insurance available in your jurisdiction? If so, to what extent will the availability of such insurance provide effective protection to directors against personal liability which may arise in connection with the issues raised in questions 1-9 above.

- 10.1 It is permissible under French law for a company to take out insurance and to pay insurance premiums in respect of the civil liability that its directors may incur in the performance of their duties. Typically insurance policies of this type cover the directors' civil liability resulting from faults, errors, omissions, mistakes and false interpretations of legal or regulatory texts. Such an insurance policy can cover civil claims arising out of insolvency proceedings. It is however becoming more common for these types of insurance policies to exclude claims for insuffisance d'actifs.
- 10.2 As a general matter, it is not permissible for any person to insure against penal liability regardless of the nature of the penalty. Insurance cannot be obtained against criminal bankruptcy, for example. Similarly, director's liability insurance policies will typically exclude any form of fraudulent behaviour, even if liability in respect thereof is civil in nature.
- 10.3 Given that the directors covered by the insurance policy must be identified, in practice the civil liability of a de facto director cannot be insured.

QUESTION 11

11. How safe is it for directors and others to incur further credit during the twilight period

11.1 Overview

- 11.1.1 The duties of directors and de facto directors are considered above in the response to question 2. As noted in that answer, French law does not focus on types of transactions but rather sanctions directors and persons in similar de facto positions for particular types of conduct. In other words, if a director incurs further credit during the twilight period, the risk of such director being exposed to liability lies in the circumstances in and the reasons for which such further credit was incurred, rather than in the type of transaction through which such credit is obtained.

- 11.1.2 Consequently, if by incurring the further credit, the director commits an act of mismanagement (for example, there was no good reason for the company to incur such credit) or did so for his or her own personal ends and not for the company, he or she would be exposed to an action “en responsabilité pour insuffisance d’actif” or personal bankruptcy, respectively.
- 11.1.3 A director must therefore be sure of the reasons for entering into any new transaction once the company in question is in a situation where, from a cash-flow point of view, the assets of the company are or risk being insufficient to cover its due and owing debts.
- 11.1.4 Given the technical nature of the definition of “cessation de paiements” and the risk that the cessation of payments date may be fixed retroactively by the insolvency court (up to 18 months before the commencement of the formal insolvency proceedings, without exceeding the period that has run since the definitive homologation decision of the accord amiable resulting from a conciliation procedure, unless fraud), it is possible for a manager to be running the company in a state of cessation of payments without actually knowing that this is the case. Directors should therefore be particularly careful of their intentions when entering into new transactions whenever the company is facing financial difficulties.
- 11.1.5 In practice, in France, well-advised managers will get independent professional help, whether from insolvency practitioners, legal professionals, accountants and/or the courts in voluntary reorganization proceedings to assist them in any difficult decisions they may make to avoid insolvency. They will also often seek the support of their creditors and in particular their banks and major suppliers.
- 11.2 Can an unconnected third party rely on the validity of transactions entered into by the company (in particular guarantees and securities) during the twilight period?
- 11.2.1 Articles L.632-1 and L.632-2 of the Commercial Code (formerly articles 107 and 108 of the French Insolvency Law) provide for a series of different types of act which are either obligatorily or at the discretion of the court null and void if undertaken during the “twilight” or, in French terminology, “suspect” period – a period which, as noted above, can extend to 18 months prior to the date of the commencement of formal insolvency proceedings or 24 months in the case of transactions undertaken for no consideration.
- 11.2.2 The types of transaction which are automatically null and void if entered into during the twilight period are described in the response to question 4 above. It is thus clear under French law that a party transacting with a company that is or is likely to be in a situation of cessation de paiements must avoid each of the nine different types of transaction listed in article L.632-1 of the Commercial Code. Failure to do so will result in the automatic nullity of the transaction and the concomitant measures of restitution required against the third party. It should be noted that the causation of loss to the company is not a condition for the applicability of article L.632-1 of the Commercial Code, neither is bad faith or any form of willful intent or knowledge that the company is in a state of cessation de paiements on the part of the third party.

11.2.3 Again as noted above in response to question 4, the courts have a discretionary right to avoid any transaction if it was entered into during the twilight period in circumstances where the other party was aware of the fact that the company was in a state of cessation de paiements. The apparently draconian nature of this power held by the courts is tempered by the need to show that the counter-party was aware not only that the company was in financial difficulties but that it was in the technical and special position of having an amount of available assets less than the amount of its due and payable debts.

APPENDIX

SUMMARY OF FRENCH INSOLVENCY PROCEDURES

1. Introduction

- 1.1 When a company faces insolvency there are a variety of insolvency options available under French law.
- 1.2 Prior to formal insolvency proceedings, there are a number of ways in which, with or without the assistance of the court, a company can attempt to recover from its situation of financial difficulty. In addition to the various private aids and agreements that can be entered into whether with shareholders, creditors or employees, these possibilities fall into the following principal categories:
 - (i) Public assistance/aid;
 - (ii) Voluntary reorganization (conciliation);
 - (iii) Appointment of a mandataire ad hoc;
 - (iv) Appointment of an administrateur provisoire.
- 1.3 Thereafter, if any of the foregoing actions does not remedy the company's financial difficulties, the company may, if it is not yet in cessation of payments, but can demonstrate that it is undergoing difficulties that are of a nature to bring it to cessation of payments, enter into the safeguard procedure. Alternatively, if the debtor is already in cessation of payments, it must enter into formal insolvency proceedings.
- 1.4 Unless the judicial liquidation of the company is immediately declared, the initial phase of the proceedings will consist of an observation period during which the judicially appointed organs and officers, the legal representative of the company and the creditors will seek to determine the best alternative for the company (reorganization in the case of the safeguard procedure, and reorganization or liquidation in the case of formal insolvency proceedings) followed by a ruling by the court on the type of reorganization program or liquidation that should be followed.

2. Public assistance

- 2.1 Public assistance may be either direct in the form of loans or subsidies or indirect in the form of extensions of delays for payment or tax relief. Such assistance is most typically granted by the administrative organs of the state albeit that other local or regional public organizations are also involved in supporting and assisting companies in difficulty.

- 2.2 Restructuring Committees have been established by the central government whose role is to assist industrial companies which find themselves in financial difficulty by offering financial support to help bear the burden of measures of restructuring or reorganizing which must be set forth in a clear and defined program designed to save the company. These Restructuring Committees therefore offer a form of direct assistance.
- 2.3 The Commission des Chefs des Services Financiers et des Représentants des Organismes de Sécurité Sociale et de l'Assurance Chômage (the Commission of the Heads of Financial Services and the Representatives of Social Security Organisms) created by the Decree n° 2007-686 dated 4 May 2007 has the authority, upon motivated request by the company, to grant delays for the payment of tax and social security debts. The Commission includes the director of the Tax Service and the Director of Social Security.

3. Conciliation

- 3.1 The process of conciliation is available to companies which are not in a state of cessation de paiements and which face financial difficulties as well as to companies which are already in a state of cessation de paiements, provided that they have not been in such state for more than 45 days. It is based upon the appointment of a conciliator by the competent commercial court and is aimed at the conclusion of an agreement between the company and all or part of its creditors with a view to restructuring the company's financial situation.
- 3.2 The procedure is initiated on a voluntary basis by the legal representative of the company filing a request with the competent commercial court, setting forth the financial, economic and social situation of the company, its financing needs and its means of meeting them.
- 3.3 The court has considerable investigative powers including the possibility to obtain credit and financial information so as to obtain a complete and accurate picture of the situation in which the company in question has found itself. The court can also appoint an expert to assist it in this information gathering task with a view to the drawing up of a report, but it has to obtain the debtor company's prior approval on the remuneration of the expert. It should be noted that the whole procedure is covered by the obligations of professional secrecy. Thus, any expert's report is available to the company but not to its creditors.
- 3.4 If the court considers that the situation of the company and the proposals made by the directors of the company so permit, the court will formally open the process of conciliation and appoint a conciliator for a period not exceeding four months which period may be extended by a maximum of one additional month at the request of the conciliator. The court will address to the conciliator the information that it has obtained, including any expert's report, during its initial inquiry.

- 3.5 As noted above the purpose of the process of the conciliation is to facilitate the conclusion of an agreement between the company and its creditors to enable the company to meet its debts and improve its financial situation. The agreement may be reached with the company's principal creditors alone. For the duration of the agreement (provided that the debtor respects the terms of the agreement), the company's creditors who are party to the agreement are prohibited from pursuing any form of judicial action against the company aimed at obtaining the payment of their debts.
- 3.6 If an agreement (accord amiable) is reached, the parties have the following two options:
- (i) ask the court to record their agreement and make it enforceable (this option has no particular consequences). In such case, the court's decision is not made publicly available (which keeps the agreement confidential) and may not be subject to appeal; or
 - (ii) ask the court, at the debtor's request, to approve the agreement (this is known as the homologation procedure).

For the court to agree to the homologation procedure, the debtor must meet the following criteria:

- (a) the debtor is not in a state of cessation of payments or the agreement puts an end to the state of cessation of payments in which the company finds itself;
- (b) the terms of the agreement should normally ensure the continuity of the company's activity;
- (c) the agreement does not harm the interests of the creditors which are not party to the agreement.

In the event these criteria are met, the court's approval decision is filed at the Registry of Trade and Companies and published in a legal announcements bulletin (the agreement is no longer confidential although strictly speaking it is not the agreement which is published but only the court's approval decision). The court's decision may be appealed by the parties to the agreement as well as by interested third parties within ten days of its publication.

It should be noted that when an agreement has been approved (homologation), a court cannot subsequently fix the date of cessation de paiements to a date preceding the date on which the court has approved the agreement reached under a conciliation procedure (except in case of fraud). This means that the agreement and any related guarantees fall outside the suspect period and therefore are not at risk of being cancelled on that basis. The approval of the agreement has two other consequences: it leads to the automatic removal of any prohibition on the company issuing cheques and it grants the creditors which are party to the approved agreement a prepayment privilege called privilege de la conciliation which entitles them to be paid before any other creditors except employees and legal fees creditors in the event a subsequent insolvency proceeding is opened.

- 3.7 Failure by the company to comply with an agreement reached with the creditors (in either version stated above) nullifies the agreement. All payments covered by the agreement become immediately due and payable (upon a court decision making a finding of such failure). In such a situation it is frequent for formal insolvency proceedings to be commenced either by the court of its own motion or upon application by a creditor.

4. Appointment of a mandataire ad hoc

- 4.1 The appointment by the competent commercial court of a mandataire ad hoc over a company is designed to deal with a difficulty specific to the company rather than a generalized financial/economic downturn or crisis.
- 4.2 The mandataire ad hoc is appointed upon application by the legal representative of the company. In theory, the appointment is made in the discretion of the court which defines the specific mission to be carried out by the mandataire. The legal representative of the company retains all of his or her prerogatives notwithstanding the appointment of the mandataire, in particular with respect to the management of the company. The remuneration of the mandataire ad hoc is fixed by the court with the debtor company's approval.
- 4.3 In practice courts generally defer to the debtor's request where the debtor proposes a specific person to serve as the mandataire ad hoc and submits the terms of the mandataire's mission. Further, the court's discretion is subject to two limitations: (i) the mandataire ad hoc must be independent, that is, he cannot have been remunerated or paid by the debtor or its subsidiaries, the debtor's creditors, or any person or entity controlling the debtor, in the past two years, and (ii) the mandataire ad hoc cannot have been a juge consulaire (that is, judge sitting in the commercial court) within the last five years.
- 4.4 Typically a mandataire ad hoc would be appointed in a situation where the company needs to negotiate for example extensions of payment with one or two specific creditors and not the whole mass of creditors. The duration of the functions of the mandataire ad hoc is not limited by law and thus occasionally, given the very short duration of the mission that can be granted to a conciliator in the conciliation procedure, a mandataire ad hoc may be chosen by the commercial court instead of the conciliation where a longer duration of mandate is thought to be necessary and the number of creditors in question is not too large.
- 4.5 Any agreement entered into by the company following the intervention of the mandataire ad hoc is not, unlike under the conciliation, approved by the court. It operates like any other agreement. The mandataire ad hoc procedure may be converted into a conciliation procedure.

- 4.6 Because the mandataire ad hoc is independent and appointed by the court, any transaction that he negotiates or supervises is as a practical matter treated with deference in any subsequent bankruptcy proceeding. This deference is reinforced by the fact that bankruptcy proceedings would typically be conducted before the same court that appointed the mandataire ad hoc. Moreover, in practice, an agreement reached under the aegis of the mandataire ad hoc may be known to and informally acknowledged by the court. In addition, although the mandataire ad hoc is not entitled to impose an agreement on the parties, the mandataire ad hoc has significant authority because, in the event that the debtor eventually files for bankruptcy, the mandataire ad hoc's opinion will be particularly persuasive as to the responsibilities of the various players in the context of the bankruptcy proceedings.

5. Safeguard procedure

- 5.1 The safeguard procedure ("procédure de sauvegarde") was designed to persuade debtors to seek the assistance of the courts at a relatively early stage in their financial difficulties, so as to increase the likelihood that their businesses may be salvaged. Consistent with this approach, the safeguard procedure provides management with a degree of autonomy and independence following the commencement of proceedings.³² From the court's perspective, the guiding principles of the safeguard procedure are to ensure the continuation of the business, the preservation of jobs, and the payment of debts. A company may, in its sole discretion, initiate safeguard proceedings provided (i) it is able to pay its debts as they come due out of its available assets, and (ii) it experiences difficulties which it is not able to overcome and which are likely to lead to a cessation des paiements.
- 5.2 The judicial officers appointed by the court to conduct the proceedings are the following:
- (i) a juge commissaire who is a judge appointed at the very opening of the proceedings to oversee the progress of the procedure and to accelerate it if necessary.
 - (ii) a mandataire judiciaire (who would become the creditors' representative in a process of reorganisation and the "mandataire à la liquidation des entreprises" or a liquidator in a process of judicial liquidation) whose role is to verify the debts of the company, to represent the creditors of the company in any judicial actions and to verify the assets of the company in the event of a judicial liquidation.
 - (iii) an administrateur judiciaire, or administrator, whose role depends upon the mandate ordered by the court, between supervision, assistance and/or representation.

³² This autonomy is not without certain significant limits, for example, the trustee ("administrateur judiciaire") has sole discretion over the termination and execution of contracts. Art. L. 622-13 Code de Commerce. Similarly, the debtor must seek the court's authorization for all acts that are outside of the ordinary course of business. Art. L. 622-7 Code de Commerce.

- (iv) the contrôleurs who are appointed by the juge commissaire from among those of the company's creditors who so request to oversee the various operations of verification made by the other court appointed officers. They are vested with the prerogative of representing the creditors' interests in case of failure by the mandataire judiciaire to fulfill its mission.
 - (v) the représentant des salariés who are not appointed by the court but by the employees of the company upon the request of the court and whose role is to verify the amount of wages overdue and unpaid as part of the list of debts of the company.
 - (vi) the représentants du personnel who are the existing employees' representatives in the company (either the workers' council or the personnel delegates) who are to be consulted by the tribunal on the principal decisions to be taken throughout the proceedings.
- 5.3. As part of the safeguard procedure, the debtor undergoes an observation period ("période d'observation") during which the debtor's financial state is evaluated. The observation period lasts for a maximum period of 6 months, and may be renewed once at the request of the debtor, the administrator or the public prosecutor. It can be exceptionally extended for a further period of 6 months, only at the request of the public prosecutor. During the observation period, the trustee ("administrateur judiciaire") evaluates the situation of the company in a "social and economic report" examining the causes and the importance of the financial difficulties faced by the company. This report is filed with the court before the end of the observation period.
- 5.4 The observation period culminates in the approval (or rejection) of a safeguard plan ("plan de sauvegarde") designed to permit the debtor to preserve at least some portion of its business as a going concern. The plan details the terms for debt repayment negotiated with the companies' creditors. During the observation period, the trustee must consult with all creditors whose debts arose prior to the opening of the safeguard procedure to attempt to negotiate a reduction of the debt and an extension of payment terms. Creditors may be consulted either individually or as part of committees.
- 5.5 For large companies (with more than 150 employees or annual sales greater than €20 million), two creditors' committees (one for credit institutions having a claim against the debtor and the other for any suppliers having individually a claim that represents more than 5% of the total amount of the claims of all the debtor's suppliers, as well as other suppliers as may be determined by the administrator) will be established.
- 5.6 The committees must announce whether they approve or reject the safeguard plan within 30 days of its proposal. To be adopted, the plan must be accepted by an absolute majority of the creditors of each committee representing at least two-thirds of the total amount of the claims on that committee. If the draft plan is adopted by both committees (and subject to the approval of the court), the proposals for debt relief and extension of payment dates contained in the plan become binding upon all members of the committees.

- 5.7 Creditors who are not members of committees must be individually consulted. Except to the extent they individually consent, the claims of such creditors cannot be reduced, other than through an extension of the date of payment which can be for a period of no longer than 10 years from the commencement of the plan, and can be, beyond the second year following the commencement of the plan, for an amount of no less than 5% of its total per year.
- 5.8 If there are any holders of bonds, they are presented with the plan during a general meeting of the holders of the bonds held for that purpose.
- 5.9 Following the votes of the committees, and consultation with other creditors, the plan is then reviewed by the court, taking into account the trustee's social and economic report, the views of the public prosecutor and the proposed treatment of minority shareholders and creditors. A court may only adopt a continuation plan where there are "serious possibilities" for a safeguard; no continuation plan may be adopted if the business of the company is not viable.

6. Formal insolvency proceedings

- 6.1 Formal insolvency proceedings must be commenced by the filing by the legal representative of the company of a declaration of cessation de paiements (colloquially referred to as the dépôt du bilan) within 45 days following the date on which the company falls into a state of cessation de paiements. The sanctions to which the legal representative may be exposed if he or she fails to respect the delay with respect to a company that is in cessation de paiements are set out above in response to question 2.
- 6.2 Formal insolvency proceedings may also be commenced by the issue of a writ of summons by a creditor, by a request filed by the public prosecutor or by the competent commercial court (being the court of the place where the company has its registered office) of its own motion.
- 6.3 The competent commercial court first embarks on a preliminary investigation as to whether and if so when the company fell into a state of cessation de paiements and into whether the company has ceased activity or is incapable of being reorganized.
- 6.4 In the event that the court determines following its preliminary inquiry that the judicial liquidation of the company is not necessary, it opens the observation period and appoints the various judicial officers who will conduct the investigation into the most appropriate manner in which to reorganize the company. In this case, the procedure is very similar to the safeguard procedure discussed above.

- 6.5 If the court comes to the decision that the company has either ceased activity or is incapable of being reorganized it will immediately issue an order for the judicial liquidation of the company. The purpose of the proceedings thereafter is not to redress the company but rather to obtain the most profit from the sale of the assets of the company to pay off the company's debts. The management of the company is immediately stripped of all authority which is vested in the court appointed liquidator. It is the liquidator with the assistance of the court that proceeds with the sale of the assets of the company and pays off the company's creditors.
- 6.6 As in the safeguard procedure, the observation period lasts for six months renewable once for an additional six month period by the court.
- 6.7 During the observation period, the company continues to function with its management being assisted or represented by the administrator.
- 6.8 It should be noted that at any time during the observation period, the court can order the transfer of all or part of the activity of the company or its judicial liquidation.
- 6.9 During the observation period the administrator must draw up a statement of the financial situation of the company together with his or her proposal for the reorganization (or judicial liquidation) of the company.
- 6.10 The plan resulting from a reorganization procedure (redressement) (as in the case of a sauvegarde procedure) can take one of two forms, or a combination of them both: namely, the continuation of the activity of the company, or the transfer of the company's activity (in all or part). Any transfer under both procedures is governed by the provisions applicable to a transfer under a liquidation procedure (since 2006, the transfer of the activity is governed by the same rules regardless of the procedure in which it is ordered). A continuation plan may be adopted by the court where it appears, on the basis of the report submitted by the administrator, that there are serious possibilities for the company's recovery and for the payment of liabilities (by adopting measures such as delays of payment, restructurings, etc.). A transfer plan may be adopted by the court where it appears that a company is not viable in its actual structure, and that possibility of recovery of such company is conditioned upon the sale of different activities or business units. The transfer of all or part of the activity of the company must be preceded by bona fide offers for their acquisition.
- 6.11 It should be noted that a sauvegarde or reorganization procedure can be converted at any moment into a liquidation procedure where it appears to the court that the recovery of such company is no longer possible. Since 1994, a liquidation procedure may also be opened from the very beginning of bankruptcy proceedings, on the date of the judgment d'ouverture, when it is obvious that the company has no chances to recover.
- 6.12 The carrying out of the plan of reorganization cannot last longer than ten years and is supervised by a judicially appointed officer (the "commissaire à l'exécution du plan") who oversees the actual performance of the plan and the administrator to whom the court grants the powers necessary for the execution of the plan.

QUESTION 1

1. The start and duration of the “twilight” period

What is the length of the period ending with formal insolvency proceedings during which transactions entered into by a company are vulnerable to attack or are liable to give rise to personal liability on the part of directors and/or others involved in the management of the company?

1.1 Introduction

The concept of personal, civil and criminal liability of directors of German corporations (either a company with limited liability “GmbH” or a stock corporation “AG”) is based upon the limited liability of German corporations vis-à-vis its creditors. In the absence of personally liable partners, German corporations are not only limited in terms of personal liability of the shareholders but also in terms of the assets available in the company for distribution to the creditors. Consequently, German corporate law provides for several rules relating to the contribution and the subsequent maintenance of the capital in German corporations. Furthermore, even more stringent duties, responsibilities and liabilities are imposed on directors once the assets of the company deteriorate, i.e. should the company encounter financial difficulties. Access to information by the creditors with respect to the financial situation of the company is restricted. This corresponds with the director’s duty to be completely aware of the financial situation of the corporation at all times. Thus, any liability arising during the “twilight” period is mainly imposed on the directors of the corporation, who are the only so-called legal representatives of the corporation. The monitoring duties of directors are less intensive if the distressed company is not a corporation but a partnership consisting of at least one personally liable partner. In this event, any duties, responsibilities or liabilities outlined in this chapter only apply to a limited extent unless the personally liable shareholder or partner is a company which itself has limited liability.

The German Federal Court has no sympathy for directors lacking knowledge of the company’s financial situation and not heeding warning signs concerning the company’s deteriorating financial situation. Thus, the essential duties in the “twilight” period apply to directors irrespective of whether they (i) reside abroad, (ii) have an engineering instead of a commercial background, or (iii) act as a chairman of the supervisory board rather than as a manager of the ordinary daily business. This “ideal world” approach indicates the stringent duties imposed on directors during the “twilight” period. Generally, financial difficulties of the company do not give rise to liabilities for the shareholders or supervisory board members vis-à-vis third parties. Shareholders or supervisory board members are not even entitled to act on behalf of the company (unless they are directors of the company at the same time). In addition to the appointed and registered directors, German corporate law does not recognise the concept of non-executive directorship, so that generally all appointed directors face the same degree of liability.

1.2 “Illiquidity”, “deficit balance” and “over-indebtedness” as key indicators for the “twilight” period

The start and duration of the “twilight” period does not depend on whether a formal insolvency procedure is instituted. Contrary to other European laws (for example, the laws of the United Kingdom, which rather vaguely refer to where a director “knew or ought to have concluded that insolvent liquidation is inescapable”), German courts and literature have established explicit methods by which prerequisites indicating the start of the “twilight” period will be determined, such prerequisites being illiquidity (i.e. negative cash flow test), impending illiquidity, deficit balance and over-indebtedness (i.e. negative balance sheet or equity test). These key indicators trigger various duties and responsibilities of directors under German corporation, commercial and criminal law, which are also very specific (unlike, for example, the English “wrongful trading” concept designed to ensure that “directors do everything possible to minimise the potential loss to creditors in anticipation of an insolvent liquidation”).

Illiquidity and over-indebtedness are regarded as “absolute bankruptcy reasons” resulting in an obligation on the directors to petition for the commencement of insolvency proceedings, while impending illiquidity only gives rise to an option to do this.

Since illiquidity and over-indebtedness are so-called “indefinite legal terms”, regulators, courts and German literature have endeavoured to find a precise definition which will determine the start and end of the “twilight” period.”

1.3 Determination of the “twilight” period

1.3.1 Illiquidity

The German Insolvency Code¹ stipulates that a debtor is illiquid if he is unable to honour payment obligations when due. Illiquidity will generally be deemed if the debtor has ceased to make payments (prima facie evidence). The German Federal Court refers to specific circumstances, according to which it will be presumed a company has ceased to make payments, such as:

- a declaration by the director of the inability to honour future obligations;
- closing of the business;
- non-payment of significant operating costs, such as wage-related costs;
- execution of claims against the company.

These warning signs should be easily recognised by the directors.

However, as a result of an exception made by the German Federal Court, a debtor who is unable to pay less than 10 per cent of its aggregate liabilities for a period of three weeks should not be regarded as being illiquid unless it can already be seen that the shortfall will exceed 10 per cent in the near future.

If the shortfall amounts to 10 per cent or more, illiquidity would be presumed unless, in exceptional circumstances, there is certainty or near certainty that the shortfall can be removed in the near future. However, to make use of the exception it must be deemed acceptable for the creditors to be paid with such a delay.

This exception is relevant to the duty to petition for the commencement of insolvency proceedings. In view of the potential criminal and civil liability, consulting an expert to clarify whether the debtor is illiquid or not is recommended as well as entrusting such expert with a liquidity balance.

1.3.2 Impending illiquidity

Impending illiquidity will be deemed to exist if a company is presumed to be unable to honour existing payment obligations when they become due. As mentioned above, minor shortfalls and an inability to pay less than 10 per cent of the aggregate liabilities are not considered to be indicators of impending illiquidity.

Unlike existing illiquidity and over-indebtedness, impending illiquidity does not impose an absolute obligation on the directors to petition for the commencement of insolvency proceedings. German insolvency law has introduced impending illiquidity as an option to petition for insolvency proceedings in order to enable directors to initiate reorganisation measures, in particular the implementation of a pre-packaged reorganisation plan at an early stage of insolvency proceedings. Such a petition might be combined with a motion for a self-management order, which is derived from the concept of a “debtor in possession”. According to experience with the former German Bankruptcy Code, corporate recovery measures have frequently been interfered with by creditors executing claims by seizing the assets of the estate required to maintain and continue with the business. Following the filing of a petition for the commencement of insolvency proceedings based on impending illiquidity, protective orders by the court may enjoin acts of execution on the debtor’s assets. However, German insolvency courts have been reluctant to make orders for self-management due to the lack of reliability of those directors who may have caused the financial crisis of the company through mismanagement in the first place.

With respect to criminal liability, impending illiquidity in addition to already existing illiquidity and over-indebtedness is a constituent element of criminal offences pertaining to insolvency in the German Criminal Code and, therefore, indicates the start of the “twilight” period from a criminal law perspective.

1.3.3 Over-indebtedness

While a deficit balance (loss equal to one half of the company's share capital), obliges the directors to convene a shareholders' meeting (see 2.1.1 below), the over-indebtedness of a company is an absolute reason for immediately petitioning for insolvency proceedings.

Such over-indebtedness is not necessarily reflected only in the ordinary year-end balance sheet, but it may result from a special "over-indebtedness status". Generally, directors are obliged to monitor the financial situation carefully and institute control devices such as the preparation of monthly interim balance sheets as soon as certain warning signs that the company is experiencing financial difficulties have been revealed, for example, a significant loss of share capital.

In the event that an (interim) balance sheet shows over-indebtedness, the directors have to prepare an "over-indebtedness status" in order to verify whether or not the company is actually over-indebted. Such status either has to show the assets at their going concern values or their liquidation values. In a first step, the assets are evaluated based on liquidation values. Provided there is a "positive continuation prognosis", the directors may evaluate the assets on the basis of the company continuing as a "going concern". The positive continuation prognosis requires that a detailed and clear medium-term business plan shows that, in operative business and financial matters, the company can survive and prosper in such a way that, during this period, an insolvency of the company will not occur. Furthermore, it is not sufficient for the directors to simply accept the prognosis as correct and the results of the planning as "most probable". German courts have always held that managers must seek the advice of independent external experts with respect to such a prognosis. These experts must be convinced, to the same extent as the management, that a positive continuation prognosis exists. In the event that an "over-indebtedness status" based on going concern values still shows a negative equity, the company must be regarded as over-indebted and this actual over-indebtedness will trigger the obligation to immediately petition for insolvency proceedings.

1.3.4 End of the "twilight" period

As a result of the commencement of insolvency proceedings, the directors' right to manage and deal with assets of the company will pass to the insolvency administrator. Although the directors will still be registered with the commercial register, their power to act on behalf of the company will have practically ceased to exist. Thus, the directors can no longer be held liable for a breach of rules aimed at the protection of creditors.

In the event that the petition for the commencement of insolvency proceedings is rejected because the assets available in the estate are not sufficient to cover the costs of the insolvency proceedings, the insolvency court will terminate any protective measures ordered so far, including any restrictions on the directors to dispose of the company's assets. Consequently, the directors will regain control of the company. Since the order rejecting the commencement of insolvency proceedings leads to the dissolution of the company, the directors are now deemed liquidators who are responsible for winding up the company without formal insolvency proceedings. This so-called "lack of assets liquidation" is not governed by any specific rules additional to the rules pertaining to the "ordinary" voluntary liquidation of companies, which are based on the assumption that the assets are sufficient to satisfy all creditors. Since the German Insolvency Code is not applicable outside formal insolvency proceedings, it is debatable whether directors are bound by the insolvent principle of equal treatment of creditors. In practice, the termination of protective measures ordered by the court, namely the prohibition on execution against the debtors' assets, will result in the lifting of the temporary restraint on execution by creditors, thereby preventing a pari passu distribution of assets to creditors.

1.4 Summary

The following diagram endeavours to illustrate the start and duration of the "twilight" period in terms of civil and criminal liabilities of directors and voidability of actions (see further question 4 below).

Transactions vulnerable to being set aside	- Impending illiquidity - loss equal to one-half of the share capital	Over-indebtedness or illiquidity	Duty to petition for insolvency proceedings	Commencement of proceedings or rejection of petition due to an insufficient estate	Final liquidation (winding up) within or without formal insolvency proceedings
Early stage of financial difficulties (up to 10 years prior to petition in the event of actions intentionally harming creditors)		3 week deadline to remove absolute insolvency reasons	Interim insolvency proceedings (usually up to 3 months)

QUESTION 2

2. Actions potentially giving rise to liability for directors

- (a) In respect of which acts during the “twilight” period may a director be held personally liable or which may otherwise have adverse consequences for him.
- (b) In relation to each act identified in (a) above:
 - (i) is any resulting liability against a director civil, criminal or both?;
 - (ii) can a director be made personally liable in respect of the whole loss caused to the company or the deficit to creditors?;
 - (iii) will liability attach to individual directors in proportion to their specific involvement?;
 - (iv) is there a specified period before commencement of a subsequent insolvency procedure within which the relevant act must have been undertaken in order for liability to attach to a director?; and
 - (v) what defences, if any, will be available in relation to each offence?

2.1 Criminal and civil liability

The German Civil Code provides that any person who violates a statute intended for the protection of others (so-called “protection statutes”) is bound to compensate the injured party for any damage arising as a result. Any criminal statute aimed at the protection of property is deemed to be such a protection statute. Statutes which provide for the protection of creditors of a distressed company attach personal liability to directors, who are required to compensate for losses resulting from a breach of the protection statute. The following duties, directed solely against directors of a distressed company and resulting in criminal as well as civil liability, can be found in German Corporate law and German Criminal Code. A summary of each is considered in turn.

2.1.1 Duty to convene a shareholders’ meeting

Pursuant to the German Companies with Limited Liability Act and the German Stock Corporation Act, directors have the duty to convene a shareholders’ meeting in the event that, upon preparation of an annual or interim balance sheet, it becomes apparent or it must be assumed by reasonable belief that the company has incurred a loss equal to one-half of its share capital. However, liability does not occur automatically with the existence of a balance sheet deficiency. Directors must constantly monitor the financial situation of the company. An action may be brought by the company seeking compensation for damages which could have been avoided by resolutions or measures which would have been adopted by a shareholders’ meeting if such meeting had been convened.

2.1.2 Duty to petition for the commencement of insolvency proceedings

In practice, the most important civil and criminal liability of directors results from a failure to petition for the commencement of insolvency proceedings. Directors of a German company with limited liability, a German stock corporation or a German partnership which consists only of companies with limited liability have an absolute duty to petition for the commencement of insolvency proceedings without undue delay, but not later than three weeks after the occurrence of illiquidity or over-indebtedness. In addition to criminal sanctions, directors will face civil liability to compensate the company, as well as the creditors of the company, who suffer loss caused by the failure of the directors to file the petition in due time.

As a result of MoMiG (a German law which came into effect in November 2008), a shareholder is under a duty to petition for the commencement of insolvency proceedings if there are no directors or the whereabouts of all the directors is unknown. In that event, the same criminal and civil liability will arise for shareholders as for directors.

2.1.2.1 Liability vis-à-vis the company

The Corporate law provisions impose a duty on directors to compensate the company for any payments made after illiquidity has occurred or over-indebtedness was discovered. This does not apply to payments which were consistent with the due care of a prudent businessman.

2.1.2.2 Liability vis-à-vis the creditors

The German Federal Court has established and recently amended a rather complex method to ascertain the loss suffered by a creditor. In calculating the compensation, one has to distinguish between creditors already having claims against the company at the time the petition had to be filed ("old creditors") and creditors who have entered into business relations with the company after that time ("new creditors").

Assuming that the directors had filed the petition in time, the "old creditors" would have received a pro-rata distribution based on the assets available at that time. Thus, the total loss suffered by the old creditors has to be calculated by way of a comparison between the assets actually available in the insolvency estate and the assets which would have formed part of the estate if the directors had filed the petition in time. Since the "new creditors" would have been refrained from entering into business relations with a company subject to insolvency proceedings, their loss encompasses the general interest in the agreement. Such loss is probably significantly higher than the loss suffered by the old creditors. For example, a bank granting an overdraft to the company has to be treated as a new creditor in the amount of the asset portfolio being increased after the time the petition was required to be filed.

In addition, the German Insolvency Act enables an action to be brought by any person who has made an advance payment in order to avoid the petition for the commencement for insolvency proceedings being denied by reason of insufficient assets available in the insolvency estate. Compensation in such cases comprises the reimbursement of any advanced payments.

2.1.3 Liability vis-à-vis social security authorities

The German Criminal Code imposes sanctions on directors who intentionally fail to transfer social security contributions of employees to the social security authorities. The predecessor to the German Criminal Code expressly stated that directors would only be liable in the event that they failed to transfer social security contributions that had actually been deducted and withheld from wages. The new statute no longer requires such deduction and withholding. However, some higher regional courts have argued that directors can not be held liable for a failure to transfer social security contributions where the wages have not in fact been paid to the employees. According to these court rulings, something similar to a criminal breach of trust is required which can only be deemed in the event that social security contributions are not transferred despite the corresponding wages having been paid.

The German Federal Court has reversed one of the aforementioned judgments referring expressly to the wording of the statute. With this ruling, the German Federal Court increased the directors' responsibilities vis-à-vis social security authorities significantly. A conflict of duties may arise if directors are obliged to transfer social security contributions while they may incur personal liability if they initiate any payment following illiquidity and/or overindebtedness (see 1.2).

However, the German Federal Court recently ruled that a director transferring social security contributions of employees to the social security authorities or income tax to the tax authorities following illiquidity and/or overindebtedness applying the "due care of a prudent businessman" will not incur personal liability.

Furthermore, the German Federal Court also recently lifted such payment duty for the three-week filing period (see 2.2.2). Directors who do not transfer social security payments within this period do not incur a penalty either.

Notwithstanding the above, a criminal offence will only be deemed in the event that directors fail to transfer the contributions despite funds being available or fail to arrange for safety precautions for the payment of employees' contributions when indications of illiquidity appear and tacitly accept that the contributions cannot be transferred subsequently. The German Criminal Code cannot impose sanctions in the event that the transfer of the social security contribution was impossible due to absolute illiquidity.

With respect to civil liability, a director is required to pay compensation for the damage arising as a result of the failure to transfer social security contributions in the amount of the social security contributions not transferred.

2.1.4 Fraud

Criminal and civil liability due to trading fraudulently will attach to directors who incur further credit by way of entering into agreements with suppliers or lenders in the “twilight” period pretending that the company is solvent. Furthermore, long-term agreements during the course of which up-front payments by the purchaser are customary have to be carefully considered by the directors if they are aware of an impending insolvency situation at the time of the conclusion of the agreement and therefore anticipate insolvency proceedings in the near future. Civil liability of directors will be deemed by the German Federal Court in the event that a supplier has been induced by directors to render advance performance without directors having any prospects of being able to pay the consideration.

2.1.5 Crimes pertaining to insolvency

Crimes pertaining to insolvency, if governed by the German Criminal Code, expressly refer to the “twilight” period starting when impending illiquidity has already been established. Alternatively, such criminal statutes apply in the event of an actual over-indebtedness situation of the company, as set out above. Generally, such crimes relate to conduct which endangers creditors’ rights. Crimes frequently committed in the “twilight” period by directors who desperately try to cope with the financial situation and seek to preserve the business by avoiding formal insolvency proceedings, comprise:

- destruction of or damage to assets in a commercially irresponsible manner,
- entering into speculative transactions,
- simulation of the existence of assets, breach of the duty to keep books and other statutes of commercial law relating to the accurate disclosure of the current financial situation and the prospect of the business in the books, in particular the balance sheet and the management report, endangering the rights of creditors on whose behalf the company holds assets on trust, and
- preferential treatment of creditors by granting them security or satisfaction to which they are not entitled, and thereby acting intentionally to the detriment of other creditors.

2.2 Civil liability

2.2.1 Liability arising from the causation of an insolvency situation

Generally, directors have to apply the “due care of a prudent businessman” when conducting company affairs. According to German literature, these principles will be violated in the “twilight” period in the event that the directors fail to respond immediately to a financial crisis by way of initiating corporate recovery measures. However, since such obligations are not precise, a claim to compensation by creditors can hardly be based on such an omission.

In contrast, MoMiG will create a director's liability for causation of insolvency. This means that directors will be held liable for payments to the shareholders of the company by which the illiquidity or/and overindebtedness was caused.

2.2.2 Breach of agreement / acting as guarantor vis-à-vis counter-parties

A German Federal Court ruling attaching liability to the directors of a construction company is the subject of a controversial discussion as to whether or not the directors can be held liable for obligations to be performed by the company. The director's liability in this case was based on the director being a guarantor of obligations of the company in connection with an agreement on the provision of collateral to a supplier. The director was held personally liable because he failed to ensure that the security provided by the company could finally be realised by the creditor. As far as the exploitation of personal trust of the directors is concerned, court rulings generally require an additional personal warranty from directors to the effect that their declarations are correct. In this event, the third party relies on the reputation of the director rather than on the reputation of the represented company.

2.2.3 Group liability / piercing the corporate veil

Assuming that the director is also a dominating shareholder of the company, the concept of group liability might result in an obligation on the part of the controlling shareholder to compensate any annual net loss due to the misuse of its managerial power. The German Federal Court has expressly stated that the concept of "group liability" is also applicable in the event that the shareholder is a natural person and not a legal entity, e.g. the director of the company. The precedent concerned a German company with limited liability having only one shareholder who simultaneously managed the business as the sole director. The court held that the shareholder had misused the concept of limited liability because he had conducted the business as a sole trader pursuing only his personal interests while intentionally neglecting the affairs of the company. Therefore, the natural person had to be regarded as a "dominating company" analogous to the concept of liability in a group consisting of corporations.

However, the German Federal Court has recently issued a new judgment. The doctrine of piercing the corporate veil has been changed to a concept of inducing a subsidiary into financial assistance which actually endangers its own separate economic and/or legal existence (in other words, it may have the consequence of causing the insolvency of the subsidiary), which will result in a liability in tort towards that company. By doing so, the German Federal Court has not created a new liability but rather given a new name to the concept of piercing the corporate veil. As this misuse is identified by the damnification of the company's ability to meet its obligations, it has been named the 'liability due to the annihilation of existence' (Existenzvernichtung) or due to the so-called 'existence-annihilating interference' (existenzvernichtender Eingriff).

However, this of course does not mean that the managing director is free to refuse any demand to make upstream payments. The managing director needs to undertake cash flow planning that ensures the survival of the entity, but the shareholder is free to instruct the managing directors to limit any non-essential spending (such as cap-ex and other items) to an absolute minimum to free up liquidity for up-streaming.

The absolute outside boundary is the criminal liability of management for payment of social contributions, which means that the managing director has to ensure in his cash flow planning that sufficient funds are available for the payment of due and payable social contributions. With this exception, there appears to be no general duty of the managing director to build up liquidity reserves because the managing director is afforded broad discretion in conducting the business. However, in general a breach of the standard of a prudent business manager in handling the company's affairs may lead to civil and criminal liability of a managing director if he acts wilfully or negligently in spending cash which triggers the cash-flow insolvency of the company. In contrast, a simple management failure of the managing director will not result in any liability towards the company.

Furthermore, according to recent case law, there is no liability towards creditors, only towards the company.

2.2.4 Breach of the capital maintenance rules

The capital maintenance rules of the German Companies with the Limited Liability Act are aimed at the preservation of the assets required to maintain the registered share capital and such assets may not be distributed to the shareholders. Any distribution of assets to shareholders during the "twilight" period will most likely constitute a redemption of share capital. The directors of the company are personally liable vis-à-vis the company to the extent that assets are distributed to shareholders in breach of such capital maintenance rules. This also applies to cash pool payments to affiliated companies, which comprise the assets required to maintain the registered share capital.

2.3 Liability vis-à-vis tax authorities

2.3.1 Obligation to transfer deducted wage taxes

The directors are obligated to deduct wage taxes from the gross amount of wages and to subsequently transfer the deductions to the tax authorities. Since tax deductions from wages are regarded as money held on trust to the benefit of the tax authorities, failure to transfer such money leads to a personal liability of the directors. In the event that the cash flow is not sufficient to pay the gross amount of wages, the directors are obliged to reduce wage payments to the extent that the wage taxes calculated on the basis of the reduced gross amount of wages can be paid to the tax authorities.

2.3.2 Preference of other creditors

Generally, company creditors must be treated equally by the directors during the “twilight” period. With respect to outstanding taxes, the directors are personally liable to the extent that other creditors have been preferred to the detriment of the tax authorities. In the “twilight” period, directors are required to satisfy the claims of the creditors equally on a pro-rata basis in the event that the funds are not sufficient to completely satisfy all creditors.

2.4 Liability in proportion to specific involvement

The rules of procedure, respective service contracts or any oral agreement frequently provide that directors with an engineering background are primarily responsible for technical matters while financial matters are mainly covered by economists. The engineering-related directors may not be completely aware of the current financial situation of the company. Despite this, neither German corporate, commercial nor criminal law, which govern the specific duties, responsibilities and liabilities of directors, expressly attach liability pro-rata to their specific involvement, nor do they allocate liability to a specific sphere of responsibilities or areas of practice. Moreover, directors are also responsible for another director's breach of duties, so that in practice each director has to use due diligence not only in his own affairs but to ensure that the other directors also meet the requirements to the same degree.

However, these principles are not consistently applied, so that a defence like the allocation of spheres of responsibility to other directors might be available. In particular, the German Criminal Code requires intentional conduct unless expressly negligent conduct is subject to criminal sanctions. Generally, intentional conduct can only be allocated to directors who actually fail to comply with the respective duty. In addition, intentional conduct might be deemed in the event that other directors of the managing board are completely aware of the omission of the other responsible director. Furthermore, court rulings have imposed a supervision duty on the other directors with respect to the compliance of the director actually in charge of the relevant financial matters.

The following show whether liability will be attached according to the breach of specific duties by the respective director or whether any director of the management board will face liability irrespective of his involvement.

Actions giving rise to liability	Liability of management board members
Duty to convene a shareholders' meeting	Joint liability
Duty to petition for the commencement of insolvency proceedings	Joint liability Liability of shareholders in case of a company without management in place
Liability vis-à-vis social security authorities	Liability is allocated to directors who actually fail to transfer the social security contributions or who were completely aware of the omission of the other responsible director
Fraud/crimes pertaining to insolvency	Liability is allocated to directors who actually commit the crime or who have been completely aware of the crime
Liability arising from causing insolvency proceedings	Joint liability
Breach of agreement	Joint liability
Piercing of corporate veil	Joint liability Liability of shareholders as well
Breach of the capital maintenance rules	Joint liability; at least negligence of each director required
Liability vis-à-vis tax authorities	Liability is allocated to directors who actually fail to transfer the taxes provided that: (i) the allocation of duties was to be made in written form and was to be clear cut; (ii) the responsible director is reliable; and (iii) the other directors properly supervised the responsible director

2.5 Defences

2.5.1 Transactions to the benefit of the company

Defences regarding any reasonable belief of a director that a transaction is to the benefit of the company are only available if the statutes establishing the liability have a subjective element. This applies to some statutes in the Insolvency Act governing the voidability of transactions (see below). Furthermore, that belief might exclude the assumption of intentional behaviour as required in the Criminal Code. As far as statutes intend to protect specific counter-parties, i.e. as public authorities or creditors dealing with an already illiquid company, that defence is not available.

2.5.2 No default in case of qualified external consulting

According to recent case law, a director will not be liable for payments made after the illiquidity of the company where there has been qualified external consulting. This means, if the director consulted an external expert, informed him about all the circumstances relevant to the evaluation and did not petition for the commencement of insolvency proceedings in accordance with the expert's evaluation and his own validity check, that he cannot be held liable.

2.5.3 Actual involvement

As set out above, directors, irrespective of their actual involvement in financial matters and their sphere of responsibilities, must be generally aware of the company's current financial situation at all times. The German Federal Court has held that the defence of lack of knowledge of the company's insolvency situation will only be available if such lack of knowledge is not caused by the directors' negligence in exercising their observational duties and instituting financial control systems.

2.5.4 Return to solvency

The financial crisis of any distressed company need not be permanent but may be temporary. Any duties and responsibilities are related to an insolvency situation so that solvency at the time of the transaction cannot result in a liability of directors unless impending illiquidity had to be assumed. Generally, solvency after the transaction does not remedy the breach of duties. In the event of a sustainable financial recovery, enabling the company to fully satisfy any claims of creditors, it is unlikely that any criminal prosecution or civil actions based on a past insolvency situation would be commenced. One exemption is with respect to the breach of capital maintenance rules. The German Federal Court recently held that a return to solvency will not cure the breach and any liability. Similarly, criminal proceedings may even be initiated in the event that creditors did not actually suffer any losses because most of the crimes pertaining to insolvency will be regarded as "abstract strict-liability torts".

QUESTION 3

3. Other persons involved with the company's affairs that may become liable in respect of their actions during the "twilight" period

- (a) In addition to the formally appointed directors of the company, can others be held liable in respect of the company's activities during the "twilight" period if the company were to become subject to a formal insolvency procedure?
- (b) In respect of which acts may other persons be held liable and to what extent does the liability of third parties differ from that for directors identified under question 2 above?

- (c) Will liability be limited to that resulting from involvement with a particular transaction or more generally in relation to the overall loss suffered by creditors?

3.1 Civil and criminal liability of accomplices and participants

As a general rule, the liability of other persons involved with distressed companies can be based upon breaches of statutes of German law as set out above if they were accomplices to or participants in the breach. German civil law imposes a joint and several liability on persons who are jointly liable for damages irrespective of their degree of involvement while German criminal law allows reducing the punishment of an aider and abettor. In addition German civil law provides for a joint and several liability even if it cannot be discovered which of several participants has caused the damage through his action. This leads to a shift of the burden of proof to the persons who have caused the damage.

3.2 Other parties liable for the management of distressed companies

3.2.1 De facto directors

The position of a director is clearly defined in German corporate law setting forth that directors are individuals who were appointed by a shareholders' resolution (in the case of a company with limited liability) or a supervisory board resolution (in the case of a stock corporation). Although it is only of a declaratory nature, the directors are required to file their appointment with the commercial register of the competent local court. De facto directors may, however, actually govern and control the management of the company and, therefore, may be deemed to be acting in a directorial capacity. The German Federal Court is not inclined to regard any person (partially) involved in the management of the company as a de facto director given that the company will still be managed by the duly appointed and registered director. Moreover, not even management to the same extent and degree as exercised by the registered director would constitute a de facto directorship.

To establish liability as a de facto director (i) the de facto director must be regarded as having conducted the business of the company decisively (ii) with his own actions vis-à-vis the outside world/third parties.

3.2.2 Former directors

Directors' liability is based on conduct exercised during the period of their directorship, so that even former directors may face liabilities regarding their directorship. The German Insolvency Code also provides that former directors who have resigned or otherwise left the position of a director not earlier than two years prior to the commencement of insolvency proceedings, owe the same duties of information and co-operation towards the insolvency administrator as persons who are still directors at the time of the insolvency proceedings.

3.2.3 Supervisory board members

In addition to the Management Board members, Supervisory Board members frequently conduct the company's affairs during the "twilight" period.

"Dominating" Supervisory Board members who tend to have a material influence on the company management, e.g. by way of exercising typical management duties, run the risk of being treated as de facto directors according to the principles set out above.

Furthermore, Supervisory Board members may face liability vis-à-vis the company if they fail to exercise the due care of a prudent businessman during the "twilight" period. Supervisory Board members may also be liable for any delay in petitioning for the commencement of insolvency proceedings. In this respect, the following will be regarded as a breach of duties:

- non-compliance with the more stringent supervising requirements in the event of a financial crisis of a GmbH;
- failure to seek advice by independent experts;
- failure to instruct and to urge the managing directors to petition for the commencement of insolvency proceedings in the event of an insolvency situation.

3.2.4 Creditors / financing banks

Two key issues continually arise when considering unconnected third party risks providing additional credit during the "twilight" period. First, how safe is it for an unconnected third party in terms of criminal liability to encourage directors to continue with the business despite an insolvency situation by way of providing further (short-term) credit, thereby enabling the directors to meet the most urgent payment duties? Second, can an unconnected third party rely on security granted by the distressed company in order to secure loans granted during the "twilight" period?

There is controversial discussion as to whether or not the granting of loans at a time when the company is likely to become subject to a formal insolvency proceedings might encourage directors not to comply with their duty to petition for the commencement of insolvency proceedings. This might be regarded as participation by the lender in the crime of delaying the petition for bankruptcy proceedings committed by the directors. Therefore the lender has to act with the intention of improving his position to the disadvantage of third-party creditors of the distressed company. Such intention to harm third-party creditors will be presumed in any case where the lender thinks that damage to the other creditors is possible and accepts the possibility of such damage. If the lender fails to properly verify the viability of the distressed company's restructuring plans (or disregards serious doubts about such restructuring plans), the intent (dolus eventualis) to damage creditors may be presumed.

With respect to the civil liability of the lender, it has to be evaluated whether the granting of a loan secured by the transfer of assets of the distressed company to the lender finally resulted in a deterioration of the assets of the distressed company compared to the assets available in the insolvency estate in the event that a petition for the commencement of insolvency proceedings would have been filed at the time of granting the loan.

The voidability of a transfer of assets of the distressed company for security purposes will also be discussed in connection with lending strategies of banks. In particular, in the event of so-called bulk securities, such as the assignment of trade receivables of the distressed company, it might be more reasonable from the commercial perspective of the lender to grant further loans or prolong existing loans in order to enhance the value of the assigned trade receivables rather than to cease funding the borrower, which would result in a deterioration of assigned trade receivables because of counter-claims filed by the customers due to the impact of the commencement of insolvency proceedings and the termination of the business of the distressed company.

Thus the granting of a loan to a distressed company is connected with several risks to third parties. In order to minimise these risks the third party needs to furnish proof that the company is expected to be able to overcome the crisis with its help before granting a restructuring credit (Sanierungskredit). Therefore, the prospects of a successful restructuring need to be examined carefully. One way of providing the necessary proof is by obtaining independent third-party advice in this respect. As a result of various decided cases, market practice has developed whereby the debtor's plans are reviewed for the lenders by an independent third party in a so-called restructuring opinion. However, the lenders themselves must be convinced as to the validity of the restructuring plan.

Furthermore, the basis of the decision to lend will be a restructuring plan (Sanierungsplan) prepared by the management of the debtor which reflects the reasons for the existing crisis and the measures to be implemented to overcome the crisis. In particular, an audit of the restructuring plan has to reach the conclusion that there is a going concern, i.e. a positive continuation prognosis (positive Fortführungsprognose) for the company's business at least up to the end of the following fiscal year. This restructuring plan should be reviewed by an independent expert as to its plausibility (also as regards the assumptions made by the management of the debtor in the restructuring plan). Following that review, the expert should confirm in the restructuring report to the lenders that there is a going concern forecast, that is, a positive continuation forecast for the debtor's business at least up to the end of the following fiscal year. In particular, the experts should express the opinion that the financial position of the distressed company is, on the balance of probabilities, likely to be strong enough for the distressed company to continue its business as a going concern up to the end of the following fiscal year.

Accordingly, if lenders fail to properly observe these criteria they could be held liable under the deepening insolvency doctrine.

If lenders are held liable under the concept of deepening insolvency their loan facility, insofar as it is related to new money, would be held invalid as a matter of German law. Further, the new money lenders could be held liable by any new creditors of the debtor for the full amount of the loss suffered by those creditors in the insolvency. The new lenders could also be held liable by any old creditors but only to the extent that the payout that such creditors receive in the insolvency is less than it would have been if the debtor had filed for insolvency at the time the second lien lenders provided the funding.

Furthermore, there are instances where short-term liquidity needs arise and no final restructuring plan and/or report is yet available. In that case, there can be a short extension of facilities or a granting of new money in order to avoid an illiquidity of the debtor during the time required for the plan and/or report to be formulated and finalised. New loans granted during such period which bridge the liquidity situation until the finalisation of the restructuring plan/report will not be regarded as delaying the insolvency.

So far, such granting or prolongation of loans to distressed companies in the “twilight” period have not been subject to criminal prosecution, but rather subject to an action to set aside by the insolvency administrator, those assets transferred by the distressed company to the lender in order to secure the loan. The granting of security during the “twilight” period by a distressed company to a lender might be set aside subsequently by the insolvency administrator because the lender had “no right to claim security in such manner or at such time” (so-called “incongruent correspondence”). The time period in which the transaction has to be effected prior to the petition for insolvency proceedings will be extended in the event that the creditor had knowledge at the time the security was granted that it was detrimental to the insolvency creditors. Generally, granting of security in proximity to the subsequent petition for insolvency proceedings implies an action to the detriment of the insolvency creditors, unless the granting of security is part of a reorganisation plan involving such creditor. However, if security will be granted in consideration for “fresh money” by the bank, such action is generally not to the detriment of the creditors and, therefore, cannot subsequently be set aside by an insolvency administrator.

QUESTION 4

4. Counterparties dealing with the company during the “twilight” period

- (a) From the point of view of a counterparty dealing with the company during the “twilight” period, what are the potential heads of challenge which may lead to transactions with the company being set aside?
- (b) What defences, if any, to the areas of vulnerability identified above will be available to a counter-party seeking to protect a transaction from being attacked?

4.1 Transactions potentially subject to an action to set aside

4.1.1 General rule / heads of challenge

Transactions to the detriment of creditors effected prior to the commencement of insolvency proceedings might be subject to an action to set aside. Transactions will be deemed as detrimental if either the liabilities of the debtor in insolvency proceedings have been increased or the assets available in the insolvency estate have been reduced.

The legal term “transactions” encompasses all acts which either gave or made it possible for a counterparty dealing with the distressed company to receive security or satisfaction. The German Insolvency Code distinguishes between:

- (i) congruent correspondence;
- (ii) incongruent correspondence;
- (iii) directly detrimental transactions;
- (iv) intentionally harmful actions;
- (v) performance without consideration; and
- (vi) redemption of loans in lieu of capital contributions

as potential heads of challenge. For each transaction, a different time limit in respect of voidability is applicable. The time limits cover transactions which are effected in the month prior to the petition for commencement, as well as transactions which are effected after such petition (in the event of merely incongruent correspondence) up to transactions effected ten years prior to the petition for commencement (in the event of intentionally harmful actions).

From the point of view of a counter-party dealing with the company during the “twilight” period, it is decisive whether:

- (i) the counterparty had knowledge of the illiquidity of the company at the time of the transaction;
- (ii) the creditor had knowledge of the petition for commencement of insolvency proceedings at the time of the transaction;
- (iii) the creditor had equivalent knowledge of circumstances which compel the conclusion with respect to the illiquidity or the petition for commencement of insolvency proceedings;
- (iv) the counterparties are persons related to the distressed company and, therefore, will be deemed as having such knowledge;
- (v) the counterparty had knowledge of circumstances which compel the conclusion that the transaction was detrimental to the insolvency creditors;
- (vi) the counterparty had knowledge of the intent of the distressed company to harm its creditors (such knowledge will be presumed if the counterparty had knowledge of an impending illiquidity and of the fact that the transaction was harmful to creditors); and
- (vii) the counterparty received any performance without payment or any other consideration.

4.1.2 Voidability of transactions outside of insolvency proceedings

Any of the creditor protection measures outlined above are applicable even if formal insolvency proceedings are not commenced following the “twilight” period. Such voidability of transactions is governed in separate statutes (that is, the Avoidance Act (Anfechtungsgesetz)). Any claim must be filed by a creditor and not by an insolvency administrator. If execution against the assets of the debtor will not result in complete satisfaction of the creditor, or it has to be assumed that any execution will not be successful, the creditor is entitled to file an action to set aside. Certainly, the time period in which an action might be attacked cannot refer to the petition for the commencement of insolvency proceedings. Therefore, whether the transaction has to be exercised by a creditor with the competent court within a specific time period prior to the filing of an action to set aside is decisive.

4.2 Defences

4.2.1 Benefit to the company ensuing from the transaction

A defence, such as the assumption of the parties that the transaction would be to the benefit of the company, is only permissible if the transaction was also of benefit to the company’s creditors. In determining whether or not any transaction was to the benefit of creditors, only the assets of the insolvency estate available for distribution to creditors will be considered. If any transaction entered into during the “twilight” period resulted in the granting of security of satisfaction to a creditor who could not claim security or satisfaction at that time (since he was merely an ordinary or even subordinated creditor), the transaction will not be regarded as of benefit to creditors in subsequent insolvency proceedings.

4.2.2 Lack of knowledge of the company’s insolvency position

As far as any transaction requires:

- (i) knowledge of the illiquidity situation; or
- (ii) knowledge of any circumstances that compel the conclusion as to the illiquidity situation; or
- (iii) that the creditor had knowledge that the transaction was detrimental to the insolvency creditors, or knew of circumstances that compel the conclusion in this respect

Any lack of knowledge of the financial situation of the company by the creditor has to be regarded as a permissible defence.

4.2.3 Solvency of the company at the time of or after the transaction

Since any action entered into prior to the commencement of insolvency proceedings might be subject to an action to satisfy, the German Insolvency Code does not refer to an insolvency situation at the time of or after the transaction, but refers to a specific time period which leads to the conclusion that the company is in the "twilight" period, irrespective of whether or not the company was solvent at the time the transaction was entered into.

4.2.4 Other defences

Transactions by the debtor with the intent of harming its creditors entered into within 10 years prior to the petition for the commencement of insolvency proceedings can be attacked. Therefore, a lack of intent to prefer a creditor has to be regarded as a permissible defence in this respect. However, since the German Insolvency Code does not require any intent to prefer creditors with respect to the remaining potential heads of challenge, but rather considers mere knowledge of the illiquidity situation of a company by the creditor who benefits from the transaction as sufficient, the defence of a lack of intent to prefer is limited.

QUESTION 5

5. Enforcement

By whom may action be brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3 above)?

5.1 Creditors / shareholders / public authorities / other third parties

Civil actions against directors will generally be brought by parties suffering damage due to a breach of duties irrespective of whether they are suppliers, lenders, shareholders or third parties dealing with the company. In addition, tax authorities and social security authorities may file claims arising from the failure of the directors to transfer taxes and social security contributions.

Shareholders liable to make contributions to the insolvency estate cannot reasonably claim compensation from the directors since their civil liability is normally based upon (i) a breach of the capital maintenance rules by way of a prohibited redemption of contributions, or (ii) a misuse of managerial power in favour of the controlling shareholder. Consequently, shareholders are only liable in the amount of the received payments to which they were not entitled.

5.2 Insolvency administrator as office holder for the insolvency estate

5.2.1 Joint damages of creditors

Upon the commencement of formal insolvency proceedings, the German Insolvency Code states that claims for damages by creditors who have suffered jointly and severally as a result of a reduction in the insolvency estate (joint damages) may be submitted only by the insolvency administrator during the insolvency proceedings. As outlined above (see 2.1.2.2 above), in the event of a delay in the presentation of the petition for commencement of insolvency proceedings, such joint damages will be suffered by the so-called "old creditors" since the diminution in the insolvency estate will lead to a reduction in the pro rata distribution of the assets of the insolvency estate. In contrast, the so-called "new creditors" do not suffer joint damages due to a reduction of the insolvency estate, but have claims to the negative interest resulting from the respective agreement. Consequently, according to prevailing opinions in legal literature, such individual damages have to be assessed according to the respective agreement and, therefore, can only be claimed by the respective creditor.

5.2.2 Enforcement of claims by the insolvency administrator

Upon the commencement of the insolvency proceedings, only the appointed insolvency administrator is entitled to represent and act on behalf of the company. Therefore, claims of the company, whether or not they already existed at the time of the commencement of the insolvency proceedings (even before the start of the "twilight" period), or those which arise following the commencement of the insolvency proceedings in the course of the continuation of the company's business, can only be enforced by the insolvency administrator. Further, only the insolvency administrator is entitled to void transactions by an action to set aside, claiming the return of anything that was transferred or disposed of in other ways from the assets of the company by means of a voidable transaction to the company. Since a German corporation (like a company with limited liability or a stock corporation) will be dissolved upon the commencement of insolvency proceedings (unless the shareholders resolve to continue the company following a successful implementation of a reorganisation plan), the insolvency administrator will not be regarded as an office holder for the company, but will represent the insolvency estate comprising the assets belonging to the company at the time of the commencement of the proceedings as well as those acquired during the course of the insolvency proceedings.

QUESTION 6

6. Remedies: orders available to the domestic court

In respect of the offences identified in questions 2, 3 and 4 above, what remedies are available in the domestic court?

6.1 Introduction

A German civil court will order directors to pay compensation to the party who suffered the damage while a German criminal court will sentence the directors to imprisonment or fines in accordance with the level of personal guilt. As to civil liability, compensation might be claimed either by the company (i.e. the insolvency estate represented by the insolvency administrator as office holder (see above)), or by a creditor, shareholder, public authority or any third party dealing with the company. Transactions which are successfully challenged by the insolvency administrator will result in a court order to return the assets to the insolvency estate. Since the German Insolvency Code provides for a detailed ranking of pre-petition claims and administrative claims, an order postponing debt owed by a company to that of other debts is not required.

6.2 Overview

Actions giving rise to liability	Legal consequences / orders available to the court
Duty to convene a shareholders' meeting	Compensation payable by directors to the company (civil liability) Up to 3 years' imprisonment or fine
Duty to petition for the commencement of insolvency proceedings	Compensation payable to "new creditors" or to the insolvency administrator (joint damage) Up to 3 years' imprisonment or fine
Liability vis-à-vis social security authorities	Compensation payable to authorities Up to 5 years' imprisonment or fine
Fraudulent trading /crimes pertaining to insolvency	Compensation payable to crime victims Up to 5 years' imprisonment or fine Disqualification from acting as director for 5 years
Liability arising from the causation of insolvency proceedings	Compensation payable to company
Breach of agreement providing security	Compensation payable to creditor who was to be secured
Group liability / Piercing the corporate veil	Compensation payable to company
Breach of the capital maintenance rules	Compensation payable to company
Liability vis-à-vis tax authorities	Compensation payable to authorities

QUESTION 7

7. Duty to co-operate

To what extent are directors (and others identified in question 3 above) obliged to co-operate with an investigation into the company's affairs following its insolvency?

The German Insolvency Code imposes extensive duties of information and co-operation on the debtor company in favour of the insolvency administrator. If the debtor is a corporation, the duties apply to all members of the executive or supervisory boards. Additionally, other parties involved in the insolvency proceedings, such as creditors in possession of security or other parties to whom assets of the debtor were transferred by way of an potential voidable transaction, can be compelled to co-operate with the insolvency administrator.

Any resignation of directors coincidental with the commencement of insolvency proceedings will not result in a discharge of these duties to the insolvency court, the insolvency administrator or the creditors' committee. Information and co-operation duties apply to any relevant person who left not earlier than two years prior to the commencement of the insolvency proceedings.

As to the level of co-operation, the German Insolvency Code states that the directors shall assist the insolvency administrator in the performance of his duties and shall make themselves available at the order of the court for this purpose. Any duty may be enforced by the insolvency court, ordering any director to make an affidavit to the effect that the information provided is correct and complete. Finally, the court may force the debtor to appear and could take any director into custody if he refuses to comply with his information and co-operation duties.

The German Insolvency Code does not recognise the defence of privilege against self-incrimination with regard to the aforementioned information and co-operation duties. Directors are obliged to disclose facts even if they are likely to result in criminal prosecution or administrative judicial remedies. However, the use of any such information in criminal proceedings requires the consent of the director.

QUESTION 8

8. Appeals and limitation periods

- (a) What limitation period, if any, will apply to actions brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3) in connection with the offences identified in question 2?
 - (b) Please indicate whether an appeal is available from the decision of the lower courts.

8.1 Limitation periods

Actions giving rise to liability	Limitation periods
	a) Limitations on prosecution b) Limitations on enforcement of claims
Duty to convene a shareholders' meeting	a) 5 years from when the crime is committed b) 5 years from the origination of the claim (does not depend on the shareholders' knowledge)
Duty to petition for the commencement of insolvency proceedings	a) 5 years from when the duty of directors to petition for insolvency proceedings ceased to exist (e.g. if over-indebtedness has been removed) b) claims of the company: 5 years from the origination of the claim (does not depend on the shareholders' knowledge) claims of creditors: 3 years from when the injured party has knowledge of injury 5 years with respect to claims to reimbursement of advance payments made in order to cover costs of proceedings
Liability vis-à-vis social security authorities	a) 5 years from when the liability to contribution ceased to exist b) 3 years from when the injured party has knowledge of injury
Fraud /crimes pertaining to insolvency	a) 5 years from when the duty of directors to petition for insolvency proceedings ceased to exist (example given if over-indebtedness has been removed) b) 3 years from when the injured party has knowledge of injury, unless contractual limitations statutes provide for a longer period
Liability arising from the causation of insolvency proceedings	b) directors and shareholders: 3 years from when the injured party has knowledge of injury, unless contractual limitations statutes provide for a longer period (civil liability) directors: according to MoMiG 5 years from the origination of the claim (does not depend on the shareholders' knowledge)
Breach of agreement	b) 3 years, unless special limitation periods apply

Piercing the corporate veil	b) 3 years from the origination of the claim and the obligee's awareness of circumstances giving rise to the claim and the identity of the obligor
Breach of the capital maintenance rules	b) 5 years from the time of the breach
Liability vis-à-vis tax authorities	b) 4 years regarding tax assessment
Disqualification of directors	Disqualified as managing director for 5 years following the time when sentence became final, unless court ruling imposing disqualification provides for a longer time period

8.2 Appeals

Generally, any decision of the first instance court in penal or civil proceedings may be subject to appeal unless the civil court of first instance orders compensation which does not exceed €600.

As outlined above, any disqualification of directors resulting from a sentence or side sanctions ordered by a criminal court may be appealed against.

QUESTION 9

9. Foreign corporations

Do the legal provisions and procedures outlined above apply to both domestic and foreign corporations?

Any legal provisions and procedures outlined above apply to domestic corporations which do not have a personally liable shareholder or partner. With respect to liabilities vis-à-vis public authorities and liabilities arising from any crimes pertaining to insolvency and any breach of agreements, the aforementioned legal provisions apply irrespective of the legal form and legal seat as long as the business transactions of the company are conducted in Germany.

QUESTION 10

10. Insurance

10.1 Coverage available

Directors' and officers' insurance covering the exposure of directors of German corporations is emerging in the German insurance market. It has been introduced by US and British insurance companies which have substantial experience in their respective foreign markets motivated by an urgent need of directors to protect themselves against personal liability which may arise in connection with the aforementioned actions. This has been further encouraged by a more robust attitude on the part of insolvency creditors seeking to recover their losses from directors. It is expected that the German courts will strengthen their demands as to compliance by directors with their duties, namely their duty to petition for the commencement of insolvency proceedings and to be aware of the financial situation of the company. On the other hand, premature petitioning is not advisable because this could be regarded as a general breach of the managing duties of directors and, therefore, could lead to compensation claims by the company.

Following the approach of probably all German insurance companies, the coverage of risk does not include intentional or "consciously" negligent misconduct of directors.

Furthermore, according to common practice in the US, insurance companies used by company directors or executive staff tend to exclude protection against internal liability vis-à-vis the company. Such exclusion of internal liability is historically based on the risk of so-called shareholder derivative lawsuits, (that is, shareholders claiming compensation on behalf of the company from their directors). Despite the fact that such lawsuits are generally not recognised in Germany, insurance companies fear potential abuse of such coverage which could enable the directors to act collusively with the shareholders in order to enrich the assets of the company. However, the exclusion of the exposure arising from internal liability is not a satisfactory solution for directors from a practical perspective because various cases of civil liability have resulted in a duty to compensate the company and not the outstanding creditors.

In summary, protection is only available with respect to claims of outstanding creditors arising from a mere negligent breach of duties. However, even this protection may prove not to be effective bearing in mind that, in practice, the dividing line between "mere" negligence on the one hand, and "conscious" negligence or "contingent" intention on the other, is difficult to determine.

Directors may already act in a “consciously” negligent way if they consider the existence of a financial crisis as “probable”. As far as insolvency-related crimes resulting in civil liability are concerned, criteria and procedure determining illiquidity and over-indebtedness are complex, so that the misconduct of directors in this respect is “slightly” negligent rather than “consciously” negligent or intentional. The failure to transfer deducted taxes or social contributions will be regarded as intentional or “consciously” negligent conduct if the director is completely aware of the circumstances constituting his duty as well as of the duty itself.

10.2 Claims to reimbursement or indemnification

In addition to insurance protection, indemnification for third party claims or company claims against the directors might be considered as an option.

Certainly, directors are entitled to reimbursement or indemnification by the company to the extent that the compensation claimed against the directors was payable out of the assets of the company, such as wage taxes or social security contributions.

The German Federal Court has held that a company with limited liability may indemnify directors of a company with limited liability with respect to claims of third parties arising from the implementation of instructions of shareholders urging directors to breach their duties. Apart from this, general indemnification by the company on a contractual basis is only permissible if it does not endanger claims of outstanding creditors. This principle is applicable with respect to third party claims as well as to claims of the company against its directors.

Due to their punitive character, directors cannot recover any fines imposed in the course of criminal prosecution.

QUESTION 11

11. How safe is it for directors and others to incur further credit during the “twilight” period?

11.1 Directors incurring further credit

Continued demand for funds in the “twilight” period, in particular fresh money to avoid illiquidity and/or over-indebtedness, may compel directors to seek further funding either by shareholders or third parties, i.e. lenders or suppliers.

As mentioned above, directors will commit a fraud and become personally liable vis-à-vis third parties in the event that they incur further credit by way of encouraging lenders or suppliers to grant additional loans or to supply goods without the directors having any prospect of being able to repay the loans or pay for the goods. Moreover, directors exploiting their own personal trust rather than acting as representatives of the distressed company when incurring further credit may become personally liable in the event that the security provided cannot be successfully realised by the creditor due to an action to set aside or for practical reasons.

11.2 Counter-party risks

Shareholders providing loans at a time when a prudent businessman would have made contributions into the company's equity capital instead granting a loan can only claim redemption of the loan in insolvency proceedings as so-called subordinate insolvency creditors, i.e. following the complete satisfaction of the ordinary non-subordinated insolvency creditors. The aforementioned financial situation of a distressed company will be deemed to exist once the company is no longer capable of incurring further credits which accrue interest in accordance with market prices. Alternatively, loans will be regarded as replacing equity in the event that any other unconnected third party acting as a reasonable creditor would decline to grant loans on the same terms as the shareholder actually did. Any redemption of loans granted in lieu of equity might be set aside by the insolvency administrator if the redemption was effected in the year prior to the petition for the commencement of insolvency proceedings or following such petition. Security provided for the redemption of a loan in lieu of capital might even be set aside if it was effected in the 10 years prior to the petition for the commencement of insolvency proceedings or following such petition.

As outlined above, the lending strategies of banks are the subject of a controversial discussion with respect to the voidability of a transfer of assets by the distressed company serving as security for loans granted by lenders in the "twilight" period.

HONG KONG

QUESTION 1

1. The start and duration of the “twilight” period

1.1 Overview

- 1.1.1 Notwithstanding Hong Kong's return to Chinese sovereignty in 1997, Hong Kong remains a common law jurisdiction and the law relating to corporations is largely based on the law of England prior to the implementation of the recommendations of the Cork Report. As in England, when considering whether a transaction may be vulnerable to attack or might result in personal liability, a key question is whether the company was insolvent either at the time of, or as a result of, the transaction. The twilight period effectively runs for the duration of the company's insolvency until the commencement of liquidation (presentation of a winding-up petition in the case of compulsory liquidation and the passing of the resolution to wind up in the case of voluntary liquidation).¹

A company is insolvent when it is unable to pay its debts. There are two main tests used to establish whether a company is able to pay its debts.² They are:

- (a) the “cash-flow” test - a company is insolvent when it is unable to pay its debts when they fall due; and
 - (b) the “balance sheet” test - a company is insolvent when its assets are insufficient to meet its liabilities.
- 1.1.2 The obligations of the directors of a company change fundamentally once a company is insolvent. In normal circumstances where a company is solvent, directors owe their duties to the company, that is, to its present and future members, who are entitled to ratify any breaches of duty by the directors. Where a company is insolvent however, it is the creditors rather than the members which are likely to suffer as a result of such breaches. Accordingly, where the directors of an insolvent company exercise their duties they must have regard primarily to the interests of the creditors and must exercise their powers with a view to minimising the potential loss to creditors.

1.2 Vulnerability periods

- 1.2.1 The various clawback periods under Hong Kong law, being periods terminating at the commencement of liquidation, are:

¹ Section 184 Companies Ordinance (Cap 32).

² The tests to establish insolvency or inability to pay debts are derived from case law. There is no definition of ‘inability to pay debts’ or of ‘insolvency’ in the Companies Ordinance.

- (a) unfair preferences - 6 months (2 years for associates) (sections 266 and 266B Companies Ordinance (Cap 32)) (CO);
- (b) floating charges - 12 months (section 267 CO);
- (c) extortionate credit transactions - 3 years (section 264B CO);
- (d) disposition after presentation of petition - from date of presentation (section 182 CO); and
- (e) fraudulent conveyances - no time limit (section 60 Conveyancing and Property Ordinance).

Under the current law, transactions at an undervalue are only vulnerable in personal bankruptcy.

QUESTION 2

2. Actions potentially giving rise to liability for directors

- (a) In respect of which acts during the "twilight" period may a director be held personally liable or which may otherwise have adverse consequences for him?
- (b) In relation to each act identified in (a) above:
 - (i) is any resulting liability against a director civil, criminal or both;
 - (ii) can a director be made personally liable in respect of the whole loss caused to the company or the deficit to creditors;
 - (iii) will liability attach to individual directors in proportion to their specific involvement;
 - (iv) is there a specified period before commencement of a subsequent insolvency procedure within which the relevant act must have been undertaken in order for liability to attach to a director; and
 - (v) what defences, if any, will be available in relation to each offence?

2.1 Introduction

- 2.1.1 Hong Kong law provides a fairly wide range of acts for which a director may be held personally liable during the “twilight period” although there is no equivalent to the English law provision for wrongful trading. In 1996 the Law Reform Commission of Hong Kong proposed an ‘insolvent trading’ provision (based on wrongful trading under English law³ and insolvent trading under Australian law⁴) based on the recommendations of the Cork Report. The draft provisions were incorporated in the Companies (Corporate Rescue) Bill which was brought before the Legislative Council in 2001. Various provisions in the Bill became the subject of criticism by relevant professional bodies and the Bill was subsequently referred to a Bills Committee. The Bill was not brought back to the Legislative Council and lapsed in July 2004.
- 2.1.2 Proceedings against directors (and other persons who may be caught by these provisions) based on the statutory provisions described in 2.2 to 2.7 below are uncommon, with the exception of proceedings against officers for failing to keep proper accounts.⁵

2.2 Fraudulent trading⁶

- (a) Although Hong Kong does not yet have ‘wrongful’ or ‘insolvent’ trading legislation, directors can become liable for fraudulent trading. As is the case under English law,⁷ actual dishonesty is an essential element to establish liability for fraudulent trading under Hong Kong law. As is the case in other jurisdictions with provisions similar to section 275 CO, it is rare for persons to be found liable for fraudulent trading due to the difficulty of proving dishonesty.⁸

Liability for fraudulent trading is incurred if it can be shown in the course of the winding-up of a company that ‘any business of the company has been carried on with the intent to defraud creditors of the company or creditors of any other person or for any fraudulent purpose’. The elements of this provision are:

- (i) the company must be in an insolvent liquidation for civil liability to be incurred (section 275(1) CO) whereas criminal liability may be incurred irrespective of whether the company is in an insolvent liquidation or not (section 275(3) CO);
- (ii) there must be actual intention to defraud creditors or to achieve a particular fraudulent purpose whilst running the business⁹ or recklessness as to whether the carrying on of the business would result in the creditors being defrauded;

⁵ According to the Official Receiver’s Annual Report for 2001-2, the only offence from all those listed in 2.2-2.6 below in respect of which proceedings were commenced was section 274 CO (officers for failing to keep proper accounts) (see 2.5 below).

⁹ This includes a single act and it need not be established that a series of acts were conducted.

- (iii) the standard of proof for civil liability is the balance of probabilities (i.e. the civil standard of proof)¹⁰ whereas for criminal liability proof 'beyond reasonable doubt' is required; and
 - (iv) any 'knowing party' to the dishonest manner in which the business is being run may incur liability, which may therefore extend beyond any director, shadow director or officeholder (potentially to a financier who funded a fraudulent trade knowing it was being done dishonestly).¹¹
- (b) (i) Liability may be civil and/or criminal depending on whether the company is in an insolvent liquidation (see 2.2(a)(i) above).
- (ii) Any damages award is to compensate the company for any loss caused and is not intended as a punitive measure. The court has a wide discretion in this regard to the extent that a 'knowing party' may be held liable for all loss caused.
- (iii) Although the court has a wide discretion, it will exercise that discretion with regard to proportionality.
- (iv) There is no specific period before commencement of the insolvent liquidation during which the dishonest act must have been committed either in relation to civil or criminal liability being incurred.
- (v) The main defence is absence of dishonesty. A person who is alleged to have committed this offence need only show an honest belief that there was a reasonable prospect that the company would be able to pay the debts which it incurred to avoid liability. It is immaterial that objectively the director would be considered imprudent or incompetent in holding such a view.

2.3 Fraud by officers of companies which have gone into liquidation¹²

- (a) It is an offence for an officer¹³ of a company:
- (i) to make or cause to be made any gift, or transfer of or charge on or to have caused or connived in the levying of any execution against the property of the company with the intent to defraud creditors; or
 - (ii) to have concealed or removed any part of the property of the company since, or within two months before, the date of any unsatisfied judgement or order for payment of money obtained against the company.
- (b) (i) Liability under this provision is criminal.
- (ii) A person guilty of this offence is liable to imprisonment and a fine.

¹⁰ Aktieselskab Danmark Skibsfinansiering v Wheelock Marden and Co Ltd [2000] HKCFA 31.

¹¹ See 2.2 a (iv) of the England Chapter: Re Bank of Credit and Commerce International SA (No.2), Banque Arabe et Internationale D'Investissement SA v Morris [2000] All ER (D) 1437.

¹³ Officer includes the directors, managers and secretary of the company (see 3.3 below).

- (iii) The court determines the length of the term of imprisonment and/or the amount of the fine according to the gravity of the wrongdoing as a punitive measure, not as a means of compensating the company.
- (iv) The relevant act may be committed:
 - (A) in respect of (a)(i) above, any time before the commencement of the insolvent liquidation; and
 - (B) in respect of (a)(ii) above, any time after the date of any unsatisfied judgment or order for payment of money obtained against the company or within two months prior to such judgement or order.¹⁴
- (v) The main defence is absence of intent to defraud creditors.¹⁵

2.4 Offences by officers of companies in liquidation¹⁶

*Fraud in anticipation of winding-up*¹⁷

- (a) It is an offence for any officer¹⁸ or shadow director¹⁹ of a company, whether past or present to:
 - (i) conceal any part of the property of the company to the value of HK$100 or upwards, or conceal any debt due to or from the company;
 - (ii) fraudulently remove any part of the property of the company to the value of HK$100 or upwards; or
 - (iii) pawn, pledge or dispose of any property of the company which has been obtained on credit and has not been paid for, unless such pawning, pledging or disposing is in the ordinary course of the business of the company.
- (b) (i) Liability for each of the above offences is criminal.
- (ii) A person guilty of offences (a)(i) and (ii) above is liable to both imprisonment and a fine whereas liability for offence (a)(iii) above is limited to imprisonment.
- (iii) The court determines the length of the term of imprisonment and/or the amount of the fine according to the gravity of the wrongdoing as

¹⁴ There is no specific time limit in the equivalent English law provision for the second limb of this offence (see footnote 15 below).

¹⁸ Officer includes the directors, managers and secretary of the company (see 3.3 below).

¹⁹ A shadow director is a person in accordance with whose directions or instructions the directors or a majority of the directors of the company are accustomed to act (see 3.2.5 below).

a punitive measure, not as a means of compensating the company.

(iv) The relevant act may be committed:

(A) within 12 months before the commencement of the winding-up of the company; or

(B) any time after the commencement of winding-up.

(v) Possible defences are:

(C) for offences (a)(i) and (iii), absence of intent to defraud;²⁰ and

(D) for offences (a)(i), (ii) and (iii), any officer may be excused by the court if shown that he has acted honestly and reasonably and having regard to all the circumstances of the case he ought fairly to be excused.²¹

*Misconduct in the course of winding-up*²²

(c) It is an offence for any officer²³ or a shadow director²⁴ of the company, whether past or present:

(i) not, to the best of his knowledge and belief, to fully and truly disclose to the liquidator all the property, real and personal, of the company and how, to whom, for what consideration and when the company disposed of any such property (except any disposals in the ordinary course of its business);

(ii) not to deliver up to the liquidator any real and personal property of the company in his custody or control (including any books and papers of the company);

(iii) in the knowledge or belief that a false debt has been proved by any person, to fail to inform the liquidator within one month;

(iv) to prevent the production of any book or paper affecting or relating to the property or affairs of the company after commencement of the winding-up;

(v) to make any material omission in any statement relating to the affairs of the company; and

(vi) to attempt to account for any part of the company's property by fictitious losses or expenses.

²⁰ The burden of proof under the equivalent English law provision is on the defendant, not the prosecution, as the accused is deemed to have committed the offence in the event of the particular circumstances unless the defendant can prove an absence of intent to defraud creditors. In 1998, the Law Reform Commission recommended that this provision be amended to shift the burden of proof to the defendant but there is no indication that any such amendment will be made.

²³ Officer includes the directors, managers and secretary of the company (see 3.3 below).

²⁴ A shadow director is a person in accordance with whose directions or instructions the directors or a majority of the directors of the company are accustomed to act (see 3.2.5 below).

- (d) (i) Liability for each of the above offences is criminal.
- (ii) A person guilty of any of the above offences is liable to both imprisonment and a fine.
- (iii) The court determines the length of the term of imprisonment and/or the amount of the fine according to the gravity of the wrongdoing as a punitive measure, not as a means of compensating the company.
- (iv) The relevant act in relation to each of the above offences may be committed at any time before the commencement of or during the winding-up of the company, except for offence (a)(vi) which must occur either during the winding-up or at any meeting of creditors of the company within 12 months prior to the commencement of the winding-up.
- (v) Possible defences are:
 - (A) for offences (a)(i), (ii) and (v) above, absence of intent to defraud;]
 - (B) for offences (a)(iv) above, absence of intent to conceal the state of affairs of the company or to defeat the law; and
 - (C) for each of the above offences, any officer may be excused by the court if shown that he has acted honestly and reasonably and having regard to all the circumstances of the case he ought fairly to be excused.²⁵

Falsification of company's books²⁶

- (e) It is an offence for any officer²⁷ or a shadow director²⁸ of the company, whether past or present to:
 - (i) conceal, destroy, mutilate or falsify any book or paper affecting or relating to the property or affairs of the company, or to be privy to any such action;
 - (ii) make any false entry in any book or paper affecting or relating to the property or affairs of the company, or to be privy to such action; or
 - (iii) fraudulently part with, alter, make any omission in any document affecting the property or affairs of the company, or to be privy to any such action.
- (f) (i) Liability for all of the above offences is criminal.
- (ii) A person guilty of any of the above offences is liable to both imprisonment and a fine.

²⁵ Section 358 CO. The court rarely makes such orders.

²⁸ A shadow director is a person in accordance with whose directions or instructions the directors or a majority of the directors of the company are accustomed to act (see 3.2.5 below).

- (iii) The court determines the length of the term of imprisonment and/or the amount of the fine according to the gravity of the wrongdoing as a punitive measure, not as a means of compensating the company.
- (iv) The relevant act may be committed within 12 months before the commencement of the winding-up of the company or during the course of the winding-up.
- (v) Possible defences are:
 - (A) for offence (a)(i) and (ii) above, absence of intent to conceal the state of affairs of the company or to defeat the law;²⁹
 - (B) for each of the above offences, any officer may be excused by the court if it can be shown that he has acted honestly and reasonably and, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, he ought fairly to be excused.³⁰

*False representation to creditors*³¹

- (g) It is an offence for any officer³² or shadow director³³ of the company, whether past or present to falsely represent or commit any fraud for the purpose of obtaining the consent of the company's creditors or any of them to an agreement with reference to the state of the company's affairs or to the winding-up.
- (h) (i) Liability is criminal.
 - (ii) A person guilty of this offence is liable to both imprisonment and a fine.
 - (iii) The court determines the length of the term of imprisonment and/or the amount of the fine according to the gravity of the wrongdoing as a punitive measure, not as a means of compensating the company.
 - (iv) The representation may be made any time before or after the commencement of winding-up.
 - (v) The defence is absence of intent to mislead the company's creditors into giving their consent on the basis of a false premise.

²⁹ The burden of proof for the equivalent English law provision is on the defendant not the prosecution as the accused is deemed to have committed the offence in the event of the particular circumstances unless the defendant can prove there was no intent to conceal the state of affairs of the company or to defeat the law. In 1998, the Law Reform Commission recommended that this provision be amended to shift the burden of proof to the defendant but there is no indication that any such amendment will be made.

³⁰ Section 358 CO. The court rarely makes such orders.

2.5 Liability where proper accounts are not kept³⁴

- (a) It is an offence for an officer³⁵ or shadow director of a company who knowingly and wilfully authorises or permits the failure³⁶ to keep proper books of account during the two years before commencement of the winding-up (or between incorporation of the company and its winding-up if a lesser period). "Proper" books of account means those necessary to exhibit and explain the transactions and financial position of the business of the company (including, where relevant, day-to-day entries of cash paid and received and statements of annual stocktakings).
- (b) (i) Liability for this offence is criminal.
- (ii) A person guilty is liable to both imprisonment and a fine.
- (iii) The court determines the length of the term of imprisonment and/or the amount of the fine according to the gravity of the wrongdoing as a punitive measure, not as a means of compensating the company.
- (iv) The relevant act must have taken place within two years prior to the commencement of winding-up.
- (v) It is a defence if the accused can prove both an absence of dishonesty and that in the circumstances the failure was excusable.

2.6 Penalty for falsification of books³⁷

- (a) It is an offence for any officer³⁸ of the company (whether past or present) or a contributory to destroy, mutilate, alter or falsify any book, papers or securities, or make any false or fraudulent entry (or be privy to such entry) in any register, book of account or document of the company with the intent to defraud or deceive any person.
- (b) (i) Liability for this offence is criminal.
- (ii) A person guilty of any of the above offences is liable to both imprisonment and a fine.
- (iii) The court determines the length of the term of imprisonment and/or the amount of the fine according to the gravity of the wrongdoing as a punitive measure, not as a means of compensating the company.
- (iv) The relevant act may be committed any time before or during the course of the winding up of the company.
- (v) A defence is absence of intent to defraud or deceive any person.

³⁵ Officer includes the directors, managers and secretary of the company (see 3.3 below).

³⁷ Section 272 CO.

³⁸ Officer includes the directors, managers and secretary of the company (see 3.3 below).

2.7 Misfeasance³⁹

- (a) A past or present officer⁴⁰ or any person who has taken part in the formation or promotion of the company will be liable if found to have misapplied or retained or become liable or accountable for any money or property of the company or is found guilty of any misfeasance or breach of fiduciary duty.
- (b)
 - (i) Liability for this offence is civil.
 - (ii) Any damages award is designed to compensate the company for any loss caused and is not intended as a punitive measure. The court has a wide discretion to compel the officer to repay or restore the money or any part of it with interest as it considers just.
 - (iii) Although the court has a wide discretion, the discretion will be exercised with regard to proportionality.
 - (iv) There is no time period in which the relevant act must have been committed for a person to be caught under this provision, except under the Limitation Ordinance.⁴¹
 - (v) Any officer of the company may be excused by the court if it can be shown that he has acted honestly and reasonably and having regard to all the circumstances of the case he ought fairly to be excused.⁴²

2.8 General fiduciary duties owed to a company

- (a) The duties of a director are those applying to all fiduciaries and are based on acting with the utmost good faith towards the company, that is, its present and future members. However, as a company approaches insolvency, directors must also begin to take into account the interests of the company's creditors. When a company is insolvent, the interests of the creditors override the interests of the members. The fiduciary duties of directors are as follows:
 - (i) to act honestly and in good faith in the best interests of the company;
 - (ii) to exercise their powers for a proper purpose;
 - (iii) to avoid any conflict between their duties as a director and their personal interests; and
 - (iv) not to make a secret profit.

⁴¹ Limitation Ordinance (Cap 347).

⁴² Section 358 CO.

- (b) (i) Liability for breach of a director's fiduciary duty is civil.
- (ii) Liability is for all loss caused to the company by the breach of duty subject to the usual rules of recoverability based on considerations of causation and remoteness of damage.
- (iii) Directors found to have acted in breach of their fiduciary duties are jointly and severally liable for the entire loss. However, the court can allocate contributions as between the defendant directors taking into consideration their respective levels of culpability.⁴³
- (iv) There is no time limit within which action must be taken against a director except under the Limitation Ordinance.⁴⁴
- (v) Any director may be relieved by the court in whole or in part on such terms as it thinks fit from liability for a breach of fiduciary duty if it can be shown that he has acted honestly and reasonably and having regard to all the circumstances of the case he ought fairly to be excused.⁴⁵

2.9 Common law duties of skill and care

- (a) The common law duties of a director are subject to an overriding duty to have regard to the interests of the company's general creditors once it becomes insolvent. These duties are to:
 - (i) exhibit a degree of skill as may be reasonably expected from a person with his knowledge and experience or that may reasonably be expected of a person in his position; and
 - (ii) exercise such skill and care as an ordinary man would use in relation to his own affairs.
- (b) (i) Liability for breach of this duty is civil.
- (ii) The court will award damages to compensate the company for the loss that has been suffered as a result of the director's breach of duty.
- (iii) Directors found to have acted in breach of their common law duty are jointly and severally liable for the entire loss. However, the court can allocate contributions as between the defendant directors taking into consideration their respective levels of culpability.⁴⁶
- (iv) There is no time limit within which action must be taken against a director except under the Limitation Ordinance.⁴⁷

- (v) Any director may be relieved by the court in whole or in part on such terms as it thinks fit from liability for a breach of fiduciary duty if shown that he has acted honestly and reasonably and having regard to all the circumstances of the case he ought fairly to be excused.⁴⁸

2.10 Standard of fiduciary and common law duties owed by executive and non-executive directors

- 2.10.1 The courts have declined to make any distinction between executive and non-executive directors when assessing whether a director has met the requirements imposed by his fiduciary and common law duties. However, the court may take into account the 'position' of the director, such as whether his functions are discharged on a part-time basis.⁴⁹
- 2.10.2 The fiduciary and common law duties of a director may be extended by contractual arrangement (e.g. a director who has a service contract may have additional contractual duties) but they cannot be limited or reduced by way of contractual arrangement. Section 165(1) CO prohibits any provision in a contract or in a company's memorandum or articles of association which exempts any officer of the company from liability for breach of duty.
- 2.10.3 In the absence of an employment contract the non-executive will not owe any contractual duties of care to the company. It is accepted that the non-executive may rely on his co-directors to carry out various tasks and functions, however this does not abrogate his responsibility to inform himself about the company's affairs and to join with his co-directors in supervising and controlling them. The non-executive may rely on a co-director to the extent that any matter lies within the co-director's sphere of responsibility having regard to the way the business of the company is organised and where there exist no reasons for supposing that this reliance is misplaced. Note that the extent to which a non-executive may reasonably rely on the executive directors and other professionals to perform his own duties is an area in which the law is developing and has been described as 'fact sensitive'.

2.11 Liability of directors to disqualification for acts done in the twilight zone⁵⁰

- 2.11.1 The provisions in the Companies Ordinance providing for disqualification of directors are based upon the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986 (CDDA).⁵¹ Under Hong Kong law, a court may order that a person who is appointed as a director be disqualified or, if not holding such a position, be restricted from being a director or taking part in the management, formation or promotion of a company, for a period of up to fifteen years. Under section 168C CO, "company" is now widely defined to include unregistered companies, or registered companies, whether they may be incorporated in or outside of Hong Kong.

⁴⁹ Equitable Life Assurance Society v Bowley [2003] B.C.C. 829.

⁵⁰ Part IVA CO.

⁵¹ See 2.15 of the England Chapter.

- 2.11.2 There is no definitive 'twilight zone' for directors in respect of liability for disqualification. Some grounds for disqualification do not require that the company is insolvent either at the time or after the person commits the relevant acts. Where the company is required to be or subsequently to have become insolvent, there are no specific periods in which the director must have committed the acts prior to the insolvency of the company.
- 2.11.3 As under the CDDA, there is no provision under Hong Kong law for automatic disqualification. It should be noted that where a person is found liable for fraudulent trading, the court has a discretion to make a disqualification order against such person irrespective of whether an application for a disqualification order is made.⁵²
- 2.11.4 Apart from where a disqualification order is made as part of the sentence imposed following conviction for a crime, disqualification proceedings have been held to be civil in nature. However, a person who contravenes a disqualification order commits a criminal offence and is liable to imprisonment and a fine.⁵³

Grounds for disqualification

- 2.11.5 There are five grounds for disqualification. The two grounds which can apply to a company outside of insolvency, are:
- (i) where any person has persistently breached requirements of the Companies Ordinance for the filing of any return, account or other delivery to the Registrar;⁵⁴ and
 - (ii) where a person is convicted of an indictable offence in connection with the promotion, formation, management or liquidation of the company or in connection with the receivership or management of a company's property or any other indictable offence which involves fraud or dishonesty.⁵⁵

The three remaining grounds require that the company is insolvent at the time of the relevant conduct or subsequently becomes insolvent. These grounds are:

- (iii) where it appears that a person is guilty of fraudulent trading (criminal liability) or otherwise guilty while being an officer⁵⁶ or shadow director⁵⁷ of the company of any fraud or breach of duty⁵⁸ in the course of the winding-up of the company;⁵⁹

⁵⁷ A shadow director is a person in accordance with whose directions or instructions the directors or a majority of the directors of the company are accustomed to act (see 3.2.5 below).

⁵⁸ Conviction under section 275 of CO is not required, the court need only to have taken the view that the person is guilty of such an offence.

⁵⁹ Section 168G CO.

- (iv) where a court is satisfied that the conduct of a past or present director⁶⁰ or shadow director⁶¹ of an insolvent company, makes him unfit to be concerned in the management of a company⁶² (the court has no discretion as to whether the director is disqualified in the event that unfitness is proved);⁶³ and
- (v) where a director is found liable for fraudulent trading (irrespective of whether an application for a disqualification order was made).⁶⁴

2.11.6 There is no statutory definition of 'unfitness' but certain factors may be taken into account when determining the fitness of a director. These are listed in the Fifteenth Schedule of the Companies Ordinance which mirrors the First Schedule of CDDA. The list includes factors that apply whether a company is solvent or not, such as breach of fiduciary duty, misfeasance and misapplication of company property, and those factors which apply specifically to insolvent companies, such as the causes of the company's insolvency and the company entering into any transaction or giving any preference which is liable to be set aside.⁶⁵ The list may be modified by order of the Financial Secretary and is not exclusive. The court will look at any matters or acts relevant to the conduct of the affairs of the company and its insolvency, such as the statutory requirements for keeping proper books of account, delivering the company's property to the liquidator and compiling the statement of affairs. Except with the leave of the court, an action for disqualification relying on this ground must be made within four years of the date of commencement of winding-up or within four years from the date on which a receiver's appointment is terminated.⁶⁶

Length of disqualification

- 2.11.7 The maximum period of disqualification is generally 15 years. It is in the court's discretion to fix the period of disqualification subject to this limit (and the jurisdiction of the court in the case of being disqualified on conviction of an indictable offence).⁶⁷ The Hong Kong court has applied the guidelines set down by the English Court of Appeal which divides cases into three categories according to their severity:⁶⁸
- (i) 10-15 years for particularly serious cases, such as where a director is disqualified for a second time;⁶⁹
 - (ii) 6-10 years for serious cases which do not merit the top bracket;⁷⁰ and
 - (iii) 1-5 years for cases which are relatively not very serious.⁷¹

⁶⁰ A director includes a person duly appointed as a director and any person occupying the position of director by whatever name called (see 3.2.4 below).

⁷¹ There is a minimum requirement of a one-year period where a director is disqualified on the grounds of being unfit (Section 168H) (Re Emperor Hotel [2002] 3 HKLRD 805).

2.11.8 Enforcement of disqualification orders in Hong Kong is primarily the responsibility of government regulators (particularly the Official Receiver's Office), however the following should be noted:

- (i) if a court finds a person liable for fraudulent trading under section 168L, it may make a disqualification order whether or not it has been applied for;
- (ii) an application for disqualification relying on (A) conviction of an indictable offence under section 168E or (B) where it appears a person is guilty of fraudulent trading (criminal liability) or otherwise guilty while being an officer of any fraud or breach of duty in the course of the winding-up of the company under section 168G, may also be brought by the Financial Secretary, the liquidator, any past or present member or creditor of any company against which that person has committed an offence or default; and
- (iii) an application for disqualification relying on the 'unfitness' ground may be brought by either the Official Receiver or the Financial Secretary as long as it is considered to be in the public interest.⁷² Liquidators and receivers have a duty to report any matter which appears to relate to the unfitness of a director to the Official Receiver who may then report the matter to the Financial Secretary⁷³ with a view to determining whether there is a case for disqualification proceedings on the ground of unfitness to be instituted.

Duty to co-operate

2.11.9 Liquidators have the power under the Companies Ordinance to require directors to provide certain information and deliver up the company's property to them and the court to penalise directors for failing to co-operate (see section 7 below for more detail).

2.11.10 Disqualification proceedings on the grounds of unfitness (section 168H) must be brought within four years of the date on which the company was wound up unless leave of the court is obtained. There is no time limit prescribed for an application relying on any other ground.

Foreign corporations

2.11.11 There is no territorial restriction to the jurisdiction of the Hong Kong court to make a disqualification order. An order can be made against either a foreign national or resident abroad in relation to a Hong Kong incorporated company or registered overseas company or any unregistered company incorporated outside Hong Kong and includes acts committed abroad. It is necessary that either the company in question or some other company with which the person has been connected is the subject of insolvency proceedings in Hong Kong.

QUESTION 3

3. Other persons involved with the company's affairs who may become liable in respect of their actions during the "twilight" period

- (a) In addition to the formally appointed directors of the company, can others be held liable in respect of the company's activities during the "twilight" period if the company were to become subject to a formal insolvency procedure?
- (b) In respect of which acts may other persons be held liable and to what extent does the liability of third parties differ from that for directors identified in question 2 above?
- (c) Will liability be limited to that resulting from involvement with a particular transaction or more generally in relation to the overall loss suffered by creditors?

3.1 Introduction

- 3.1.1 Hong Kong law is similar to English law in that it may impose liability on a wide variety of persons who have been involved in the management of a company during the twilight period depending on the particular act or offence. Hong Kong law recognises that a company's affairs during this time may not only be influenced by those formally appointed as directors but also by a wide range of other people. If such people have caused loss to the company and its creditors during this time, they may also be found personally liable for such loss.
- 3.1.2 Liability first extends in certain circumstances to those persons who act as directors but have not been formally appointed, that is, "shadow directors" and "de facto" directors. Hong Kong law mirrors English law in respect of the meaning of these concepts and is explained in more detail below. In addition, officers of the company (apart from directors) who are involved in the affairs of the company during the twilight zone may also be held liable, as can third parties who are not in any way involved in the management of the company but who may be a party to transactions during the twilight zone which are vulnerable to challenge, such as unfair preferences. Liability may also arise where a third party has knowledge of a breach of duty of a director when entering into a transaction and either fraudulently assisted in that breach and/or received property from the company with knowledge of that breach. Under general equitable principles, such a person may be liable as a constructive trustee of such property and be liable to return it or to pay compensation to the company.

3.2 De facto and shadow directors

- 3.2.1 There are persons under Hong Kong law who are recognised and treated in the same way as directors despite not being formally appointed. The concept of "de facto" directors originated under common law to deal with persons who, though not technically appointed as directors as a matter of company law, are still treated as directors due to the function they carry out and role they play in the affairs of the company. In addition, Hong Kong legislation has introduced the concept of “shadow directors” to cover those persons who are not directors or do not seem to have any role in the decision-making process of a company but are nevertheless controlling the company through its directors from behind the scenes.

De facto directors

- 3.2.2 A “de facto” director is a person, who whilst not formally appointed (due to a technical default in his appointment or otherwise) or registered as a director, nonetheless acts as and performs the functions of a director and is treated as such by the rest of the board. “Director” is defined under the Companies Ordinance as “any person occupying the position of director by whatever name called”⁷⁴ and therefore includes those persons who are called by other names but participate in decisions of the type made by directors.
- 3.2.3 There is no distinction under Hong Kong law between de facto and formally appointed directors. Both owe the same duties and are under the same statutory obligations. De facto directors may be exposed to additional liability if they dispose of company property because the fact that they are not directors means that they lack the necessary authority. Unless the shareholders in general meeting resolve to ratify the disposals, de facto directors may be liable to compensate the company for the value of the assets wrongfully disposed of. This right of action vests in the company.
- 3.2.4 De facto directors have the ability to bind the company in making contracts with third parties acting in good faith in their capacity as agents of the company with actual and/or apparent authority. Under principles of general agency law, they are not personally liable under those contracts but may be liable in damages for breach of an implied warranty of authority if they can be deemed to have warranted that they had authority to act on behalf of the company when no such authority existed.

Shadow directors

- 3.2.5 A shadow director is defined under Hong Kong law as “a person in accordance with whose directions or instructions the directors or a majority of the directors of the company are accustomed to act” but a “person shall not be considered to be a shadow director of a company by reason only that the directors or a majority of the directors of the company act on advice given by him in a professional capacity”.⁷⁵
- 3.2.6 There have been few cases in Hong Kong where the courts have had to consider the meaning of “shadow director”. The English Court of Appeal decision in SSTI v Deverell (2000) (in which the statutory definition of shadow director in the Companies Act 1985 was reviewed) has not yet been considered, although it will probably have a significant influence on the approach taken by the Hong Kong courts.

⁷⁶ This includes de facto directors by virtue of the definition of director (see 3.2.2).

3.3 Officers

Liability for many of the offences set out above is not limited to those persons acting as directors but, by reference to the 'officers' of the company, extends to other persons who are managing the affairs of the company. Unlike the English law position, this is a defined term in the Companies Ordinance meaning a director⁷⁶, manager or secretary; a manager is defined as 'a person who, under the immediate authority of the board of directors, exercises managerial functions' but does not include receivers and special managers.⁷⁷ This definition suggests that a manager is limited to only those at a more senior level who are exercising managerial functions as such person must be 'under the immediate authority' of the board.

3.4 Other third parties that may be held liable

3.4.1 Liquidators and receivers may be found liable for misfeasance or breach of duty owed to the company.⁷⁸

3.4.2 Third parties may be held liable for some of the above offences.

- (i) If a third party receives property as a result of an unfair preference, that person will be liable to return the property and/or provide compensation as the court thinks fit with a view to restoring the position to what it would have been had the unfair preference not occurred⁷⁹.
- (ii) If a third party receives property of the company which has been disposed of after the winding-up order has been made without the court's consent, that disposal will be void.⁸⁰
- (iii) A third party will be liable for fraudulent trading if that person is knowingly party to the carrying on of a business with an intent to defraud creditors.⁸¹ As stated above, the 'carrying on of a business' need only constitute a single act. It is likely that an employee who merely carries out orders will not be liable but that a person must have taken a positive step.⁸²
- (iv) Any third party who has dishonestly assisted in a breach of duty by a director or other officer of a company or knowingly received property arising from such a breach will be liable for any loss arising. This applies to all circumstances and is not limited to actions taken in the 'twilight zone' and falls within the Hong Kong court's equitable jurisdiction.
- (v) Any third party who takes in or receives property belonging to a company knowing it to have been pawned, pledged or disposed of in the course of the winding up of the company (or 12 months prior its commencement) for the purpose of obtaining credit and which has not been paid for incurs criminal liability. It is a defence if the third party can prove an absence of intent to defraud.⁸³

3.5 Summary

Liability may attach to persons not formally appointed as directors for the following offences:

Offence/activity	Persons liable	Extent of liability
Fraudulent trading (s.275 CO)	Any person who was knowingly a party to the carrying on of the business for a fraudulent purpose (including persons dealing with the company who receive property with knowledge of the fraud)	Same as for director
Fraud by officers of companies which have gone in to liquidation (s.273 CO)	Officers of the company at the time of the fraud	Same as for director
Offences by officers of companies in liquidation (s.271 CO)	Any officer or shadow director of the company at the time of the offence ⁸⁴ . A s.271(o) offence includes third parties who take property of the company in the knowledge that is pawned, pledged or disposed of for the purpose of obtaining credit which has not been paid for (see 3.4(v) above)	Same as for director
Liability where proper accounts not kept (s.274 CO)	Officers ⁸⁴ and shadow directors ⁸⁵ (who knowingly and wilfully authorise or permit the default) of the company at the time of the default	Same as for director
Falsification of books (s.272 CO)	Officers ⁸⁴ or contributories of the company at the time of the offence	Same as for director
Misfeasance (s.276 CO)	Any past or present officer ⁸⁴ , liquidator or receiver of the company, auditor and any person who has taken part in the formation or promotion of the company	Same as for director
Unfair Preference (ss.266 and 266B CO)	Creditor, surety and guarantor	The court has discretion to restore the position of the parties to what it would have been had the preference never been made (e.g. return of property)
Dishonestly assisting or knowingly receiving property or assets in breach of duty	Any person with the requisite degree of "knowledge" who knowingly assists in a breach of duty owed by a person to a company or knowingly receives property from a breach of duty owed to the company	Where requisite knowledge and other applicable conditions are satisfied, a person may be held to be a constructive trustee of the property and required to return such property or pay compensation equal to the loss caused

4. Counterparties dealing with the company during the twilight period

- (a) From the point of view of a counterparty dealing with the company during the twilight period, what are the potential heads of challenge which may lead to transactions with the company being set aside?
- (b) What defences, if any, to the areas of vulnerability identified above will be available to a counter-party seeking to protect a transaction from being attacked?

4.1 Introduction

The provisions under Hong Kong law allowing for transactions which are to the detriment of a company and/or unfairly beneficial to a counterparty to be overturned reflect the English law provisions except in one significant respect. There are no means by which a person can challenge transactions which are at an undervalue in relation to a corporate insolvency.⁸⁶ This considerably weakens the Hong Kong regime as the alternatives, unfair preference and fraudulent conveyance, both require mens rea on the part of the person acting on behalf of the company.

4.2 Summary of heads of challenge

The potential heads of challenge which may lead to transactions with the company being set aside retrospectively from the point of view of a counterparty, are as follows:

- (a) unfair preferences;
- (b) fraudulent conveyances;
- (c) extortionate credit transactions;
- (d) granting of floating charges for past value;
- (e) breach of a director's fiduciary duties;
- (f) transactions comprising onerous property;
- (g) transactions constituting a disposition of company property after the commencement of the winding-up; and
- (h) transactions comprising an unregistered charge.

incorporating the relevant sections of the Hong Kong Bankruptcy Ordinance by reference which has left significant gaps in the definition of a corporate entity's associate (see 4.3.3 below).

4.3 Unfair preference

- 4.3.1 An unfair preference occurs when an act of the company, whilst it is insolvent but before the commencement of its winding-up, has the effect of putting a creditor in a better position in the company's winding-up than it would have been in had the company not taken such action. The liquidator is the only person who may challenge such transactions. If the challenge is successful, the court has a wide range of powers to exercise in its discretion to restore the position of the parties to what it would have been if the company had not entered into the relevant transaction.⁸⁷

Conditions for setting aside the transaction

- 4.3.2 The following conditions must be satisfied to challenge a transaction successfully:

- (1) the company must be in liquidation and the application challenging the transaction must be made by the liquidator;⁸⁸
- (2) the transaction must take place during the 'relevant' periods which end with the commencement of the winding-up of the company.⁸⁹ The applicable period depends on the identity of the preferred person and is:
 - (A) 2 years for an unfair preference given to an 'associate'; and
 - (B) 6 months for an unfair preference given to any other person.
- (3) the company is 'insolvent'⁹⁰ at the time of or becomes insolvent as a result of the transaction.

- 4.3.3 There is no satisfactory definition of an 'associate' of a company,⁹¹ because the application of unfair preference provisions to companies is achieved only by incorporation of the relevant sections of the Bankruptcy Ordinance (which apply only to individuals). Obviously there are some categories of associate as defined in the Bankruptcy Ordinance which have no application to a company, such as spouses or relatives. The persons falling within the definition of 'associate' which are relevant to a company are as follows:

- (i) any person in partnership with a company;
- (ii) any person who employs or is employed by the company (directors and other officers are treated as employees under this provision);
- (iii) a person who is a trustee of a trust where the beneficiaries of the trust include or the terms of the trust confer a power that may be exercised for the benefit of the company or an associate of the company; and ⁸⁸ Section 50(1) Bankruptcy Ordinance (Cap 6).

⁸⁹ The commencement of the winding-up of the company for the purpose of this section is the day on which the

⁹² One company (A) is controlled by another (B) where (i) the directors of A or of another company which has control of A are accustomed to act in accordance with the directions or instructions of B (except if B is giving advice in a professional capacity) or (ii) B is entitled to exercise or control the exercise of one-third or more of

- (iv) another company which is 'controlled' by the company in liquidation or if the company in liquidation and associates of that company together have control.⁹²

4.3.4 It should be noted that those persons not falling within the definition of associate are as follows:

- (i) a holding or parent company of the company in liquidation or any other company in the same group which is not under the control of the company in liquidation;
- (ii) the spouse or relatives of a director (directors are associates but only because they are regarded as employed by the company); and
- (iii) shadow directors.

What is a preference?

4.3.5 A company gives an unfair preference if:

- (1) the creditor who is preferred is one of the company's creditors (including a surety or guarantor for any of the company's debts or liabilities);⁹³ and
- (2) the company does anything or suffers anything to be done which has the effect of putting that creditor in the event of the company's insolvency in a better position than if that thing had not been done.

4.3.6 The test to determine whether a creditor has been preferred is whether the creditor is better off in the event of the company's winding-up; that the statutory order of priorities is in some way disturbed.

Defences

4.3.7 The court shall not make an order against a person under this section unless the company who gave the unfair preference was influenced in deciding to give it by a desire to give a preference to that person.⁹⁴ This is a question of fact. The English court's decisions and comments on the equivalent section of the Insolvency Act will be regarded as persuasive in Hong Kong.⁹⁵

4.3.8 If the creditor is an 'associate' of the company (unless by reason only of being its employee), there is a presumption that the company was influenced by such a desire, unless the contrary is shown⁹⁶. As directors and other officers of a company are only associates by virtue of being deemed to be employees, this presumption does not apply to them.

the voting power at any general meeting of A or of a company which has control of A (section 51B(8) Bankruptcy Ordinance (Cap 6).

⁹³ Section 50(3)(a) Bankruptcy Ordinance (Cap 6).

⁹⁴ Section 50(5) Bankruptcy Ordinance (Cap 6).

⁹⁵ See 4.4.6 of the England Chapter.

⁹⁶ Section 50(5) Bankruptcy Ordinance (Cap 6).

⁹⁷ Section 51A(2) Bankruptcy Ordinance (Cap 6).

⁹⁸ Section 60 Conveyancing and Property Ordinance (Cap 219).

4.3.9 The court may not make an order if:

- (i) it would prejudice any interest in the property which was acquired from a person other than the company and was acquired in good faith and for value, or prejudice any interest deriving from such interest; or
- (ii) it would require a person who has received a benefit from the unfair preference in good faith and for value to pay a sum to the liquidator (except where the payment is in respect of an unfair preference given at a time when he was a creditor of the company).⁹⁷

4.3.10 There is a presumption that the benefit of the preference was not acquired in good faith if the creditor had notice of the circumstances amounting to the unfair preference or of the liquidation proceedings at the time of the unfair preference or the preferred person was an associate of the company or the creditor to whom the company gave the unfair preference.

4.4 Fraudulent conveyance⁹⁸

4.4.1 A transaction may be set aside by the court if it amounts to a disposition of property with the 'intent to defraud creditors'. Although the relevant provision is found in the Conveyancing and Property Ordinance, it applies not only to land but to all forms of property. A liquidator or a creditor may apply to court for relief. There are no specific time limits attached to this section. This provision is rarely relied upon due to the difficulty in proving the intention to defraud.

4.4.2 The main defences are (i) absence of intention to defraud creditors, and (ii) that the property was disposed of for good consideration and in good faith to any person not having, at the time of the disposition, notice of the intent to defraud creditors.

4.5 Extortionate credit transactions⁹⁹

Conditions

4.5.1 The court may set aside or vary a transaction for or involving the provision of credit to the company if:

- (1) the company is or has been a party to the transaction;
- (2) the company is in liquidation;
- (3) application is made by the liquidator;
- (4) the transaction was 'extortionate'; and
- (5) the transaction was entered into within three years before the commencement of the voluntary winding-up or date of the winding-up order.

⁹⁹ Section 264B of CO and is derived from the equivalent provision under English law (section 244 IA 1986).

¹⁰¹ Section 267 CO. The purpose of this section is the same as the equivalent provision under English law

4.5.2 A transaction is regarded as extortionate if, having regard to the risk accepted by the person providing the credit:

- (1) the terms of it are or were such as to require grossly extortionate payments to be made (whether unconditionally or in certain contingencies) in respect of the provision of the credit; or
- (2) it otherwise grossly contravenes ordinary principles of fair dealing.

This provision aims to prevent oppression where one of the parties is taking improper advantage of an imbalance in bargaining power.

4.5.3 There is a rebuttable presumption that a transaction is extortionate if an application is made under this provision.¹⁰⁰

Defences

4.5.4 There are no statutory defences.

4.6 Effect of floating charge

4.6.1 The relevant provision seeks to prevent an insolvent company creating a floating charge over its property to secure past debts and so prefer the creditor to which the charge is provided to the prejudice of general unsecured creditors.¹⁰¹

Conditions for setting aside

4.6.2 A liquidator of an insolvent company may treat a charge as void¹⁰² if:

- (1) the charge was created as a floating charge (whether or not it is still floating at the time of the commencement of the winding-up);
- (2) it was created within 12 months prior to the commencement of the winding-up;
- (3) the company was insolvent at the time it was created; and
- (4) the charge was given otherwise than for new consideration.

4.6.3 A charge will be valid to the extent of any cash paid to the company at the time or subsequent to the creation of the charge in consideration of the charge. 'Cash paid to the company' has been interpreted to include cheques or the equivalent of cash (such as goods or services) and payments made direct to the company's creditors (as long as the cash is intended to benefit the company and not certain creditors).

(section 245 IA 1986) but the Hong Kong provision is less detailed, such that English case law in respect of section 245 IA 1986 may not apply in Hong Kong.

¹⁰² No application needs to be made by the liquidator to the court unless the property is controlled by the party claiming security.

¹⁰⁴ Section 268(7) CO.

- 4.6.4 This section does not have a retrospective effect and therefore does not apply to avoid any payment received in respect of a floating charge created and enforced within the 12 months prior to the commencement of the winding-up.

Defences

- 4.6.5 There are no specific statutory defences except to the extent that it can be proved that the company was solvent immediately after the charge was created or that the charge is valid to the extent that any new consideration was given.
- 4.6.6 The practical situations set out in section 4.7.6 of the England Chapter have application in Hong Kong.

4.7 Breach by directors of general/common law duties

- 4.7.1 If the directors cause the company to contract with another party on terms disadvantageous to the company, they may be in breach of their general common law duty to put the company's interests first. Where the counterparty has knowledge of this, the company may have proprietary or restitutionary rights to recover the property. These are rights under the general law and, whilst not dependent upon insolvency, are more likely to be examined and/or exercised in a formal insolvency.

4.8 Disclaimer of onerous property in case of company wound up¹⁰³

- 4.8.1 A liquidator in the course of the winding-up of a company may, with leave of the court, disclaim 'onerous' property of the company notwithstanding that the liquidator has attempted to sell, take possession or exercise any act of ownership in relation to the property. If the liquidator does not disclaim the property within 12 months of the commencement of winding-up (or if the liquidator does not know of such property one month after the commencement of the winding-up, within 12 months of becoming aware of it), consent of the court for an extension of this period must be obtained.
- 4.8.2 'Onerous' property includes (i) land burdened with onerous covenants, (ii) shares or stock in companies, (iii) unprofitable contracts and (iv) any other property which is unsaleable or not readily saleable by reason of some onerous act or payment being required.
- 4.8.3 The purpose of the disclaimer is to determine the rights, interest and liabilities of the company with respect to the property of the company as from the date of the disclaimer and therefore does not affect rights and liabilities already accrued. Third parties may only be effected to the extent necessary to release the company and its property from liability. Any person suffering loss or damage as a consequence of the disclaimer is deemed to be a creditor of the company and may prove the amount of any loss as a debt in the winding-up of the company.¹⁰⁴

¹⁰⁶ Section 81 CO.

- 4.8.4 If the liquidator fails to take action in respect of burdened property, any interested person may force the liquidator to make a decision by serving notice. If the liquidator fails to give notice of intention to apply to the court for leave to disclaim within 28 days after receipt of the notice to him, the liquidator will lose the right to disclaim on the expiry of such period.

4.9 Avoidance of dispositions of property after commencement of winding-up.¹⁰⁵

- 4.9.1 In a winding-up by the court, any disposition of the property of the company, including things in action, transfer of shares, alteration in status of the members of the company, shall be void if made after the commencement of the winding-up unless the court otherwise orders. The purpose of this section is to preserve the status quo and support the principle of pari passu distribution of the company's assets.
- 4.9.2 The commencement of the winding-up is the date of presentation of the winding-up petition.
- 4.9.3 This section applies to all dispositions unless a court order is obtained validating the transaction. An application may be made by the company, liquidator, contributory or any interested person for a validating order. Leave will only be given if the disposition will not materially prejudice the company's creditors or it is likely to improve the position of all the company's creditors (for example, if the disposition enables the company to trade profitably).

4.10 Failure to register a charge

- 4.10.1 Hong Kong operates a system of registration of security similar to the system in England. If a Hong Kong incorporated company creates any security (in Hong Kong or elsewhere) over property located in Hong Kong or elsewhere, or an overseas company with a place of business in Hong Kong creates security over property located in Hong Kong, that security must be registered within five weeks of its creation. Failure to do so renders the security void against a liquidator and any creditor of the company. It is the company's duty to register the charge¹⁰⁶ but any person who is interested in the charge¹⁰⁷ may and should do so.
- 4.10.2 Those charges that must be registered are:
- (a) charge for the purpose of securing any issue of debentures;
 - (b) charge on uncalled share capital of the company;
 - (c) charge created or evidenced by an instrument which if executed by an individual would require registration as a bill of sale;
 - (d) charge on land wherever situated or any interest therein but not including a charge for any rent or other periodical sum issuing out of land;
 - (e) charge on book debts of the company;

¹⁰⁹ Section 14(1) of the Magistrates Ordinance (Cap.227).

- (f) floating charge on the undertaking or property of the company;
- (g) charge on calls made but not paid;
- (h) charge on a ship or any share in a ship; and
- (i) charge on goodwill, on a patent or a licence under a patent, on a trademark or on a copyright or a licence under a copyright.

QUESTION 5

5. Enforcement

By whom may action be brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3 above)?

5.1 Introduction

A liquidator is required to review the action taken by directors and other persons involved in the affairs of the company during the twilight period as part of his duty to collect and then realise all the property and assets of the company for the benefit of creditors. If the circumstances require, he is obliged also to bring proceedings to obtain compensation for the company for any loss caused to the company by persons interested in the company, including directors. As a result, it is the liquidator who in most cases is empowered to bring proceedings against directors. Even in those cases where other persons interested in the company may bring proceedings against directors (as listed in the table below), the proceedings are usually commenced by the liquidator. This rule does not apply to criminal proceedings.

5.2 Criminal proceedings

- 5.2.1 The Secretary for Justice is responsible for bringing criminal proceedings in Hong Kong against directors and any other persons. A liquidator is under a duty to bring any offences to the attention of the Secretary for Justice and, in the event that an offence is not reported, any person may apply to court for a direction that the matter be referred.¹⁰⁸
- 5.2.2 There is a general right for any person to bring criminal proceedings by way of private prosecution, however, the Secretary for Justice may at any stage in proceedings before a magistrate intervene and assume the conduct of the proceedings.¹⁰⁹
- 5.2.3 Criminal offences that may be brought against directors can be summarised as follows:
 - (j) Fraudulent trading (section 275 (3) CO);

¹¹⁰ A contributory is defined as any person liable to contribute to the assets of a company in the event of it being wound up and includes any person alleged to be a contributory prior to the final determination of those persons deemed contributories (section 171 CO).

- (k) Fraud by officers of companies in liquidation (section 273 CO);
- (l) Falsification of books (section 272 CO);
- (m) Liability where proper accounts not kept (section 274 CO); and
- (n) Offences by officers of companies in liquidation (section 271 CO).

5.3 Civil proceedings

- 5.3.1 The insolvency regime in Hong Kong allows persons other than the liquidator to bring civil proceedings against directors for certain actions. Where an action for contribution to the company's assets is successful, any recoveries made will be for the benefit of all creditors and form part of the company's assets.
- 5.3.2 Only the Financial Secretary and Official Receiver may bring proceedings for disqualification on the grounds of unfitness to be a director (sections 168H and 168I).

Activity/Transaction	Person able to bring proceedings
Misfeasance	Official Receiver, liquidator, creditor or contributory ¹¹⁰
Fraudulent trading (civil liability) (s.275(1))	Official Receiver, liquidator, creditor or contributory
Unfair preference	Liquidator only
Fraudulent conveyance	Liquidator or any creditor
Extortionate credit transaction	Liquidator only
Disqualification as a director • s.168E, F and G	Official Receiver, Financial Secretary, liquidator and any past or present member or creditor against which that person has committed an offence or default (disqualification under s.168F may also be made by the Registrar)
• s.168H	Financial Secretary or Official receiver (if in the public interest)
• s.168K	At the court's discretion

¹¹¹ Section 211 CO.

¹¹² Officer includes directors, managers and secretary of the company (see 3.3 above).

¹¹³ Company Winding-Up Rules r 67.

QUESTION 6

6. Remedies: orders available to the domestic court

In respect of the offences identified in questions 2, 3 and 4 above, what remedies are available in the domestic court?

Activity/Transaction	Remedy Available
Misfeasance	This section only provides the mechanism for enforcing existing duties arising before or during the winding-up by way of summary trial - it does not create any new liabilities or rights.
	The court may order a director to repay or restore the money or property (or any part of it) with interest at such rate as the court thinks just or to contribute such sum to the assets of the company by way of compensation in respect of the misfeasance or breach of trust as the court thinks just.
Fraudulent trading Criminal Liability (s.275(3) CO)	If convicted following trial by jury, the penalty is up to five years imprisonment and/or a fine (unlimited) and, on summary conviction, up to 12 months imprisonment and a fine of up to HK$150,000.
Civil liability (s.275(1) CO)	A director may be held liable for all of the debts or other liabilities of the company (without limitation) as the court may direct. In exercising its discretion, the court is seeking to compensate the company for any loss and not to apply any punitive measure. Where a court makes a declaration under this section that a director is liable for all or any of the debts or liabilities of the company the court (i) may make an order that he be disqualified from acting as a director for a period of up to 15 years (irrespective of whether an application was made for such an order), and (ii) may give further directions to effect the declaration, such as imposing a charge on any debt or obligation due from the company to him or the deferral of debts due from the company to him.
Unfair preference	The court may make such order as it thinks fit for restoring the position to what it would have been had the transaction constituting the unfair preference not occurred. For example, it may order: (a) any property that was transferred as part of the transaction to be vested in the liquidator as part of the company's assets;

Activity/Transaction	Remedy Available
	(b) any property which represents the application of the proceeds of sale of the property or money wrongfully transferred to be vested in the liquidator as part of the company's assets; (c) the release or discharge of any security given by the company; (d) any person to pay such sums representing the value of any benefits received by him from the company in breach of this section to the company; (e) any obligations of a surety or guarantor which were released or discharged in breach of this section to be revived on terms as the court thinks fit; (f) security to be provided for the discharge of any obligation imposed by or arising under the order; and (g) any person whose property is vested by the order in the company, or on whom obligations are imposed, to be able to prove in the winding-up of the company for debts or other liabilities which arose from or were released or discharged under or by, the transaction or the giving of the preference. Any order under this section cannot prejudice any interest in property acquired from a person (other than the company) in good faith and for value. It must not require a person who received a benefit from the transaction constituting the unfair preference in good faith and for fair value to make payment except where that person was a party to the transaction with the company or was a creditor of the company at the time of the transaction.
Fraudulent conveyance	A transaction declared to be a fraudulent conveyance will be void. Any third party in possession of the property will be deemed to be holding the property on constructive trust for the liquidator. The court can order the property to be re-vested in the liquidator as part of the company's assets.
Extortionate credit transaction	The court may make any of the following orders: (a) set aside the whole or any part of any obligation created by the transaction; (b) vary the terms of the transaction or the terms on which any security for the purpose of the transaction is held; (c) require any person who is or was a party to the transaction to pay the liquidator any sums paid to that person by the company by virtue of the transaction;

	(d) require any person to surrender to the liquidator any property held by him as security for the purposes of the transaction; and (e) direct accounts to be taken between any persons.
Fraud by officers of companies in liquidation	If convicted following trial by jury, the penalty is up to two years imprisonment and/or a fine up to HK$150,000 and, on summary conviction, up to six months imprisonment and a fine of up to HK$50,000.
Falsification of books	If convicted following trial by jury, the penalty is up to two years imprisonment and/or a fine up to HK$150,000 and, on summary conviction, up to six months imprisonment and a fine of up to HK$50,000.
Liability for proper accounts	If convicted following trial by jury, the penalty is up to two years imprisonment and/or a fine up to HK$150,000 and, on summary conviction, up to six months imprisonment and a fine of up to HK$50,000.
Offences by officers of companies in liquidation
All offences under s.271 (except for (o))	If convicted following trial by jury, the penalty is up to two years imprisonment and/or a fine up to HK$150,000 and, on summary conviction, up to six months imprisonment and a fine of up to HK$50,000.
s.271(o) (Pawn, pledge or disposal of property of the company obtained on credit which has not been paid for)	If convicted following trial by jury, the penalty is up to five years imprisonment and, on summary conviction, up to two years imprisonment.
Breach of fiduciary duties	The director may be ordered to compensate the company for any loss or damage caused by breach of his fiduciary duty, to restore to the company any property appropriated or acquired in breach of his fiduciary duty and to account to the company for any benefit obtained in breach of his fiduciary duty.
Duties of skill and care	The director may be ordered to compensate the company for loss and damage caused by breach of his fiduciary duty.

QUESTION 7

7. Duty to co-operate

- (a) To what extent are directors (and others identified in question 3 above) obliged to co-operate with an investigation into the company's affairs following its insolvency?
- (b) Are any human rights laws applicable in the domestic jurisdiction in relation to any such obligations (e.g. in the UK and other European jurisdictions Article 6 of the European Convention of Human Rights may apply if domestic law compels a person to provide potentially self-incriminating information at the request of the office-holder appointed under the relevant insolvency procedure adopted)?

7.1 Introduction

There is no provision in the Companies Ordinance imposing a general duty on directors and other persons involved in the affairs of a company to co-operate with a liquidator, a provisional liquidator or the Official Receiver, as can be found under English law in section 235 of the Insolvency Act 1986. Liquidators in Hong Kong must rely on the specific provisions which are set out below when investigating the company's affairs.

7.2 Obligation to assist with delivery of property to liquidator¹¹¹

- 7.2.1 Any contributory, trustee, receiver, banker, agent or officer¹¹² of the company on notice from the liquidator must pay, deliver, convey, surrender or transfer any money, property, books or paper to which the company is entitled to the liquidator within the time specified in the notice.

Sanctions

- 7.2.2 In the event of non-compliance with the liquidator's demand, the court may make an order on application of the liquidator for such payment, delivery, or transfer¹¹³.

7.3 Power to summon persons suspected of having property of the company¹¹⁴

- 7.3.1 This provision provides for the examination by the court in private of persons suspected of having in their possession property of the company or of having information concerning the company or its affairs or property. The application is usually made by the liquidator but, if he will not, any creditor or contributory may apply.¹¹⁵

¹¹⁴ Section 221 CO.

¹¹⁵ A liquidator need not show a prima facie case when applying for a private examination, only 'mere suspicion' (Re Gold Co (1879) 12 Ch D 770), whereas a creditor or contributory seems to have to prove a prima facie case (Re Rolls Razor Ltd (No 2) [1970] Ch 576).

¹¹⁶ Section 222 CO.

¹¹⁸ Companies (Winding-up) Rules rr.49-56.

7.3.2 Any time after the appointment of a provisional liquidator or the making of a winding-up order, the court may summon to appear before it any of the following persons:

(a) any officer of the company;

any person known or suspected to have in his possession any property of the company or supposed to be indebted to the company; and

(c) any person whom the court deems capable of giving information concerning the promotion, formation, trade, dealings, affairs or property of the company.

7.3.3 Any of the above persons may be required by the court to do any of the following:

(d) be examined on oath, provide responses in writing and sign any document containing such responses; and

(e) produce any books and papers in that person's custody or power (without prejudice to any lien).

Sanctions

7.3.4 If a person is summoned to attend the court for examination after being provided a reasonable sum for expenses and refuses to attend, the court may order that he be apprehended and brought before the court for examination (subject to there being no lawful impediment made known to the court).

7.4 Power to order public examination of officers¹¹⁶

7.4.1 Where a company is being wound up (either by the court or voluntarily), the Official Receiver or liquidator may apply to the court for the public examination of an officer¹¹⁷ in relation to the promotion or formation or conduct of the business of the company or as to his conduct and dealings as an officer. The court may only make such an order if the liquidator or Official Receiver has submitted to the court a report stating that in his opinion a fraud has been committed by that officer of the company in relation to the company since its formation (or that person in the promotion or formation of the company).

Sanctions

7.4.2 The court may issue a warrant for the arrest of a person or officer who is to be subject to a public examination on proof of service of the notice informing such person of the time and place for the examination, if:

(a) such officer or person fails to attend the examination and no good cause is shown by him for such failure; or

¹²⁰ Section 190(5) CO.

- (b) the Official Receiver or liquidator can satisfy the court that such officer or person has or is about to abscond before the hearing with a view to avoiding examination.¹¹⁸

7.5 Company's statement of affairs¹¹⁹

7.5.1 Where a winding-up order has been made or a provisional liquidator has been appointed, either the liquidator or provisional liquidator may require certain people to submit and verify by affidavit a statement of affairs of the company. The statement must show the particulars of assets, debts, liabilities, names, addresses and occupations of its creditors, securities held by the company and any other information required by the liquidator or provisional liquidator. Any of the following persons may be required to provide and verify such statements:

- (a) current or former directors or officers 4 of the company;
- (b) any person who has taken part in the formation of the company at any time within one year before the relevant date;
- (c) any current employee of the company (or any person employed by the company within the previous 12 months) who the liquidator or provisional liquidator considers to be capable of giving the information; and
- (d) any person who is or has been within that year officers of, or in the employment of, a company which is, or within that year was, an officer of the company.

Sanction

7.5.2 Any person who defaults in complying with the requirements of this provision commits an offence and is liable for a fine of up to HK$50,000.¹²⁰ In addition, it is also an offence to make any material omission in the statement of affairs and such person will be liable to a fine and imprisonment.¹²¹

7.6 Sanction for failing to discover the company's property and papers¹²²

7.6.1 Section 271 (Offences by officers of companies in liquidation) creates various offences for past and present officers of a company, whether the action occurred prior to or during the course of the winding-up of the company, if such officer:

- (a) fails to the best of his knowledge and belief to disclose to the liquidator the property of the company and when any property was disposed of;¹²³
- (b) fails to deliver up the liquidator all property of the company in his custody or control, including books and papers;¹²⁴

¹²⁷ For further information on Hong Kong's BORO see: Jump starting the Hong Kong Bill of Rights in its Second Decade? The Relevance of International and Comparative Jurisprudence by Andrew Brynes, HKU.

- (c) fails for a period of one month to inform the liquidator of any debt known or believed by that person to be false which has been submitted for proof in the liquidation;¹²⁵ or
- (d) after the commencement of the winding-up, prevents production of books and papers relating to the company's property affairs.¹²⁶

7.7 Human rights

- 7.7.1 The Hong Kong Bill of Rights Ordinance (BORO) came into effect on 8th June, 1991. It embodied the provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR) as applied to Hong Kong. The Basic Law of Hong Kong (Article 39) provides that the rights and freedoms enjoyed by Hong Kong residents shall not be restricted unless prescribed by law, and that such restriction shall not contravene the provisions in the ICCPR and International Covenant on Economic Social and Cultural Rights (ICESCR). Despite various amendments made to the BORO at the time of the handover in 1997 (mainly to ensure that the BORO did not prevail over the Basic Law), the court has regarded the BORO as intended to implement the ICCPR and provide a yardstick against which to test the validity of Hong Kong law.
- 7.7.2 The directors and others identified in question 3 will have rights under the BORO. In an insolvency context, a director or other person under BORO will be able to:
 - (a) require that a particular provision of insolvency law is construed in accordance with those rights or otherwise declared incompatible; or
 - (b) claim that the insolvency practitioner is a public authority and is acting unlawfully in breach of the BORO.
- 7.7.3 The application of the BORO will have the following effects:
 - (c) Legislation - primary and subordinate legislation will be read in a way that is compatible with the BORO. If this is not possible, the court may make a declaration of incompatibility. In the case of subordinate legislation, the court may give relief against any incompatibility provided that this is not inconsistent with the primary legislation; and
 - (d) Public authorities and the Government - it will be unlawful for public authorities and the Government (and any person or corporate entity acting on its behalf) to act in a way which is incompatible with a person's rights under the BORO. A victim may bring proceedings for judicial review or damages. The nature of the act must be public to be challenged under the BORO. As officers of the court, the Official Receiver, liquidators and provisional liquidators are all "public authorities" when carrying out functions of a public nature.

¹²⁹ Section 4(1) of the Limitation Ordinance (Cap.347).

7.7.4 It should be noted that the court's interpretation of the BORO takes precedence over the rights afforded to individuals under the ICCPR and, in addition, the rights under the BORO are not absolute as they may be limited by authorised interference by the government on the grounds of necessity. There have been few successful challenges under the BORO since 1997 and they have been limited to Hong Kong's criminal and administrative law.¹²⁷

7.7.5 Those rights under the BORO which may be of some relevance are as follows:

(a) Article 10 - Right to a fair trial

All persons shall be equal before the courts and tribunals. In the determination of any criminal charge against him, or of his rights and obligations in a suit at law, everyone shall be entitled to a fair and public hearing by a competent, independent and impartial tribunal established by law. The press and the public may be excluded from all or part of a trial for reasons of morals, public order (order public) or national security in a democratic society, or when the interest of the private lives of the parties so requires, or to the extent strictly necessary in the opinion of the court in special circumstances where publicity would prejudice the interests of justice; but any judgment rendered in a criminal case or in a suit at law shall be made public except where the interest of juvenile persons otherwise requires or the proceedings concern matrimonial disputes or the guardianship of children.

The scope of this Article is limited to criminal proceedings.

(b) Article 4 - No slavery or servitude

No one shall be required to perform forced or compulsory labour with the exception of any work or service which forms part of the civil obligations. An argument that work that a director may be required to do in complying with obligations to co-operate with an investigation into the company's affairs following its insolvency is forced labour, contrary to Article 4, is unlikely to succeed as the duties of co-operation are most likely to be viewed as part of a directors' normal civic obligations.

(c) Article 8 - Protection of privacy, family, home, correspondence, honour and reputation

This provides that no-one shall be subjected to arbitrary or unlawful interference with his privacy and correspondence. This article may give grounds for challenge where the investigation intrudes into the director's personal correspondence. The threshold of 'arbitrary' means that the interests of creditors are likely to prevail over most arguments that any examination or investigation is in breach of this article.

QUESTION 8

8. Appeals and limitation periods

- (a) What limitation period, if any, will apply to actions brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3) in connection with the offences identified in question 2?
- (b) Please indicate whether an appeal is available from the decision of the lower courts.

8.1 Limitation periods

- (a) Criminal proceedings

Information or complaints relating to offences under the Companies Ordinance identified in question 2 may be tried if they are laid or made at any time within three years after the commission of the offence and within 12 months after the date on which evidence sufficient in the opinion of the Secretary of Justice (as evidenced by a certificate of the Secretary of Justice) to justify the proceedings comes into his knowledge.¹²⁸

- (b) Civil actions

- (i) In relation to fraudulent trading the limitation period is generally six years from the date on which the cause of action accrued.¹²⁹
- (ii) In relation to breaches of fiduciary duties or misfeasance by directors the limitation period is generally six years from the date on which the cause of action accrued.¹³⁰ No limitation period will apply if it is an action in respect of a fraudulent breach of trust or to recover trust property or the proceeds of trust property which have been retained by a director or received by him and converted to his own use.¹³¹ English case law (which a Hong Kong court would consider persuasive) has interpreted this widely so as to include the use of trust proceeds by a director for the benefit of a company he indirectly controls.¹³²

¹³³ Section 4(1) of the Limitation Ordinance (Cap.347) in the case of liability founded in tort. In an action based on negligence, the time limit may be extended under section 31 of the Limitation Ordinance in the event that the facts relevant to the cause of action were not known at the date on which it accrued. The extension allowed under this section is a further three-year period from the date on which the claimant had both the

- (iii) In relation to breaches of common law duties of skill and care by directors, the limitation period is also six years from the date on which the cause of action accrued.¹³³
- (iv) In relation to any limitation period prescribed by the Limitation Ordinance (Cap.347) including those applicable to sub-paragraphs (b)(i) to (iii) above, if:
 - (1) there has been fraud by the defendant; or
 - (2) the plaintiff's right of action has been deliberately concealed from him by the defendant, the limitation period shall not begin to run until the plaintiff has discovered the fraud or concealment or could with reasonable diligence have discovered it.¹³⁴
- (v) The limitation period applying to disqualification applications pursued under section 168H of the CO (Cap.32) is four years from the date on which the winding up of the company commenced or is deemed to have commenced, or in the case of a company that goes into receivership, the date on which the receiver vacated his office.¹³⁵ The court enjoys a discretion, however, to extend this period which may be exercised in circumstances where, for example, the delay is attributable to the failure of the director to cooperate, the charges laid against the director are serious, there is a public interest in ensuring that the application is pursued or where the director would not suffer any specific prejudice as a result of the delay.¹³⁶ In exercising its discretion, the court will have to balance the public interest with the legitimate interest of the director and the possible prejudice which he might suffer if an extension were granted.
- (vi) An application to the court based on unfair preference shall only be made with regard to any act made or done by or against a company within six months, or in the case of an unfair preference made in favour of an associate¹³⁷ of the company, two years, before the commencement of its winding-up.¹³⁸ There is otherwise no limitation period for making such an application to the court.

knowledge required to bring the claim and the right to do so. This is subject to a long stop under section 32 of the Limitation Ordinance which provides that no action shall be brought in respect of a negligence claim more than 15 years after the date on which the act of negligence relied upon occurred.

8.2 Appeals

(a) Criminal appeals

- (i) The Magistrates' Court, the District Court¹³⁹ and the Court of First Instance¹⁴⁰ each have criminal jurisdiction. Each have different sentencing powers. All summary offences may be tried in the Magistrates' Court; only rarely will they be tried in the District Court.
- (ii) While a Magistrate may, upon the application of a party, or of his or her own motion, review his or her decision in a matter which he or she has power to determine in a summary way,¹⁴¹ all appeals from a Magistrate's decision are heard in the Court of First Instance.¹⁴²
- (iii) If a party believes that a decision of the Magistrate in respect of a conviction, order, determination or other proceedings which the Magistrate has power to decide in a summary way is erroneous in point of law, or is in excess of the Magistrate's jurisdiction¹⁴³, then that party may request the Magistrate to state and sign a case for the opinion of a judge of the Court of First Instance.¹⁴⁴ Leave of the court is not required for this procedure to be invoked.
- (iv) An appeal against any conviction, order or determination of a Magistrate by a person who did not plead guilty or admit the truth of an information or complaint may be made to a judge in the Court of First Instance¹⁴⁵ by giving the Magistrate's clerk notice in writing.¹⁴⁶ No leave of the court is required for such an appeal to be brought.
- (v) An appeal against a sentence passed by a Magistrate¹⁴⁷ (except where the sentence is one fixed by law) may be made to a judge in the Court of First Instance by giving the Magistrate's clerk a notice in writing.¹⁴⁸ No leave of court is required for such an appeal to be brought.
- (vi) A defendant may appeal to the Court of Appeal against his conviction by either the District Court¹⁴⁹ or the Court of First Instance:¹⁵⁰

- (1) as of right on any ground which involves a question of law; and
 - (2) with leave of the Court of Appeal, on any ground which involves a question of fact, a mixed question of law and fact or on any other ground.¹⁵¹
- (vii) A person convicted of an offence on indictment by the District Court or the Court of First Instance may appeal to the Court of Appeal against any sentence (except where the sentence is one fixed by law) passed on him.¹⁵² Where a person is not convicted on indictment, he may still appeal to the Court of Appeal if he is sentenced to imprisonment for a term of six months or more, or if the sentence is one which the court convicting him had no power to pass.¹⁵³ An appeal in these cases may only be brought with the leave of the Court of Appeal.¹⁵⁴
 - (viii) The Secretary of Justice may appeal to the Court of Appeal against a verdict or order of acquittal of the District Court¹⁵⁵ based only on matters of law. No leave of court is required for such an appeal to be brought.
 - (ix) The Secretary of Justice may, with leave of the Court of Appeal, apply to the Court of Appeal for the review of any sentence (except where the sentence is one fixed by law) passed by the District Court or the Court of First Instance on the grounds that the sentence is not authorised by law, is wrong in principle and/or is manifestly excessive or manifestly inadequate.¹⁵⁶
 - (x) There may be an appeal to the Court of Final Appeal from any final decision of the Court of Appeal or the Court of First Instance (if no appeal lies to the Court of Appeal).¹⁵⁷ Leave to appeal is required from the court of Final Appeal.¹⁵⁸ Leave will not be granted unless a point of law of great and general importance is involved or where substantial and grave injustice has been done.¹⁵⁹
- (b) Civil appeals
- (i) Both the District Court¹⁶⁰ and the Court of First Instance¹⁶¹ exercise civil jurisdiction. The jurisdiction to wind up a company is vested in the Court of First Instance.¹⁶²

- (ii) An appeal from a decision, judgment or order of the District Court or the Court of First Instance is heard in the Court of Appeal (subject to certain exceptions)¹⁶³. While an appeal from the Court of First Instance is available to the parties as of right,¹⁶⁴ an appeal from the District Court can generally only be made with leave.¹⁶⁵
- (iii) An appeal from the Court of Appeal shall lie to the Court of Final Appeal.¹⁶⁶ Parties may appeal to the Court of Final Appeal as of right if the matter in dispute or the claim on appeal amounts to or is of the value of HK$1,000,000 or more.¹⁶⁷ An appeal may be permitted to be made to the Court of Final Appeal at the discretion of the Court of Appeal or the Court of Final Appeal if in the opinion of the Court of Appeal or the Court of Final Appeal (as the case may be) the question involved in the appeal is one which, by reason of its great general or public importance, or otherwise, ought to be submitted to the court of Final Appeal for decision.¹⁶⁸

9. Foreign corporations

Do the legal provisions and procedures outlined above apply to both domestic and foreign corporations?

9.1 Introduction

Part X of the CO deals with the winding up of unregistered companies. A 1997 amendment to section 326 of the CO clarified long-standing confusion as to the definition of “unregistered company” by stating that it includes a non-Hong Kong company that is registered under Part XI of the CO.¹⁶⁹

9.2 Winding up unregistered companies

Section 327 of the CO provides that any unregistered company may be wound up under the CO and that all of the provisions of the CO with respect to winding-up apply to unregistered companies. The primary exception is that no unregistered company may be wound up voluntarily.¹⁷⁰ to the rule, namely where a person is found liable in contempt of court or for rescuing goods seized in execution or under a distress for rent, or where that person is made subject to an order for arrest or imprisonment for the enforcement of a judgement.

¹⁶⁶ Section 22 of the Hong Kong Court of Final Appeal Ordinance (Cap.484); an appeal to the court of Final Appeal shall only be made with leave of the Court of Appeal or the court of Final Appeal, provided that where an appeal lies as of right, leave to appeal shall not be refused (section 23 of the Hong Kong Court of Final Appeal Ordinance (Cap.484)).

¹⁶⁷ Section 22(1)(a) of the Hong Kong Court of Final Appeal Ordinance (Cap.484).

¹⁶⁸ Section 22(1)(b) of the Hong Kong Court of Final Appeal Ordinance (Cap.484).

¹⁷² Including the classic common law provision of failure to satisfy a statutory demand.

¹⁷³ In Re Irish Shipping Ltd [1985] HKLR 437, the relevant company did not have any assets in the jurisdiction at the time of presentation of the petition however it did have a boat which arrived in Hong Kong in time for

The circumstances in which an unregistered company may be wound up are:

- (a) if the company is dissolved, or has ceased to carry on business, or is carrying on business only for the purpose of winding up its affairs;
- (b) if the company is unable to pay its debts; and
- (c) if the court is of the opinion that it is just and equitable that the company should be wound up.¹⁷¹

Section 327(4) sets out the circumstances in which an unregistered company will be deemed unable to pay its debts.¹⁷²

9.3 Exercise of discretion

9.3.1 The court will not assume jurisdiction to wind up foreign companies in all circumstances but has developed certain tests to assist the court in deciding whether to exercise the discretion. These include:

- (a) assets which are located in Hong Kong;¹⁷³
- (b) a place of business which is located in Hong Kong; or
- (c) the debt upon which the petition is founded was incurred in Hong Kong.

9.3.2 It may also be sufficient to demonstrate that there will be some benefit which accrues to the petitioning creditor or that one or more persons interested in the distribution of the company's assets are persons over whom the court can exercise jurisdiction.

9.4 Application to foreign directors

9.4.1 As stated above, all of the provisions relating to winding up in the CO relate to unregistered companies which are being wound up. English courts have held that the English court has jurisdiction in connection with an application relating to fraudulent trading being made against foreign directors.¹⁷⁴ This will be the case even where the relevant foreign jurisdiction has no equivalent provision although the English court would take into account the usual standard of care and duties expected of directors in the place of incorporation of the company before making an order. The same principle extends to other provisions relevant to directors. The approach of the English court would be highly persuasive in Hong Kong.

9.4.2 Other provisions in the CO relating to directors such as those relating to the provision of information and disqualification also relate to directors of unregistered companies, subject to the considerations set out above, regardless of domicile.

QUESTION 10

10. Insurance

Is directors' and officers' insurance available in your jurisdiction? If so, to what extent will the availability of such insurance provide effective protection to directors against personal liability which may arise in connection with the issues raised in questions 1-9 above?

10.1 Nature of directors' duties

The general duties applicable to the conduct of every director and the circumstances in which personal liability may arise during the "twilight period" are considered above.

10.2 Indemnification

- 10.2.1 At common law, a director as agent or trustee of a company is entitled to indemnification for acts carried out on behalf of the company where he is acting within the powers conferred upon him.
- 10.2.2 That said, the scope of the indemnities a company can make available to a director is restricted by section 165 of the CO. Any provision (whether contained in the company's articles or in any contract with the company or otherwise) exempting any officer of the company (which means directors (and de facto directors), managers or secretaries (see section 3.3 above)) or any person employed by the company as auditor from, or indemnifying him against, any liability to the company or any related company that by virtue of any rule of law would otherwise attach to him in respect of any negligence, default, breach of duty or breach of trust of which he may be guilty in relation to the company is void (subsection (1) of section 165).

10.3 The availability of D&O liability insurance

- 10.3.1 Section 165 was previously viewed as capable of voiding Directors' and Officers' (D&O) liability insurance cover for directors, and thereby denying directors the benefit of insurance cover against negligence taken out by their company (when the same protection is generally available to other professionals). New wording in section 165(3), added with effect from 13th February, 2004, makes it clear that D&O liability insurance is permitted. The new subsection provides that:

"A company may purchase and maintain for any officer of the company, or any person employed by the company as auditor:

- (a) insurance against any liability to the company, a related company or any other party in respect of any negligence, default, breach of duty or breach of trust (save for fraud) of which he may be guilty in relation to the company or a related company; and

- (b) insurance against any liability incurred by him in defending any proceedings, whether civil or criminal, taken against him for any negligence, default, breach of duty or breach of trust (including fraud) of which he may be guilty in relation to the company or a related company.” (section 165 (3)).
- 10.3.2 The CO also specifically permits a company to indemnify an officer or auditor against the liability incurred by him in defending civil or criminal proceedings in which judgment is given in his favour or in which he is acquitted (section 165(2)(a)).
- 10.3.3 It also permits an indemnity to operate if the court grants relief to the director for breach of trust, duty, negligence and default (section 165(2) (b)). Section 358 of the CO gives a general power to a court to relieve a director from liability for negligence, default, breach of duty or breach of trust if it appears to the court that the director or officer concerned has acted honestly and reasonably and having regard to all the circumstances of the case he ought fairly to be excused wholly or partly from his liability.

10.4 Nature of D&O liability insurance

- 10.4.1 D&O liability insurance offers protection to directors and officers by covering them against civil liability and their defence costs for civil and criminal claims for wrongful acts (provided, in the latter case, they are found not guilty). The insurance will indemnify the directors for liabilities arising from acts committed in their capacity as directors and the cover provided will be subject to certain terms, conditions and exclusions. Following the changes outlined above to the CO, section 165 now allows companies in Hong Kong to obtain insurance for directors and officers in respect of effectively all matters other than dishonesty, criminal penalties and claims by the company itself. This is subject to the following.
- 10.4.2 Although section 165(3) allows for an indemnity to be given to a director for the costs of defending proceedings in which it is alleged he acted fraudulently, it does not allow a director to be indemnified in relation to any personal liability the director may be found to have as a consequence of a finding of fraud. D&O insurers in practice and on grounds of public policy, always exclude, in any event, their liability to indemnify against any loss resulting from fraud.
- 10.4.3 Considering, however, that most claims for indemnity under D&O liability insurance in Hong Kong are for the provision of defence costs to assist directors to fund the cost of defending litigation against them, the ability to insure against defence costs is a significant protection for directors.
- 10.4.4 Section 165(3) also removed the requirement that the director against which the claim is made must be dismissed, or that he must first be acquitted, before cover could be provided. This means that defence costs incurred in negotiating settlements (before the outcome of a trial) may now be advanced (depending on the specific terms of the policy).

10.5 Claims generally covered by D&O policies

- 10.5.1 D&O liability insurance will normally cover liabilities arising out of “wrongful” acts or omissions. This will include breaches of contract, torts, breaches of statutory duty and (in certain circumstances) breaches of fiduciary duty (although claims brought by the company itself will not be covered by insurance).
- 10.5.2 In all cases where insurance coverage exists, there will be no coverage for dishonesty or fraud. No insurance offers protection for fraudulent, dishonest or criminal acts committed by directors.
- 10.5.3 In cases of criminal liability, defence costs will be covered provided the director is not convicted of the offence. Hence, fines incurred by directors by virtue of their breaches of statutory duties will not be covered by the policy, but the costs for defending such criminal claims will be covered if the director is acquitted.
- 10.5.4 There is no legislation in Hong Kong relating to the insurability of punitive damages. It is not clear whether punitive damages are recoverable from an insurer, although there is an authority in the UK which suggests that they are recoverable.¹⁷⁵ Most standard D&O policies would, however, exclude this type of damages.
- 10.5.5 Claims brought by the company will not be covered but claims by aggrieved (usually minority) shareholders and liquidators may be covered, depending on the wording of the specific policy.
- 10.5.6 Employment claims are generally excluded (but separate employment practice liability cover can be purchased).
- 10.5.7 The following is an executive summary of the types of duties generally imposed on directors, the manner in which they incur liability and whether insurance would be available in principle.

Type of claim	Civil/Criminal	Insurance available in principle?	Potential liability?
Breach of duty of skill and care	Civil	Yes	Loss suffered
Breach of fiduciary duty e.g. duty to act in best interests of company etc.	Civil	Yes, but not available to cover claims brought by company	Loss suffered
Employment claims, e.g. sexual discrimination	Civil	Generally excluded	Recent examples include US$100m (for Cathay pilots) and HK$39m (for Cap Gemini employee)
Contract claims	Civil	Yes	Loss suffered
Tort claim, e.g. misrepresentation	Civil	Yes	Loss suffered
Keeping of books/records	Criminal		12 months prison Fine: HK$300,000
Misleading statements to auditors	Criminal	No	2 years prison Fine: HK$150,000
Type of claim Companies Ordinance claims:	Civil/Criminal	Insurance available in principle?	Potential liability?
Misleading statements in prospectus	Criminal	No	3 years prison Fine: HK$700,000
Failure to disclose material interest in contract	Criminal	No	Fine: HK$50,000
Granting of loan/guarantee to director	Criminal	No	2 years prison Fine: HK$150,000
Disposal of assets, breach of restrictions	Criminal	No	6 months prison Fine: HK$50,000
Non-disclosure of interests	Criminal	No	2 years prison Fine: HK$100,000
Misrepresentation	Criminal	No	7 years prison Fine: HK$1 million
	Civil	Yes, provided no fraud

Type of claim Companies Ordinance claims:	Civil/Criminal	Insurance available in principle?	Potential liability?
False/Misleading public communications	Civil	Yes, provided no fraud
Market misconduct	Criminal		10 years prison Fine: HK$10 million

Air pollution	Criminal	No	12 months prison Fine: HK$500,000
Unlawful waster disposal	Criminal	No	2 years prison Fine: HK$500,000
Water pollution	Criminal	No	2 years prison Fine: HK$1 million
Carrying out projects without environmental permit	Criminal	No	2 years prison Fine: HK$5 million
Noise pollution	Criminal	No	2 years prison Fine: HK$5 million
Signing cheques without specifying "for and on behalf of CLP"	Civil	Yes	Value of cheque
Carrying on business for fraudulent purpose	Civil Criminal	No	Value of debts
Corporate manslaughter	Criminal	No	Prison - variable
Contempt of court	Criminal	No	Fine-possibly c.HK$20,000
Liability under US securities laws	Civil ¹⁷⁶	Unlikely given nature of offence

10.6 Coverage afforded under D&O liability insurance policies

10.6.1 This is normally divided into two sections:

- (a) cover for the directors and officers (for an individual director there are a number of advantages in having a policy effected specifically for that director's own liability: the policy is unlikely to be invalidated by the actions of other members of the board of a company (by for example, failure to disclose all material facts in the policy application form); his personal policy may not be exhausted by claims against other members of the board; the insured can ensure his own policy does not lapse and his cover extends to a period beyond his departure from the company; there are no privity of contract concerns as to whether a director can claim on the company policy which he is not a party to); and
- (b) company reimbursement. This indemnifies the company against matters for which the company is permitted to indemnify the director or officer under the articles of association to indemnify its directors and under the exception to section 165.

10.6.2 In addition, "entity coverage" may be provided in D&O liability insurance. This provides for the company to be insured in its own right for loss it may suffer. In the event of the company becoming insolvent, however, directors may face opposition from shareholders, a liquidator or trustee who consider that the limit of indemnity available under the D&O liability insurance (paid for by a company) represents a finite asset of the company which should not be eroded by the advancement of defence costs to a director.¹⁷⁷

10.7 How the D&O policy works

10.7.1 There are policy and practical issues which must be considered, as well as steps which must be taken to effect D&O liability insurance. These include:

- (a) The objects of the company must permit the company to obtain such insurance. Power should be granted to the directors in the articles to effect such insurance. Because the policy is a contract of the company, the directors must disclose their interest under the CO. The director should be authorised to vote notwithstanding this interest. The company must disclose the fact that it purchases or maintains D&O liability insurance in its annual report and accounts.
- (b) The cover offered by the policy should be checked in advance. It is very important to compare policies to note difference in cover (particularly the scope of actions and potential liabilities covered by the policy; the conditions and exclusions (for example, US business); the definition of "wrongful acts" and "defence costs"; the financial limit on indemnities to claimants and whether for example, defence costs are in addition; any excess payable by the insured or the company in the event of a claim (for example, whether the excess payable by each individual director, or the limit on liability per loss and/or per aggregate for policy period); the period for which the policy is operative; any pending claims in the case of a blanket policy; whether the director in the case of a company policy has the power to enforce the insurance contract himself; the conditions and exclusions; contribution condition; outside directorships.)

- (c) A contract of insurance is based upon the doctrine of utmost good faith. It is therefore critical that all relevant facts are disclosed to the insurer at the time the D&O liability policy is effected, that the insurer has correctly interpreted that information and that he has carried out adequate due diligence to ensure that there are no grounds on which the policy could be vitiated. Proper enquiries should be carried out of all relevant personnel (including directors) to ensure that this disclosure has been adequately made.
- (d) The position on insolvency of the company should be checked, specifically whether the policy will automatically lapse or continue until its natural expiry.

QUESTION 11

11. How safe is it for directors and others to incur further credit during the twilight period?

- 11.1 As mentioned in paragraph 2.2 above, legislation which would impose liability for insolvent trading has yet to be enacted in Hong Kong. In the absence of such legislation, it is not necessary for directors to analyse, when incurring credit, whether the company is insolvent and has any prospect of avoiding insolvent liquidation. Incurring credit during the twilight period is not, therefore, as hazardous as it may be in other jurisdictions, such as England. Even in the absence of insolvent trading legislation, however, directors must have regard to the interests of creditors if the company is or may become insolvent. Conceivably the incurring of further credit which cannot be satisfied in full when due and which results in an inability to satisfy the claims of other creditors in full may result in a claim by a liquidator for damages for breach of duty.
- 11.2 A reckless incurring of credit by directors during the twilight period, without proper consideration of the prospects of repayment in full, may lead to disqualification proceedings.

In order to be free of the risk of personal liability or vulnerability to disqualification proceedings, a director should not incur credit during the twilight period unless, following proper consideration, he is satisfied that there is a reasonable prospect that the credit can be discharged when due in full. Provided that a director acts honestly and in good faith, however, in the absence of insolvent trading legislation in Hong Kong it is unlikely that the incurring of credit during the twilight period will result in the director being personally liable or in disqualification.

QUESTION 1

1. The start and duration of the “twilight” period

1.1 Overview

- 1.1.1 Under Indian Law, the Sick Industrial Companies (Special Provisions) Act, 1985 (SICA) deals with re-organisation of companies and the Companies Act, 1956 (the ‘1956 Act’) provides for their liquidation. Therefore, the length of the twilight period must be considered separately in the context of each. In December 2002, the Indian Parliament passed the Companies (Second Amendment) Act, 2002 (the Second Amendment) paving the way for a new insolvency regime providing for a composite law dealing with both re-organisation and liquidation proceedings. A new Part VIA was inserted in the 1956 Act to transplant provisions of SICA. However, the Second Amendment has yet to be implemented apart from limited provisions facilitating the setting up of the National Company Law Tribunal (the NCLT) which are themselves the subject of challenge before Supreme Court of India. Consequently, the repeal of SICA remains unnotified. Until the NCLT is constituted, the old regime continues in operation. In October 2008, the Indian Government introduced the Companies Bill 2008 which includes a new insolvency law. The Bill has been referred to the select committee of Parliament for deliberation.
- 1.1.2 This chapter covers the proposed new law under the Second Amendment, although once implemented, all references in this chapter to the words “court” and “BIFR” (see below) will then have to be read as “NCLT”.

1.2 Sick Industrial Companies (Special Provisions) Act, 1985 (SICA)

- 1.2.1 Under SICA, no definite period has been set during which transactions entered into by a company are vulnerable to attack or liable to give rise to personal liability on the part of directors and/or others involved in the management of the company. The period and liability of the directors and other officers will vary depending upon the factors discussed below.
- 1.2.2 The board of directors of a company is required to intimate to the Board for Industrial and Financial Reconstruction (the ‘BIFR’) when 50 per cent of the company’s net worth is eroded at the end of a financial year¹. In this event, the BIFR will assume jurisdiction and will continue to have jurisdiction until (i) in cases where a scheme for rehabilitation is sanctioned, the scheme is implemented; and (ii) in cases where the BIFR forms the opinion that the company cannot be revived and it is just and equitable that it be wound up, the recommendation to wind up is sent to the High Court concerned. The twilight period could, therefore, be said to start when the net worth of the company falls below 50 per cent and comes to an end when BIFR ceases to have jurisdiction.

- 1.2.3 If the company fails to notify the BIFR as above, all the directors and other officers are liable to imprisonment of not less than six months and up to two years and a fine.²

1.3 Companies Act, 1956 (1956 Act)

- 1.3.1 In a case where winding up proceedings are presented under the 1956 Act (excluding those which are taken up on the recommendation of BIFR under SICA), the twilight period during which transactions entered into by the company may be vulnerable to attack is easier to determine.

Fraudulent preference³

- 1.3.2 Any transfer of property, movable or immovable, delivery of goods, payment, execution or other act relating to property made, taken or done by or against a company within the six months before the commencement of its winding up which, had it been made, taken or done by or against an individual within the three months before the presentation of an insolvency petition on which he is adjudged insolvent and which would be deemed in the individual's insolvency a fraudulent preference, shall be deemed a fraudulent preference and be invalid accordingly. There must have been fraudulent intent.

Formal insolvency proceedings commence when a winding up petition is admitted. Mere presentation of a winding up petition and/or notice of court to the company sought to be wound up does not constitute the initiation of winding up proceedings.

Where anything is made, taken or done which prefers a person interested in property mortgaged or charged to secure the company's debt, the person preferred is subjected to the same liabilities and rights as if he had undertaken to be personally liable as surety for the debt, to the extent of the mortgage or charge on the property or the value of his interest, whichever is less. The value of the person's interest is determined as the date of the transaction constituting the fraudulent preference and is determined as if the interest were free of all encumbrances other than those to which the mortgage or charge for the company's debt was then subject.

This provision applies, with the necessary modifications, in relation to transactions other than the payment of money as it applies in relation to payments of money.

Avoidance of voluntary transfer⁴

- 1.3.3 Any transfer of property, movable or immovable, or any delivery of goods made by a company, which is not a transfer or delivery made in the ordinary course of its business or in favour of a purchaser or encumbrancer in good faith, even though made for valuable consideration, shall, if made within the period of one year before the presentation of a petition for winding up by or subject to the supervision of the court or the passing of a resolution for voluntary winding up of the company, be void against the liquidator.

Transfer for benefit of all creditors to be void⁵

- 1.3.4 Any transfer or assignment by a company of all its property to a trustee for the benefit of all its creditors is void. No time period is prescribed in the 1956 Act as it is a prohibitive provision and such a transfer would be void whenever made.

Effect of floating charge⁶

- 1.3.5 Where a company is being wound up, a floating charge on the undertaking or property of the company created within the twelve months immediately preceding the commencement of the winding up is, unless it is proved that immediately after the creation of the charge the company was solvent, invalid except to the amount of any cash paid to the company at the time of, or subsequently to the creation of, and in consideration for, the charge, together with interest thereon.

Avoidance of transfers, etc., after commencement of voluntary winding up

- 1.3.6 In the case of a voluntary winding up, any transfer of shares in the company, not being a transfer made to or with the sanction of the liquidator, and any alteration in the status of the members of the company, made after the commencement of the winding up, shall, unless the court otherwise orders, be void.

1.4 Second Amendment

- 1.4.1 Part VIA of the 1956 Act⁷ (the new composite insolvency regime) does not define any definite period during which transactions entered into by a company are vulnerable to attack or are liable to give rise to personal liability on the part of directors and/or others involved in the management of the company. The jurisdiction of the NCLT can be invoked for rehabilitation measures if there is erosion of 50 per cent or more of the company's average net worth at the end of a financial year during the preceding four years or when the company has failed to pay its debts on demand made in writing by the creditor(s) within any three consecutive quarters). Jurisdiction ceases upon either the successful implementation of a rehabilitation scheme, if sanctioned, or upon the winding up of the company. Therefore, the twilight period can be stated to commence on erosion of 50 per cent network in the first of the four preceding consecutive years and to end on the restoration to 100 per cent network or the winding up of the company. It is however, not clear whether NCLT would have jurisdiction to question transactions and actions in all the four years.

⁷ Inserted by the Second Amendment.

QUESTION 2

2. Actions potentially giving rise to liability for directors

- (a) In respect of which acts during the “twilight” period may a director be held personally liable or which may otherwise have adverse consequences for him?
- (b) In relation to each act identified in (a) above:
 - (i) is any resulting liability against a director civil, criminal or both?;
 - (ii) can a director be made personally liable in respect of the whole loss caused to the company or the deficit to creditors?;
 - (iii) will liability attach to individual directors in proportion to their specific involvement?;
 - (iv) is there a specified period before commencement of a subsequent insolvency procedure within which the relevant act must have been undertaken in order for liability to attach to a director?; and
 - (v) what defences, if any, will be available in relation to each offence?

Insolvency – related liability

Directors may find themselves liable for acts which take place during the “twilight” period as a consequence of the specific insolvency-related offences provided for by statute or as a consequence of the general fiduciary, common law and in some cases, statutory duties imposed on a director, irrespective of the company’s insolvency, but which may take on particular significance if a company finds itself in financial difficulties.

2.1 Misconduct by officers of companies in liquidation⁸

2.1.1 A past or present officer of a company commits an offence if he:

- (a) does not, to the best of his knowledge and belief, fully and truly discover to the liquidator all the property, movable and immovable, of the company, how, to whom, for what consideration and when it was disposed, except where it has been disposed of in the ordinary course of business;
- (b) does not deliver up to the liquidator, or as he directs, all movable and immovable property of the company in his custody or under his control, and which he is required by law to deliver up;

⁸ Section 538 1956 Act.

- (c) does not deliver up to the liquidator, or as he directs, all books and papers of the company in his custody or under his control and which he is required by law to deliver up;
- (d) within the twelve months before the commencement of the winding up or at any time thereafter, conceals any property of the company valued at one hundred rupees or more, or conceals any debt due to or from the company;
- (e) within the twelve months before the commencement of the winding up or at any time thereafter, fraudulently removes any property of the company valued at one hundred rupees or more;
- (f) makes any material omission in any statement relating to the affairs of the company;
- (g) fails to inform the liquidator that a false debt has been proved by any person under the winding up;
- (h) after the commencement of the winding up, prevents the production of any book or paper affecting or relating to the property or affairs of the company;
- (i) within the twelve months before the commencement of the winding up or at any time thereafter, conceals, destroys, mutilates or falsifies or is privy to the concealment, destruction, mutilation or falsification of any book or paper affecting or relating to, the property or affairs of the company;
- (j) within the twelve months before the commencement of the winding up or at any time thereafter makes or is privy to the making of any false entry in any book or paper affecting or relating to the property or affairs of the company;
- (k) within the twelve months before commencement of the winding up or at any time thereafter, fraudulently parts with, alters or makes any omission in, or is privy to the fraudulent parting with, altering or making of any omission in, any book or paper affecting or relating to the property or affairs of the company;
- (l) after the commencement of the winding up or at any meeting of the creditors of the company within the twelve months before the commencement of the winding up, attempts to account for any property of the company by fictitious losses or expenses;
- (m) within the twelve months before the commencement of the winding up or at any time thereafter, by any false representation or other fraud, obtains on credit, for or on behalf of the company, any property which the company does not subsequently pay for;
- (n) within the twelve months before the commencement of the winding up or at any time thereafter, under the pretence that the company is carrying on business, obtains on credit, for or on behalf of the company, any property which the company does not subsequently pay for;

- (o) within the twelve months before the commencement of the winding up or at any time thereafter, pawns, pledges or disposes of any property of the company which has been obtained on credit and has not been paid for unless such pawning, pledging or disposing is in the ordinary course of the business of the company; or
- (p) is guilty of any false representation or other fraud for the purpose of obtaining the consent of the creditors of the company or any of them, to an agreement with reference to the affairs of the company or to the winding up.

2.1.2 If any of the above from (a)-(p) are satisfied:

- (a) Liability under this provision is criminal.
- (b) A person guilty of this offence is liable to imprisonment or a fine or both.
- (c) The gravity of the misconduct will be reflected in the term of imprisonment or the fine imposed. In exercising its punitive jurisdiction, the court(s) do not seek to compensate the company concerned. The offence shall be punishable, in the case of any of those mentioned in sub-paras (m), (n) and (o), with imprisonment for a term of up to five years and/or a fine, and, in the case of any other offence, with imprisonment for a term of up to two years and/or a fine;
- (d) The act in question must have occurred in most of the above cases either:
 - (i) after the commencement of the winding up; or
 - (ii) within the twelve months preceding the commencement of the winding up.
- (e) It shall be a good defence:
 - (i) to a charge under (b), (c), (d), (f), (n) and (o), if the accused proves that he had no intent to defraud; and
 - (ii) to a charge under (a), (h), (i) and (j), if the accused proves that he had no intent to conceal the true state of affairs of the company or to defeat the law.

2.2 Defrauding creditors⁹

2.2.1 An offence is committed by an officer of a company which is subsequently wound up by the court or which subsequently passes a resolution for voluntary winding up, if he:

- (a) has, by false pretence or other fraud, induced any person to give credit to the company;

⁹ Section 540 1956 Act.

- (b) has made or caused to be made any gift or transfer of or charge on or has caused or connived at levying execution against the property of the company with intent to defraud creditors of the company; or
 - (c) has, with intent to defraud creditors of the company, concealed or removed any part of the property of the company since the date of any unsatisfied judgement or order for payment of money obtained against the company, or within the two months prior to that date.
- 2.2.2 (a) Liability under this provision is criminal. Hence, the answers to (b) and (c) are as set out in para 2.1.2 above, except that this offence is punishable with imprisonment for a term of up to two years and a fine.
- (b) There is no set time period. It all depends on whether it was within the knowledge of the officer that the company was bound or likely to go into liquidation.
- (c) Absence of mens rea (i.e. absence of intention to defraud) may be available as a defence.

2.3 Maintenance of improper accounts¹⁰

- 2.3.1 In the course of winding up of a company, if it is shown that proper books of account were not kept by the company, every officer of the company who is in default shall be guilty of the offence under this provision.
- 2.3.2 (a) Liability under this provision is criminal. Hence, the answers to (b) and (c) are as set out in para 2.1.2 above except that this offence is punishable with imprisonment for a term of up to one year.
- (b) The offence must have been committed throughout the two years immediately preceding the commencement of the winding up, or the period between the incorporation of the company and the commencement of the winding up, whichever is shorter.
- (c) It is a defence to show that he acted honestly and that, in the circumstances in which the business of the company was carried on, the default was excusable.

2.4 Falsification of company's books¹¹

- 2.4.1 An offence is committed if any officer or contributory of a company, which is being wound up, with intent to defraud or deceive any person:
- (a) destroys, mutilates, alters, falsifies or secretes, or is privy to the destruction, mutilation, alteration, falsification or secreting of, any books, papers or securities; or
 - (b) makes, or is privy to the making of, any false or fraudulent entry in any register, book of account or document belonging to the company.

¹¹ Section 539 1956 Act.

- 2.4.2 (a) Liability under this provision is criminal. Hence, the answers to (b and (c) are as set out in para 2.1.2 above except that this offence is punishable with imprisonment for a term of up to seven years and a fine.
- (b) This offence applies when the company is being wound up.
- (c) Absence of mens rea (i.e. absence of intention to defraud or deceive any person by virtue of commission of the above acts) is a defence.

2.5 Fraudulent conduct of company's business¹²

- 2.5.1 Officers or persons are guilty of fraudulent conduct of business if, in the course of the winding up of a company, it is found that any business of the company has been carried on with intent to defraud creditors of the company or any other person, or for any fraudulent purpose. Persons engaged in the conduct of business shall be personally responsible, without any limitation of liability, for all or any of the debts or other liabilities of the company.
- 2.5.2 The elements of the concept are therefore:
- (a) there has to be an insolvent liquidation in progress;
 - (b) there has to have been dishonesty in the running of the business;
 - (c) the standard of proof is that of 'beyond reasonable doubt', even in a case of civil liability;
 - (d) there is no hard and fast rule or statutory provision as to the time period within which the act or offence must have been committed. It depends on the nature and circumstances of the individual case, as scrutinised by the courts;
 - (e) it applies to persons who are "knowingly parties" to the fraudulent trading which may be both wider and narrower than the concept of director/shadow director for wrongful trading, but it could, in theory, be wide enough to catch a financier who funded the fraudulent trade knowing that it was being conducted dishonestly.
- 2.5.3 (a) Liability may be criminal or civil.
- (b) The court enjoys a wide discretion to compensate for the loss caused to the company by the director's conduct but it may also include a punitive element in the award of damages made.
 - (c) As indicated in 2.5.3 (b) above, there should be an element of proportionality (in terms of compensation versus punitive damages) albeit the court's discretion is very wide.
 - (d) There is no specified period.

¹² Section 542 1956 Act.

- (e) The main defence is that the party concerned was not dishonest. In practice, the party may be able to admit to incompetence, imprudence or even folly as long as he honestly believed that, for example, any new credit incurred would ultimately be repaid in full.

2.6 Delinquency, breach of trust & misfeasance: Directors and others¹³

2.6.1 Any person who has taken part in the promotion or formation of the company, or any past or present director, manager, liquidator or officer of the company shall be guilty of delinquency, if he:

- (a) has misapplied or retained or become liable or accountable for any money or property of the company; or
- (b) has been guilty of any misfeasance or breach of trust in relation to the company;

2.6.2 (a) Liability under this provision is civil.

- (b) A person guilty of this offence can be compelled by the court to repay or restore the money or property or any part thereof, with interest at such rate as the court thinks just, or to contribute such sum to the assets of the company by way of compensation for the misapplication, retainer, misfeasance or breach of trust, as the court thinks just.
- (c) The court has a wide discretion with respect to the orders it may make under this provision. It is able to apportion the order made against individual directors in proportion to their involvement and culpability.
- (d) Aside from Statute of Limitations considerations, there is no set time period within which the impugned act must have occurred in order for liability to attach. It depends on the nature and circumstances of the individual case, as scrutinised by the courts.
- (e) No specific defences are provided for, although the Registrar of Companies, in making its report, will be required to give the person concerned an opportunity to state his case.

2.7 Misfeasance proceedings¹⁴

2.7.1 An offence is made out, if, in the course of scrutiny or implementation of any revival/rehabilitation scheme or proposal, it appears to the BIFR that any person who has taken part in the promotion, formation or management of the company or its undertaking, including any past or present director, manager or officer or employee of the company:

- (a) has misapplied or retained or become liable or accountable for any money or property of the company; or
- (b) has been guilty of any misfeasance, malfeasance or non-feasance or breach of trust in relation to the company.

¹³ Section 543 1956 Act.

2.7.2 (a) Liability under this provision is civil.

- (b) A person guilty of this offence can be directed by the court to repay or restore the money or property or any part thereof, with or without interest, as it thinks just, or to contribute such sum to the assets of the company or to any person entitled to compensation in respect of the misapplication, retainer, misfeasance or breach of trust as the Tribunal thinks just. The Tribunal may also report the matter to the Central Government for any other action which the Government may deem fit. The officer or other person found guilty of this offence may also be prevented from borrowing any money for the next 10 years.
- (c) The court has a wide discretion with respect to the orders it may make under this provision. It is able to apportion the order made against individual directors in proportion to their involvement and culpability.
- (d) There is no time period during which the impugned act must have occurred in order for liability to attach.
- (e) There is a defence if the person has acted honestly and reasonably and the court concludes that he ought fairly to be excused.

The same offence will be committed under section 424K of the 1956 Act once the Second Amendment is implemented.

2.8 Directors and managers with unlimited liability¹⁵

- 2.8.1 In the winding up of a limited company, any director or manager, whether past or present, whose liability is unlimited, shall, in addition, be liable to make a further contribution as if he were, at the commencement of the winding up, a member of an unlimited company.

Exceptions:

- (a) a past director or manager shall not be liable to make a further contribution if he ceased to hold office a year or more before the commencement of the winding up;
- (b) a past director or manager shall not be liable to make a further contribution in respect of debts or liability of the company incurred or entered into after he ceased to hold office;
- (c) subject to the articles of the company, a director or manager shall not be liable to make such further contribution, unless the court deems it necessary to require the contribution in order to satisfy the debts and liabilities of the company, and the costs, charges and expenses of the winding up.

¹⁵ Section 427 1956 Act.

2.9 Offences under SICA¹⁶

- 2.9.1 If any person violates a scheme sanctioned by the BIFR/AAIFR (Appellate Authority for Industrial and Financial Reconstruction) or an order passed by the BIFR/AAIFR or furnishes a false statement and/or evidence under SICA, he is liable to be punished with imprisonment for a term of up to three years and a fine.

2.10 Offences under Part VIA of the Companies Act, 1956¹⁷

- 2.10.1 Any person who violates any provision of Part VIA of the Act or any scheme or order of the NCLT or the Appellate Tribunal or who furnishes a false statement and/or evidence to the NCLT or attempts to tamper with the records of reference or appeal filed under this Act, shall be punished with imprisonment for a term of three years and a fine.
- 2.10.2 The directors and other officers of every company shall ensure that books of account of the company are completed and audited up to the date of winding up order by the NCLT and submitted to it, failing which such directors and officers shall be liable for punishment for a term not exceeding one year and a fine.

General Liability

2.11 Removal of managerial personnel¹⁸

If any person concerned in the conduct and management of the affairs of a company is or has been guilty of fraud, misfeasance, persistent negligence or default in carrying out his obligations or breach of trust, or the business has been conducted and managed in a manner which is likely to cause, or has caused, serious injury or damage to the interest of the trade, industry or business of the company, or with intent to defraud creditors, members or other persons, or otherwise for a fraudulent or unlawful purpose or in a manner prejudicial to public interest, the Central Government may, in conjunction with the Company Law Board, by order, remove from office any director or other person concerned.

2.12 Reduction in membership¹⁹

If at any time the number of members of a company is reduced, in the case of a public company, below seven or, in the case of a private company, below two and the company carries on business for more than six months while the number is so reduced, every person who is a member of the company and knows of the fact shall be severally liable for all the debts of the company contracted during that time.

2.13 Misdescription of name²⁰

In any contract of a company, if its name is not properly indicated, those responsible shall be personally liable.

¹⁶ Section 33 SICA.

¹⁸ Sections 388B, 388D & 388E 1956 Act.

¹⁹ Section 45 1956 Act.

²⁰ Section 147 1956 Act.

2.14 Fiduciary and common law duties owed to the company

Directors owe a number of fiduciary and common law duties to the company. These include:

- (a) a duty to ensure that the corporate capital is used only for the legitimate business of the company. If any part of it has been diverted to purposes foreign to the company's memorandum, the directors will be personally liable to replace it;
- (b) a duty to act with honesty;
- (c) a duty to account for any profits made;
- (d) a duty not exploit corporate opportunities to their own advantage;
- (e) a duty not to use the company's assets (including business connections, goodwill, trade assets and the list of customers) for the benefit of a rival concern;
- (f) a duty to repay to the company any profit they make on shares in the company; and
- (g) a duty not to use or exploit unpublished and confidential information of the company. The company can ask the director to make good any loss arising as a result of a breach of this duty.

Once the company becomes insolvent, however, the interests of the creditors take priority. Thereafter, the directors' duties are subject to an overriding duty to have regard to the interests of the general body of creditors of the company.

2.15 Disqualification of a director²¹

A person shall not be appointed as a director of a company, if he has been found to be of unsound mind; he is an undischarged insolvent; he has applied to be adjudicated as an insolvent and his application is pending; he has been convicted of an offence involving moral turpitude and sentenced to imprisonment for not less than six months and a period of five years has not elapsed since the expiry of the sentence; he has not paid any call in respect of shares of the company and six months have elapsed from the last day fixed for the payment of the call; or an order disqualifying him from appointment as director has been passed by the court.

²¹ Section 274 1956 Act.

3. Other persons involved with the company's affairs who may become liable in respect of their actions during the "twilight" period

- (a) In addition to the formally appointed directors of the company, can others be held liable in respect of the company's activities during the "twilight" period if the company were to become subject to a formal insolvency procedure?
- (b) In respect of which acts may other persons be held liable and to what extent does the liability of third parties differ from that for directors identified in question 2 above?
- (c) Will liability be limited to that resulting from involvement with a particular transaction or more generally in relation to the overall loss suffered by creditors?

3.1 Overview

- 3.1.1 Most of the offences listed in the answer to question 2 above, for which personal liability may be incurred, apply not only to directors but also 'officers' of the company (sometimes both past and present officers) and, in some cases, to 'managers' of the company.

3.2 Managers and officers

- 3.2.1 A "manager" of a company means an individual (not being the managing agent) who, subject to the superintendence, control and direction of the board of directors, has the management of the whole or substantially the whole of the affairs of the company and includes a director or any other person occupying the position of a manager, by whatever name called, and whether under a contract of service or not.²²
- 3.2.2 An "officer" includes any director, manager or secretary or any person in accordance with whose directions or instructions the board of directors or any one or more of the directors is or are accustomed to act²³ "Secretary" means the person, if any, who is appointed to perform the duties, which may be performed by a secretary.²⁴
- 3.2.3 An officer of the company (regardless of whether he is a director or not) who is in default shall be liable to any punishment or penalty, whether by way of imprisonment, fine or otherwise. The expression "officer who is in default" means any officer of the company who is knowingly guilty of the default, non-compliance, failure, refusal or contravention mentioned or who knowingly and wilfully authorises or permits such default, non-compliance, failure, refusal or contravention.²⁵

²³ Section 2(30) 1956 Act.

²⁴ Section 2(45) 1956 Act.

²⁵ Section 5 1956 Act.

3.3 Nominee and de facto directors

- 3.3.1 (a) A nominee director is not supposed to be in charge of a company's affairs. He is not liable for failures by the company to comply with the 1956 Act or other regulatory laws. Nominee directors are mainly appointed by secured creditors pursuant to the right to appoint a member on the board of funded companies. Such a nominee may be an executive of the secured creditor bank or financial institution or may sometimes be a professional. He becomes an officially appointed director and has voting rights. His main obligation is to ensure fair utilisation and application of the financial assistance lent. He also keeps an eye on the affairs though is neither responsible for nor involved in day to day affairs of the company. Since he is not involved in management, there has been a debate over the liabilities he may incur in case of fraud or wrongful action by the company. There are conflicting views of court on this issue.
- (b) A nominee director suffers from an essential conflict of duty and interest. He owes his duty to the nominator but sits on the board of the company. Problems never arise as long as the interests of the relevant companies are in harmony. But when the interests are in conflict, nominees are placed in a precarious situation.
- 3.3.2 A person who has acted as a director may be regarded as a director even though not validly appointed as one (for example, an executive director). To regard a person as a de facto director there must be conclusive evidence that he was the sole person directing the affairs of the company or that he acted on equal footing with other directors in managing the affairs of the company. A de facto director may be held liable for his actions during the twilight period.

QUESTION 4

4. Counterparties dealing with the company during the twilight period

- (a) From the point of view of a counterparty dealing with the company during the twilight period, what are the potential heads of challenge, which may lead, to transactions with the company being set aside?
- (b) What defences, if any, to the areas of vulnerability identified above will be available to a counterparty seeking to protect a transaction from being attacked?

4.1 Introduction

As in most legal systems, in India too, the legal position is such that it seeks to undo transactions prejudicial to a company and/or which are unfairly beneficial to a counterparty, particularly when they are entered into during the twilight period.

4.2 Summary of heads of challenge

The potential heads of challenge which may lead to transactions being set aside relate to transactions:

- (a) which are at an undervalue;
- (b) which are preferences;
- (c) defrauding creditors;
- (d) which constitute extortionate credit bargains;
- (e) comprising floating charges given for past value;
- (f) involving onerous property;
- (g) dispositions of the company's property made after the commencement of winding-up;
- (h) unregistered charges;
- (i) avoidance of voluntary transfer.

4.3 Transactions at an undervalue

A transaction at an undervalue is not defined anywhere. In ordinary parlance, it could be stated to be one that is entered into at a time when the company is insolvent at an apparently lesser price than it could have attracted otherwise. There is no direct provision dealing with this aspect though it could be stated to fall under fraudulent preference.

Conditions for setting aside a transaction at undervalue

There are no conditions laid down in the 1956 Act, but the sale must have been made during the one-year period prior to the company's insolvency.

The court may not make an order to set aside a transaction at a undervalue if it is satisfied that the company entered into the transaction in good faith and for the purpose of carrying out its business; and that at the time it did so there were reasonable grounds for believing that the transaction would benefit the company and that all possible efforts were made to get the best possible price. The court may not make an order which would prejudice purchasers in good faith and for value.

4.4 Preferences

A transaction will be a preference if it puts a creditor in a better position than he would have been in if the company had instead gone into liquidation. It is not a term defined by the 1956 Act and is not necessarily a preference made with fraudulent intent (as compared with a fraudulent preference defined by s.531 of the 1956 Act). The preference must have been made in the one-year period prior to the company's insolvency. The court has a range of options to restore the position to what it would have been if the transaction had not been entered into.

Conditions for setting aside a preference

There is no specific test for what constitutes a preference. The court can, if it is satisfied on the basis of facts brought before it that a person has been preferred, make an order restoring the status quo to what it was prior to the preference having been made or direct that the person preferred shall be subject to the same liabilities and have the same rights as if he had undertaken to be personally liable as surety for the debt (if the property was mortgaged or charged to secure company's debt).

Defences

There are few reported examples of a preference. However, a court will not make an order in respect of a preference unless the company which gave the preference was influenced by a desire to prefer the person to whom the preference was given, as is the case under English law. This will be a question of fact.

4.5 Transactions defrauding creditors

Conditions

If an asset is sold with intent to put the asset beyond the reach of a person who has or may at some time make a claim against the company in respect of that asset or to otherwise prejudice the interests of that person in relation to his claim, the court can restore and protect the interests of the persons affected by the transaction.

Defences

The same defences as for transactions at an undervalue and preferences apply.

4.6 Extortionate credit transactions

Conditions

The court can set aside or vary a transaction for or involving the provision of credit to the company. It is a matter of fact and evidence.

Defences

There are no statutory defences (other than successfully to disprove the allegation).

4.7 Avoidance of floating charges for past value²⁶

Where a company is being wound up, a floating charge on the undertaking or property of the company created within the twelve months immediately preceding the commencement of the winding up, shall, unless it is proved that the company immediately after the creation of the charge was solvent, be invalid, except to (i) the amount of any cash paid to the company at the time of, or subsequently to the creation of, and in consideration for the charge and (ii) interest on that amount at five per cent (or such other rate as may be notified by the central Government in the official Gazette).

Defences

It will be a defence that the company was not or did not become insolvent as a result of granting the floating charge.

4.8 Disclaimer of onerous property

- 4.8.1 The liquidator may abandon onerous property belonging to the company. The following are regarded as onerous: ²⁷

- (a) land burdened with covenants;
- (b) shares or stock in companies;
- (c) any other property which is unsaleable or is not readily saleable by reason of the fact that it requires the possessor to perform certain acts or pay a sum of money; and
- (d) unprofitable contracts.

- 4.8.2 The liquidator may, with leave of the court, disclaim any such property and it is the duty of the court to help the liquidator disclaim onerous contracts whenever this is necessary to safeguard the interests of the creditors and the shareholders of the company.

The disclaimer must be made in writing within twelve months of the commencement of the winding up or such extended period as the court may allow. The disclaimer determines in respect of the property disclaimed, the rights, liabilities and interests of the company; it releases the company and property from liability.

4.9 Disposition of the company's property made after the commencement of winding up

Where any company is being wound up by or subject to the supervision of the court:²⁸

- (a) any attachment, distress or execution put in force, without leave of the court, against the estate or effects of the company, after the commencement of winding up; or
- (b) any sale held, without the leave of the court, of any of the properties or effects of the company after the commencement of the winding up; shall be void.

4.10 Failure to register a charge

4.10.1 The power to borrow includes the power to mortgage or charge the company's assets. Any charge created on any of the following assets of a company must be registered with the Registrar of Companies under Section 125 of the 1956 Act:

- (a) a charge for the purpose of securing any issue of debentures;
- (b) a charge on uncalled share capital of the company;
- (c) a charge on any immovable property, wherever situate, or any interest therein;
- (d) a charge on any book debts of the company;
- (e) a charge, not being a pledge, on any moveable property of the company;
- (f) a floating charge on the undertaking or any property of the company including stock in trade;
- (g) a charge on calls made but not paid;
- (h) a charge on a ship or any share in a ship;
- (i) a charge on goodwill, or a patent or a licence under a patent, on a trademark, or on a copyright or a licence under a copyright.

4.10.2 A certificate is issued by the Registrar of Companies which is conclusive evidence that the requirements as to registration have been complied with. Registration must be effected within thirty days of the creation of the charge.

4.10.3 Upon registration, the charge becomes binding on the company even in its winding up and on every subsequent purchaser or incumbrancer of the property covered by the charge. The effect of non-registration is that the charge will be void against the liquidator and any creditor of the company, in the event of a winding up.

4.11 Avoidance of voluntary transfer

Any transfer of property, movable or immovable, or any delivery of goods made by a company, which is not a transfer or delivery made in the ordinary course of its business or in favour of a purchaser or encumbrancer in good faith, even though made for valuable consideration, shall, if made within the period of one year before the presentation of a petition for winding up by or subject to the supervision of the court or the passing of a resolution for voluntary winding up of the company, be void against the liquidator.

QUESTION 5

5. Enforcement

By whom may action be brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3 above)?

5.1 Introduction

- 5.1.1 When a company goes into liquidation, the authority and powers of the directors are taken over by the Official Liquidator or the Provisional Liquidator. They review actions taken by the directors and other personnel during the twilight period and if there has been any loss to the company, they try to initiate proceedings for the benefit of creditors. The Official Liquidator is in essence empowered to bring actions against the directors and others where there has been a breach of either legal or fiduciary duties owed to the company subject to the authority of the court without the sanction of which these proceedings would have no effect.

5.2 Criminal proceedings

- 5.2.1 The following acts are criminal offences which the Official Liquidator is duty bound to bring to the court's notice

Offences

- 5.2.2 Fraudulent removal or concealment of property to prevent distribution among creditors and falsification of accounts are punishable under the Indian Penal Code and hence for implicating the offenders, the offences have to be brought to the notice of the court in order to take appropriate legal action.

(a) Falsification of company's books - section 539;

(b) Fraud by officers - section 540;

(c) Offences by officers - section 538;

- (d) Fraudulent conduct of business - section 542;
- (e) Wrongful withholding of property - section 630;
- (f) False representations to creditors - section 538 (m);
- (g) Disqualification of a director - section 274.

5.2.3 After the notification of the Second Amendment and the Sick Industrial Companies (Special Provision) Repeal Act, 2002, the following offences will be added:

Violation of provisions of Part VIA or any scheme of NCLT – section 424L

- (ii) Non-submission of audited books and accounts – section 446A
- (iii) Wilful refusal to furnish information relating to affairs of producer companies – section 581ZM

5.2.4 The sections referred to above are sections of the 1956 Act.

5.3 Civil proceedings

5.3.1 In civil proceedings, the Official Liquidator has the power to initiate action against directors and other personnel. When certain actions cause loss to the company and its creditors, provisions provide access for a range of people to bring action to recover funds for the benefit of the company's creditors. The overall recovery so made is distributed evenly amongst the creditors in accordance to the rules relating to priority. The table below sets out those people who may bring an action against the directors and others in connection with certain transactions which the company has entered into.

Activity/transaction	Person able to bring proceedings
Misfeasance	liquidator, a creditor or a contributory
Fraudulent trading	liquidator only
Transaction at undervalue	liquidator/Creditors
Performance	liquidator
Extortionate credit transactions	liquidator
Transactions defrauding creditors	liquidator/Creditor

QUESTION 6

6. Remedies: orders available to the domestic court

In respect of the offences identified in questions 2, 3 and 4 above, what remedies are available in the domestic court?

Offence	Remedy Available
Transactions in fraud of creditors	Up to five years' imprisonment and/or fine in case of falsely representing/pledging/pawning/disposing of the company's property to obtain credit for himself. Otherwise, two years' imprisonment and/or a fine.
Misconduct in winding up	Imprisonment or a fine or both.
Falsification of company Books	Up to seven years' imprisonment and/or a fine.
Material omissions from statement relating to the company's affairs	Imprisonment which may extend to two years or a fine or both.
False representations to creditors	Imprisonment for a term, which may extend to two years and a fine.
Misfeasance	A person guilty of this offence can be compelled by the court to repay or restore the money or property or any part thereof, with interest at such rate as the court thinks just, or to contribute to the assets of the company by way of compensation in respect of the misapplication, retainer, misfeasance or breach of trust, as the court thinks just.
Fiduciary duties	Liability is civil. The director may be ordered to compensate for any loss or damage caused by breach of his fiduciary duty, to restore to the company any property appropriated or acquired in breach of his fiduciary duty and to account to the company for any benefit obtained in breach of fiduciary duty.
Duties of skill and care	Liability is civil. The director may be ordered to compensate the company for all damage caused by breach of his fiduciary duty.
Fraudulent conduct of business	Up to two years' imprisonment and/or a fine.
Fraud by officers	Up to two years' imprisonment and/or a fine.

Offence	Remedy Available
Destroying, mutilating company documents including making an omission in a document	Liability is criminal. Imprisonment for a term which may extend to two years and/or a fine.
Conduct rendering a director unfit to be a director	Liability is civil.
Transactions at an undervalue and preferences	There is no specific remedy provided under the 1956 Act and/or SICA unless the transaction at an undervalue or preference is treated as an offence (delinquency, breach of trust and misfeasance) under section 24 of SICA and section 543 of 1956 Act (as detailed in the reply to question 2), in which case an order may be made to contribute to the assets of the company by way of compensation. Such a direction can be made by BIFR/AAIFR on an application moved before it or by the company court as well as in a suit brought before a civil court. Once the Second Amendment comes into force, the law will be as follows: There is no specific remedy provided for unless the transaction at an undervalue or preference is treated as an offence under section 424K and section 543 of the 1956 Act (as amended by the Second Amendment), in which case an order may be made to contribute to the assets of the company by way of compensation. Such a direction can be made by the NCLT on an application moved before it.
Transactions defrauding creditors	Liability is criminal as well as civil. An action for criminal breach of trust can be brought if the transaction involved a property charged to creditors. A civil action can also be brought: for example, if a dividend is paid to shareholders but creditors are not paid despite an agreement to this effect, the creditors can bring an action.
Extortionate credit transactions	Liability is civil. A civil action for setting aside such transactions can be brought.
Avoidance of a floating charge	Liability is civil. The court can declare that the floating charge is invalid in whole or in part.
Non-submission of audited books and accounts	Liability is criminal. Imprisonment for a term which may extend to one year and a fine.
Wilful refusal to furnish information relating to the affairs of producer companies	Liability is criminal. Imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months and a fine.

QUESTION 7

7. Duty to co-operate

- (a) To what extent are directors (and others identified in question 3 above) obliged to co-operate with an investigation into the company's affairs following its insolvency?
- (b) Are any human rights laws applicable in the domestic jurisdiction in relation to any such obligations (e.g. in the UK and other European jurisdictions Article 6 of the European Convention of Human Rights may apply if domestic law compels a person to provide potentially self-incriminating information at the request of the office-holder appointed under the relevant insolvency procedure adopted)?

7.1 Obligation to co-operate with investigation into company's affairs

7.1.1 General duty to co-operate

- (a) Under the 1956 Act and SICA, officers and agents, past and present, of the company are required to co-operate with an investigation into the company's affairs. The nature and extent of the duty to cooperate is implicit but it applies in the circumstances and is imposed on the persons set out below. Under SICA, the BIFR/AIFR are empowered to seek information. Under the 1956 Act, the liquidator can call for information. The duty is to give such information concerning the company and its promotion, formation, business dealings, affairs or property as may, at any time after the effective date, be reasonably required; and to attend on the BIFR/AIFR or the Official Liquidator at such times as they may reasonably require.
- (b) After implementation of the Second Amendment, the duty to co-operate will be as before but it will be the Central Government or the NCLT²⁹ or the Official Liquidator³⁰ who can call for information.

7.1.2 The general duty to co-operate applies where:

- (a) proceedings are pending before the BIFR/AIFR under SICA, even though this is an investigation prior to the recommendation to wind up the company;
- (b) a winding up petition has been presented;
- (c) a Provisional or Official Liquidator has been appointed;
- (d) the company goes into liquidation; or
- (e) a winding-up order has been made by the court.

²⁹ Sections 424J, 439A and 441E 1956 Act.

7.1.3 The duty is imposed on:

- (a) those who are or have at any time been officers of the company - this will include a director, manager or secretary of a company;
- (b) those who have taken part in the formation of the company at any time during the one year before the effective date;
- (c) those who are employed by the company, or have been in its employment (including employment under a contract for services - which includes those who have provided professional services to the company, for example, accountants) within the one year, and are in the Official Liquidator's opinion capable of giving information which he requires;
- (d) those who are, or have within that one year been, officers of, or in the employment (including employment under a contract for services) of another company which is, or within that year was, an officer of the company in question; and
- (e) in the case of a company being wound up by the NCLT, any person who has acted as the Official Liquidator or Provisional Liquidator of the company.

7.1.4 Sanction

If any person without reasonable excuse makes default in complying with any of the requirements under section 454 of SICA, he shall be punished with imprisonment for a period of up to two years and fined.

7.2 Obligation to assist with getting in the company's property³¹

7.2.1 This obligation applies where:

- (a) a winding up order has been made; or
- (b) a Provisional Liquidator or Official Liquidator has been appointed.

The liquidator or the Provisional Liquidator is required to take into his custody or under his control, all the property, effects and actionable claims to which the company is or appears to be entitled. The directors and officers are required to hand over such property to the liquidator and assist the liquidator in obtaining possession of any property and assets not in their possession.

7.2.2 Sanction

The court has the power to summon any person suspected of having property of the company in their possession and may require them to produce to the court any books and papers in their custody relating to the company.³² Failure to appear before the court may lead to their apprehension and being brought before the court for further examination.

³¹ Section 456 1956 Act.

³² Section 477 1956 Act.

7.3 Obligation to provide information³³

7.3.1 The court may summon to appear before it:

- (a) any officer of the company;
- (b) any person known or suspected to have in his possession any property of the company or supposed to be indebted to the company; or
- (c) any person whom the court thinks is capable of giving information concerning the promotion, formation, business, dealings, affairs or property of the company.

This power has very wide application.

Such persons may be required (i) to submit an affidavit to the court containing an account of their dealings with the company; or (ii) to produce any books and papers in their custody or under their control relating to the company (but subject to and without prejudice to any lien that they may claim on the books or papers and the court shall have jurisdiction in the winding up to determine all questions relating to the lien).

7.3.2 Sanctions

If any officer or person so summoned, after being paid or tendered a reasonable sum for his expenses, fails to appear before the court at the appointed time, the court may cause him to be apprehended and brought before the court for examination.

7.4 Company's statement of affairs³⁴

7.4.1 Where the court has made a winding up order or appointed a Provisional Liquidator, the Official Liquidator or the Provisional Liquidator may require certain persons to make out and submit to him a statement of the affairs of the company.

The persons who may be required to provide such a statement are:

- (a) those who are or have been officers of the company;
- (b) those who have taken part in the formation of the company at any time during one year before the relevant date;
- (c) those who are in the company's employment, or have been in its employment within that year, and are, in the Official Liquidator's opinion, capable of giving the information required; or
- (d) those who are or have been within that year officers of, or in the employment of, a company which is, or within that year was, an officer of the company.

³³ Section 477 1956 Act.

7.4.2 Sanction

Past and present officers of the company may commit an offence if they make material omissions from the statement of affairs.

If any person without reasonable excuse makes default in complying with any of the requirements under section 454 of SICA, he shall be punished with imprisonment for a period of up to two years and fined.

7.5 Public examination of officers³⁵

- 7.5.1 Where a company is being wound up by the court and the Official Liquidator has made a report to the court stating that in his opinion a fraud has been committed by any person (a) in the promotion or formation of the company or (b) by any officer of the company, the court may direct the person or officer to appear before the court and be publicly examined.

7.5.2 Sanction

The court may, on proof of probable cause that a contributory is about to quit India or abscond, or avoid examination, have the contributory arrested and his books and papers and movable property seized and kept safe until such time as the court may order.³⁶

7.6 Human rights

- 7.6.1 In India, human rights are protected under the Protection of Human Rights Act, 1993. This Act was enacted to take into account gross violation of human rights, meaning rights related to life, liberty, equality and dignity of an individual guaranteed by the Constitution of India or embodied in the international covenants and so enforceable in Indian courts.
- 7.6.2 The Act provides for a Commission on a National and State Level, which inquires into complaints suo moto or on a petition presented to it by a victim or any person on his behalf. Complaints are in the nature of violation of human rights or abetment and negligence in the prevention of such a violation by a public servant.

7.6.3 Powers of Commission

The Commission has powers akin to the civil courts and can therefore:

- (a) summon and enforce the attendance of witnesses and examine them on oath;
- (b) discover and ask for the production of any document;
- (c) receive evidence on affidavits;
- (d) requisition any public record or a copy from any court or office;

³⁵ Section 478 1956 Act.

³⁶ Section 479 1956 Act.

- (e) issue commissions for the examination of witnesses or documents; and
- (f) any other matter which may be prescribed.

The Commission can conduct any investigation pertaining to an inquiry; it can also call for information from the government or any other authority.

7.6.4 Opportunity

It gives reasonable opportunity to people who are likely to be adversely or prejudicially affected.

7.6.5 Incriminating statement

Statements made by persons to the Commission cannot be used against them in civil or criminal proceeding except on a prosecution for giving false evidence by such statement.

7.6.6 Action taken

If the inquiry discloses a human rights violation or negligence on part of a public servant, appropriate steps are taken in the court of law for punishing the accused, as permitted by the law.

Proceedings in the human rights court are deemed to be judicial proceedings.

QUESTION 8

8. Appeals and limitation periods

- (a) What limitation period, if any, will apply to actions brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3) in connection with the offences identified in question 2?
- (b) Please indicate whether an appeal is available from the decision of the lower courts.

8.1 Limitation period for criminal proceedings

- 8.1.1 The position is same as under English Law viz. the general rule being that no limitation period applies to criminal proceedings unless stipulated by statute. No limitation applies to the offences attracting criminal liability, identified in the answer to question 6 above. Disqualification proceedings can be initiated in civil proceedings.

8.2 Limitation period for civil actions

8.2.1 *Delinquency, breach of trust & misfeasance: Directors and others*³⁷

An application under Section 543 1956 Act, which is similar to Section 24 SICA, has to be made within five years from the date of the winding up order or from the first appointment of the liquidator or the date of the alleged offence. However, no limitation has been provided under SICA.

Following implementation of the Second Amendment, Section 24 of SICA will be repealed. However a similar provision will be added to the 1956 Act, Section 424K. As under section 24 of SICA, no limitation has been provided under section 424K of the 1956 Act.

8.3 Other offences³⁸

- 8.3.1 For the other offences, no specific limitation has been provided. In this event, the limitation period provided under the Limitation Act 1963 will usually apply. In relation to any suit/application for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere under the Limitation Act 1963, the limitation period is three years and the time from which the period begins to run is when the right to sue/apply accrues.

8.4 Appeals

- (a) An appeal against an order passed by the BIFR under Section 24 of SICA lies to the AAIFR which can be preferred within 45 days from the date of the communication of the order. The delay in filing the appeal can be condoned if the delay is of 15 days or less.
- (b) Most complaints for offences committed under the 1956 Act are made to the Company Law Board. An appeal against an order of the Company Law Board lies to the Company Judge of the High Court within whose jurisdiction the company is located. The Company Law Board has the same power as a Civil Court; it has no power to review its order. Orders passed by the Company Law Board are also subject to judicial review by the High Court. Any person aggrieved by any decision or order of the Company Law Board may file an appeal to the High Court on any question of law arising out of the order. There can be no appeal on a question of fact and hence the Company Law Board is the final authority so far as questions of fact are concerned. Any appeal must be filed within 60 days of the communication of the order or decision to the appellant, unless extended by the High Court for a further period of 60 days. The appeal lies before the High Court where the registered office of the company is situated and not at the place where the Company Law Board arrives at a decision.
- (c) Actions before a Civil Judge/Magistrate are appealable before a District Judge. A revision also lies against the order of a Civil Judge to the High Court if the order is questioned for want of jurisdiction. The order of the

³⁸ Under the 1956 Act & SICA.

District Judge can be challenged before the High Court. Orders of the High Court are final and only if leave is granted can an appeal be made to the Supreme Court of India.

8.5 After the implementation of the Second Amendment and the Repeal Act, the law relating to appeals will change. The new position will be as follows.

- (i) After the commencement of the Second Amendment, complaints for offences committed under the 1956 Act will lie to the NCLT. Any person aggrieved by any decision or order of the NCLT may file an appeal with the Appellate Tribunal provided the order or decision was not made with the consent of the parties. Any appeal must be filed within 45 days of the communication of the order or decision to the appellant, unless extended by the Appellate Tribunal. The NCLT and the Appellate Tribunal shall have the same powers as the Civil Court. Any person aggrieved by the decision or order of the Appellate Tribunal may file an appeal to the Supreme Court within 60 days of the date of communication of the decision or order of the Appellate Tribunal to him on any question of law.
- (ii) Appeals from orders made or decisions given before the commencement of the Second Amendment in the matter of winding up by the court shall lie to the same court, in the same manner, and subject to the same conditions for an appeal from any order or decision of the court in cases within its ordinary jurisdiction.³⁹

9. Foreign corporations

Do the legal provisions and procedures outlined above apply to both domestic and foreign corporations?

9.1 Introduction

- 9.1.1 A foreign corporation may be wound up in India as an unregistered company, provided it has established a place of business within India.⁴⁰
- 9.1.2 An unregistered company includes any partnership, association or company consisting of more than seven members which is not a railway company incorporated by any Act of Parliament or other India law or any Act of Parliament of the United Kingdom, a company incorporated in India or a company registered under any previous companies law and not being a company whose registered office was in Burma, Aden or Pakistan immediately before the separation of that country from India.

9.2 Winding up of unregistered companies⁴¹

9.2.1 All the provisions (including those set out in question 2 above) with respect to winding up of a domestic company shall apply to an unregistered company.

9.2.2 No unregistered company shall be wound up voluntarily by the court.

9.3 Criteria of winding up⁴²

An unregistered company may be wound up if:

- (a) the company is dissolved, or has ceased to carry on business, or is carrying on business only for the purpose of winding up its affairs;
- (b) the company is unable to pay its debts;
- (c) the court is of opinion that it is just and equitable that the company be wound up.

9.4 Record of information

9.4.1 Foreign companies which establish a place of business within India shall, within one month of establishment, deliver to the Registrar of Companies for registration⁴³:

- (a) a certified copy of the charter, statutes, or memorandum and articles of the company or other instrument constituting or defining the constitution of the company; and if the instrument is not in English, a certified translation;
- (b) the full address of the registered or principal office of the company;
- (c) a list and details of the directors and secretary containing certain particulars;
- (d) details of one or more persons authorised to accept service of documents in India on behalf of the company; and
- (e) details of its principal place of business in India.

9.4.2 Every foreign company is required to:⁴⁴

- (a) prepare an annual balance-sheet and profit and loss account as if it were a domestic company; and
- (b) deliver copies to the Registrar of Companies.

⁴³ Section 592 1956 Act.

⁴⁴ Section 594 1956 Act.

9.5 Penalties⁴⁵

If a foreign company fails to comply with any of the foregoing provisions, every officer or agent of the company who is in default shall be punishable by a fine of up to one thousand rupees, and in the case of a continuing offence, by an additional fine of up to one hundred rupees for every day the default continues.

9.6 Effect of offence⁴⁶

Any failure by a foreign company to comply with any of the foregoing provisions shall not affect the validity of any contract, dealing or transaction entered into by the company or its liability to be sued in respect thereof.

But the company shall not be entitled to bring any suit, claim any set-off, make any counter-claim or institute any legal proceeding in respect of the contract dealing or transaction until the foregoing provisions have been complied with.

9.7 Miscellaneous provisions

Apart from the above, the provisions pertaining to the registration of charges, appointment of receiver and books of account as applicable to the domestic companies shall apply mutatis mutandis to the foreign companies as well.

QUESTION 10

10. Insurance

Is directors' and officers' insurance available in your jurisdiction? If so, to what extent will the availability of such insurance provide effective protection to directors against personal liability which may arise in connection with the issues raised in questions 1-9 above?

- 10.1 There is no provision under Indian Law, statutory or otherwise providing for this and hence directors' and officers' insurance is not available in India.

⁴⁶ Section 599 1956 Act.

QUESTION 11

11. How safe is it for directors and others to incur further credit during the twilight period?

11.1 Overview

- (a) In India, when a rehabilitation scheme for revival of an insolvent company is under consideration, it may contemplate fresh financial assistance and/or additional financial burden by way of interest on deferred/re-scheduled payments. The earlier credits continue but they are part of the rehabilitation scheme. Under the provisions of SICA, every scheme for rehabilitation is monitored by an agency appointed by the BIFR. The responsibility of directors is much higher during this period in respect of further credit as there is direct supervision by the BIFR and the liabilities are much more serious. Although there are very few instances where the directors have been penalised by being directed to restore the property or money or make good the loss, there have been cases where observations have been made against the directors by BIFR which have had the consequence of informally blacklisting the directors and the companies in which they are directors from further financial assistance in future.
- (b) The court is empowered to injunct the directors from dealing with and/or disposing of assets during insolvency proceedings except in the ordinary course of business. Normally courts issue such directions at the instance of creditors. However, during the period when a rehabilitation scheme is under implementation, such a direction may not be given. Directors must, however, have regard to the interests of creditors as not only will the creditors' approval to the rehabilitation scheme be required but also the directors may otherwise expose themselves to liability for serious misfeasance, malfeasance and non-feasance.
- (c) How well the interests of creditors are protected in practice is, perhaps, debatable. There is a general feeling that directors escape responsibility by seeking protection under SICA and get away without paying creditors for years whilst continuing to enjoy possession and use of the assets.

11.2 Can an unconnected third party rely on the validity of transactions entered into by the company (in particular guarantees and securities) during the twilight period?

- (a) As is the situation in most of the legal systems all over the world, in India too, the period preceding the commencement of insolvency proceedings is vulnerable. Under Indian Law, every transaction in the one year preceding the presentation of insolvency proceedings may be subject to challenge pursuant to the provisions of the 1956 Act.

- (b) Under SICA, the creditors can question transactions of the company while its accounts and financial affairs are being scrutinised for determining whether it has become insolvent. While the High Court has the power to set aside such transactions, the BIFR can only make observations and consider reverse entries by taking into account the loss that may have occurred due to undervalue sale or under-invoicing etc. The creditors and shareholders can always challenge a transaction of the company or an act of breach of duty by a director.
- (c) There are no means whereby a potential buyer wishing to buy assets from a company facing insolvency can know that a liquidator will try and seek to set the transaction aside later. While scrutinising the accounts, if the liquidator feels that a particular transaction was glaringly undervalued and thus, questionable, it could become subject to setting aside proceedings. Obviously, once it is definitely concluded that the sale was not bona fide and that it highly undervalued the company's interest, it will be set aside. The property would be put to resale. The buyer or person in possession would be given the first preference to repurchase the asset if he were able to meet the market value.
- (d) It is advisable to obtain proper professional advice before entering into any transaction. The solution could be to obtain an indemnity bond indemnifying against future loss should the transaction be set aside.
- (e) Sometimes a creditor also uses its position to coerce the company to enter into a transaction with it to sell a property at a much lower price than the market value. The other creditors will find themselves in a dilemma particularly if the creditor, who has entered into a transaction, has very high stakes and has a charge over the assets of the company and has first preference in terms of repayment of debt. Thus, the third parties are always at risk. Even those assets, which are sold by way of a court sale, can become the subject matter of litigation for many years.

APPENDIX

1. INSOLVENCY PROCEDURE

1.1 Who can wind up a company?

- 1.1.1 The winding up of a company may be by the court or voluntary or subject to the supervision of the court.⁴⁷
- 1.1.2 Predominantly, we are here concerned with a winding up by NCLT, as only the court can wind up a company for insolvency.

1.2 Winding up by the court

- 1.2.1 A company may be wound up by the court if:⁴⁸
- (a) the company has resolved that it be wound up by the court;
 - (b) the company fails to file the statutory report with the Registrar of Companies;
 - (c) the company fails to hold its statutory meeting;
 - (d) the company fails to commence its business within a year from incorporation;
 - (e) the company suspends its business for a whole year;
 - (f) the number of members is reduced, in the case of a public company, below seven, and in the case of a private company, below two;
 - (g) the company is unable (or deemed unable) to pay its debts;
 - (h) the court finds it just and equitable to wind up the company;
 - (i) the company has made a default in filing with the Registrar of Companies its balance sheet and profit and loss account or annual return for any five consecutive financial years;
 - (j) the company has acted against the interests of the sovereignty and integrity of India, the security of the state, friendly relations with foreign states, public order, decency or morality (on an application made by the Central or State Government);
 - (k) the NCLT is of the opinion that the company should be wound up under the circumstances specified in section 424G of the 1956 Act; or

⁴⁸ Section 433 1956 Act.

- (l) the NCLT is satisfied that a compromise or an arrangement sanctioned under section 391 of the 1956 Act cannot be worked satisfactorily with or without modifications.

1.2.2 A company shall be deemed unable to pay its debts⁴⁹:

- (a) if the company after having received a formal written demand notice from its creditor has neglected to pay the sum, or to secure or compound for it to the reasonable satisfaction of the creditor;
- (b) if execution or other process issued on a decree or order of any court in favour of a creditor of the company is returned unsatisfied in whole or in part; or
- (c) if it is proved to the satisfaction of the court that the company is unable to pay its debts.⁵⁰

1.3 Procedure for petitioning

- 1.3.1 An application to the court for the winding up of a company shall be by petition presented by the company or by any creditor or creditors, including any contingent or prospective creditor or creditors or by any contributory or contributories or by the Registrar of Companies⁵¹. In certain cases of mismanagement, statutory violations etc., any person authorised by the Central Government can also petition for winding up.

1.4 Voluntary winding up

- 1.4.1 Where a company is being wound up voluntarily, a petition for its winding up by the court may be presented by any person authorised to do so under the preceding head of 'Procedure for Petitioning' or the Official Liquidator.⁵²

1.5 Commencement of winding up by the court⁵³

- (a) In the case of a voluntary winding up: where, before the presentation of a petition for the winding up of a company by the court, a resolution has been passed by the company for a voluntary winding up, the winding up of the company shall be deemed to have commenced at the time of the passing of the resolution.⁵⁴
- (b) In any other case: the winding up of a company by the court shall be deemed to commence at the time of the presentation of the petition for the winding up.

⁵¹ Section 439 of the 1956 Act.

⁵² The court shall not make a winding up order on a petition presented to it unless it is satisfied that the voluntary winding up cannot be continued with due regard to the interests of the creditors or contributories or both.

⁵³ Section 441 1956 Act.

⁵⁴ Unless the court, on proof of fraud or mistake, thinks fit to direct otherwise, all proceedings taken in the voluntary winding up shall be deemed to have been validly taken.

1.6 Powers of winding up court⁵⁵

- 1.6.1 On hearing a winding up petition, the court may:
- (a) dismiss it, with or without costs;
 - (b) adjourn the hearing conditionally or unconditionally;
 - (c) make any interim order that it thinks fit; or
 - (d) make an order for winding up the company with or without costs, or any other order that it thinks fit.
- 1.6.2 At any time after the presentation of a winding up petition and before the making of a winding up order, the court, may appoint the Official Liquidator⁵⁶ as provisional liquidator.

1.7 Consequences of winding up order

- 1.7.1 Where the court makes an order for the winding up of a company, the same is conveyed forthwith to the Official Liquidator⁵⁷ and the Registrar of Companies.
- 1.7.2 The winding up order is made public and the officers and employees of the company are discharged, except when the business of the company is continued.
- 1.7.3 When a winding up order has been made or the Official Liquidator has been appointed as provisional liquidator, no suit or other legal proceeding shall be commenced, or if pending at the date of the winding up order, shall be proceeded with, against the company except by leave of the court and subject to such terms as the court may impose.
- 1.7.4 Soon after the winding up order, the Official Liquidator shall submit to the court a detailed statement of affairs covering the amount of the company's capital issued, subscribed, and paid up, the estimated amount of assets and liabilities, cash and negotiable securities, debts due from contributories, debts due to the company and any securities in respect of such debts, movable and immovable properties belonging to the company and unpaid calls.
- 1.7.5 Where a winding up order has been made or where a provisional liquidator has been appointed, the liquidator shall take into his custody or under his control, all the property effects and actionable claims to which the company is or appears to be entitled.
- 1.7.6 All the property and effects of the company shall be deemed to be in the custody of the court as from the date of the order for the winding up of the company.
- 1.7.7 The liquidator shall convene separate meetings of creditors and contributories for the appointment of committee of inspection to act with the liquidator.

⁵⁵ Section 443 1956 Act.

⁵⁶ The Official Liquidator is a full-time officer appointed by the Central Government and attached to the court.

⁵⁷ On a winding up order being made in respect of a company, the Official Liquidator shall, by virtue of his office, become the liquidator of the company.

A committee of inspection shall consist of members, being creditors and contributories of the company. The committee of inspection shall have the right to inspect the accounts of the liquidator at all reasonable times.

- 1.7.8 As soon as possible after making a winding up order, the court shall settle a list of contributories and cause the assets of the company to be collected and applied in discharge of its liabilities.
- 1.7.9 The court may, at any time after making a winding up order, require any contributory and any trustee, receiver, banker, agent, or officer of the company, to pay, deliver, surrender or transfer forthwith, or within such time as the court directs, to the liquidator, any money, property or books and papers in his hands to which the company is prima facie entitled.
- 1.7.10 When an order has been made for winding up a company by the court, and the Official Liquidator has made a report to the court under this Act, stating that in his opinion a fraud has been committed by any person in the promotion or formation of the company, or by any officer of the company in relation to the company since its formation, the court may publicly examine the person(s) concerned as to the promotion or formation or the conduct of the business of the company, or as to that person's conduct and dealings as an officer thereof.

1.8 Effect of winding up order⁵⁸

- 1.8.1 An order for winding up a company shall operate in favour of all the creditors and of all the contributories of the company as if it had been made on the joint petition of a creditor and of a contributory.

1.9 Liability

- 1.9.1 As contributories of present and past members:- in the event of a company being wound up, every present and past member shall be liable to contribute to the assets of the company an amount sufficient for payment of its debts and liabilities and the costs, charges and expenses of the winding up.⁵⁹
- 1.9.2 As directors and managers⁶⁰ in the winding up of a limited company, any director, secretary and treasurer or manager, whether past or present, whose liability is unlimited shall, in addition to his liability, if any, to contribute as an ordinary member, be liable to make a further contribution as if he were, at the commencement of the winding up, a member of an unlimited company.⁶¹

1.10 Dissolution of company⁶²

- 1.10.1 When the affairs of a company have been completely wound up, the court shall make an order that the company be dissolved from the date of the order, and the company shall be dissolved accordingly.

⁵⁸ Section 447 1956 Act.

⁶⁰ Section 427 1956 Act.

⁶¹ A past director, secretary and treasurer or manager shall not be liable to make such further contribution, if he has ceased to hold office for a year or more before the commencement of the winding up. A past director, managing agent, secretary and treasurer or manager shall not be liable to make such further contribution in respect of any debt or liability of the company contracted after he ceased to hold office.

⁶² Section 481 1956 Act.

ITALY

QUESTION 1

1. The start and duration of the “twilight” period

What is the length of the period ending with formal insolvency proceedings during which transactions entered into by a company are vulnerable to attack or are liable to give rise to personal liability on the part of directors and/or others involved in the management of the company?

1.1 Foreword

1.1.1 Corporations in the twilight period are governed both by insolvency law rules and by company law rules.

1.1.2 In 2003, the Italian Government enacted a sweeping company law reform which came into force on 1 January 2004¹. The Bankruptcy Law², which dated back to 1942, was also substantially amended – in an effort to render insolvency proceedings more flexible and expeditious – through a series of legislative measures adopted between 2005 and 2007. The first part of the Bankruptcy Law reform, enacted by the Italian Government in March 2005³, introduced a set of new rules mainly relating to claw-back actions, compositions with creditors and out-of-court restructuring procedures. The second part of the Bankruptcy Law reform, adopted in January 2006⁴, primarily dealt with the ordinary bankruptcy proceeding (fallimento) with the intention to simplify and shorten the applicable procedures⁵. Finally, in September 2007⁶, a so-called corrective decree introduced further amendments intended, in particular, to narrow the scope of business enterprises subject to bankruptcy and to address certain issues arisen during the initial implementation of the reformed Bankruptcy Law.

1.1.3 Given the absence of a meaningful body of case law on the new rules thus far, many legal issues involving corporations in the twilight period are still subject of debate among legal scholars. In dealing with both company and bankruptcy law issues, therefore, this chapter will provide an account of the prevailing scholarly interpretations of the new rules and of the case law developed under the previous regime where the new rules are identical or similar to the old ones. It is uncertain whether the courts will confirm their prior findings under the new laws or follow the prevailing scholarly interpretations.

⁴ Legislative Decree No. 5 of 9 January 2006, which came into effect on 16 July 2006.

⁶ Legislative Decree No. 169 of 12 September 2007, which came into effect on 1 January 2008.

- 1.1.3.1 Unless otherwise specified, the description of relevant Italian law provisions below applies to all companies, whether joint-stock corporations (società per azioni, hereinafter SpA) or limited liability companies (società a responsabilità limitata, hereinafter SRL).
- Under the new company law, SpA may opt for one of three corporate governance systems: the so-called traditional one, in which alongside the board of directors (or a single director) there exists a separate board of statutory auditors (collegio sindacale) with audit and monitoring functions;
 - the two-tier one, whereby the members of the management board are appointed by a supervisory board, which also performs audit and monitoring functions;
 - the one-tier one, whereby audit and monitoring functions are exercised by an audit committee composed by independent members of the board of directors.
- 1.1.3.2 Unless otherwise specified, by the term “directors” reference herein relates exclusively to members of the board of directors (in the traditional and one-tier governance systems) or the management board (in the two-tier system). The liability of members of the board of statutory auditors and of the supervisory board will be treated under paragraphs 3.3 and 3.4 below.
- 1.1.3.3 The board of statutory auditors is mandatory in SRL only when the company’s capital is at least 120,000 Euro or when the company’s size exceeds certain thresholds⁷. The board of statutory auditors in SRL has the same powers and duties as boards of statutory auditors in SpA, with the addition of the duty to audit the company’s financial statements (under SpA default rules, the board of statutory auditors does not audit the financial statements⁸ and in a SpA with shares listed on an Italian or EU stock exchange, the company’s accounts must be audited by an independent audit company).
- 1.1.4 The Bankruptcy Law is the main piece of legislation dealing with ordinary bankruptcy proceedings (fallimento) in Italy, as well as various proceedings aimed at avoiding bankruptcy through (i) a court-supervised composition with creditors (concordato preventivo)⁹, (ii) an out-of-court restructuring agreement ratified by the court (accordo di ristrutturazione)¹⁰ or (iii) a recovery plan assessed by the debtor’s auditors (piano attestato di risanamento)¹¹. The framework rules set forth by the Bankruptcy Law also apply – with certain exceptions – to special insolvency proceedings applicable, among others, to banks and insurance and investment services companies (liquidazione coatta amministrativa).

⁷ Article 2477, Civil Code.

⁹ Article 160, Bankruptcy Law.

¹⁰ Article 182-bis, Bankruptcy Law.

¹¹ Article 67, paragraph 3, lett. d), Bankruptcy Law.

- 1.1.4.1 Until the recent reforms, the Bankruptcy Law did not provide for effective reorganization procedures, which over time became increasingly necessary in the Italian economic environment, in particular for large industrial companies. For this reason, in 1979 the Italian Parliament enacted a law¹² subsequently amended in 1999¹³ (the so-called “Prodi Law”), which introduced a new insolvency procedure aimed at the reorganization of certain large insolvent companies (amministrazione straordinaria). In December 2003, in the wake of the Parmalat crisis, the Prodi Law was further amended and supplemented, in order to make a new specific procedure of amministrazione straordinaria available to particularly large and indebted companies, providing for a two-year restructuring plan and a special composition with creditors¹⁴.
- 1.1.4.2 The special composition with creditors available to large insolvent companies since December 2003 was significantly more flexible than the ordinary regime generally available to all business enterprises (concordato preventivo). The 2005 Bankruptcy Law reform amended the general regime to make it substantially similar to the special concordato of large insolvent companies. The amended concordato preventivo – now available to all companies regardless of their size – may provide for (a) the division of creditors into different classes; (b) the differential treatment of creditors belonging to different classes; (c) the restructuring of debts in any form, including a debt-for-equity exchange; and (d) the transfer of the insolvent company’s assets to an assignee (assuntore). The concordato preventivo must be approved by creditors holding a majority of the debt¹⁵, is submitted to the court for ratification together with a third-party expert report on the accuracy of the financial data and feasibility of the plan and, once ratified by the court, is binding on all creditors.
- 1.1.4.3 Moreover the 2005 Bankruptcy Law reform introduced a new out-of-court restructuring agreement ratified by the court (accordo di ristrutturazione). The petition may be filed only if (a) a majority of creditors holding at least 60% of the debt have entered into the restructuring agreement, and (b) a third-party expert has certified the feasibility of the proposed restructuring (in particular with respect to the full payment of creditors who are not party to the agreement). The restructuring agreement is not binding on creditors who are not party to it; however, transactions and payments made pursuant to it are not subject to claw-back.
- 1.1.4.4 The claw-back exemption is extended also to transactions and payments made pursuant to recovery plans assessed by the debtor’s auditors (piano attestato di risanamento), a restructuring device introduced by the 2005 reform. The reasonableness of such recovery plans – which are binding only on creditors who are party to them and must appear suitable to permit restructuring of the debt and to ensure recovery of debtor’s financial condition – is assessed by an auditor, but is not subject to any approval by the court.

¹³ Legislative Decree No. 270 of 8 July 1999.

¹⁵ In addition, if the creditors are divided into different classes, the majority approval must occur in the majority of the existing classes.

- 1.1.4.5 Finally the 2006 Bankruptcy Law reform abolished the two-year judicial moratorium proceeding (amministrazione controllata) – previously available to companies in temporary financial distress – since it proved substantially ineffective.

1.2 The start and duration of the “twilight period” with respect to directors’ liability

- 1.2.1 The law does not specifically determine the duration of the period during which directors’ actions or omissions are liable to give rise to personal liability. In other words, there is no precisely defined “twilight period” with respect to directors’ liability.
- 1.2.2 However, when a company is insolvent, directors have a duty to petition the court for an insolvency ruling. If they fail to do so and consequently aggravate the company’s deficit, then they are criminally liable¹⁶ (see paragraph 2.4.3 below) and may hence be held liable for the difference between the net assets at the time the company has become insolvent and the net assets as determined by the bankruptcy trustee under the bankruptcy proceedings.
- 1.2.3 With regard to directors’ liability, the twilight period ends when the bankruptcy trustee takes charge of the company’s operations.

1.3 The start and duration of the “twilight period” under bankruptcy laws: the notion of insolvency and claw-back provisions

- 1.3.1 For purposes of assessing the vulnerability of transactions to challenge (as opposed to the personal liability of directors), the twilight period is the preference period (periodo sospetto) prior to the opening of the ordinary bankruptcy proceeding (fallimento)¹⁷, during which certain transactions entered into by the debtor may be voided by a judgment of the bankruptcy court upon request of the trustee in a so-called bankruptcy claw-back action (revocatoria fallimentare).
- 1.3.2 A company (or any other business enterprise) shall enter into bankruptcy proceedings when it becomes insolvent. The concept of “insolvency”, under Italian law, is defined as the inability of the company to regularly pay its obligations as they become due. Failing to meet payments is usually considered prima facie evidence of insolvency, even though obligations regularly honored may also conceal the company’s insolvency, if such payments are made by fraudulent or detrimental means (e.g., the sale of all or part of the debtor’s assets or estate on favorable terms). In an insolvency situation, the company’s directors, any of the company’s creditors or the Public Prosecutor may file a petition in order to obtain a formal declaration of insolvency by the competent court thereby starting a formal bankruptcy procedure.

¹⁶ Article 217, Bankruptcy Law.

¹⁷ The same rules basically apply in the case of liquidazione coatta amministrativa and amministrazione straordinaria.

- 1.3.3 The date on which the preference period is deemed to begin depends upon the different types of transactions carried out by the company prior to the opening of formal bankruptcy proceedings (or, in the case of amministrazione straordinaria, prior to the declaration of insolvency). Generally, such period does not exceed one year prior to that date (see question 4). Certain transactions, however, may be voided even before the preference period commences and irrespective of whether the company is insolvent, if specific requirements are satisfied (see paragraph 4.1.2).
- 1.3.4 The preference period ends on the date on which the competent court orders the opening of formal bankruptcy proceedings (or, in case of amministrazione straordinaria, when the court declares the insolvency).

QUESTION 2

2 Actions potentially giving rise to liability for directors

- (a) In respect of which acts during the “twilight” period may a director be held personally liable or which may otherwise have adverse consequences for him?
- (b) In relation to each act identified in (a) above:
- (i) is any resulting liability against a director civil, criminal or both?
 - (ii) can a director be made personally liable in respect of the whole loss caused to the company or the deficit to creditors?
 - (iii) will liability attach to individual directors in proportion to their specific involvement?
 - (iv) is there a specified period before commencement of a subsequent insolvency procedure within which the relevant act must have been undertaken in order for liability to attach to a director?
 - (v) what defences, if any, will be available in relation to each offence?

2.1 General

- 2.1.1 In the case of an insolvency proceeding, directors may be held liable for any action or omission in violation of their duties, as defined by the law and by the corporate by-laws, whenever such action or omission causes damage to the company and/or its creditors, and may be held liable also towards individual shareholders or third parties, to the extent that such action or omission causes a direct damage to them.

- 2.1.2 Some actions and omissions, as identified in 2.4, give rise to both civil and criminal liabilities.
- 2.1.3 The liability attaches jointly and severally to all directors which are held to have violated their duties. Under general principles of Italian law, the director who has refunded the damage has recourse against each of the other directors who are also at fault in proportion to the degree of fault of each and to the harmful consequences arising therefrom.
- 2.1.4 As explained under paragraph 1.2.1 above, there is no specified period before commencement of an insolvency procedure within which the relevant act must have been undertaken in order for liability to attach to a director (see also paragraph 8.1).
- 2.1.5 As a general rule, there must be a causal link between a directors' violation and the loss incurred by the company, the creditor and/or the shareholders. Both the damage and the causal link have to be proven by the plaintiff.

2.2 Directors' duties

- 2.2.1 Directors owe the corporation a general duty of due care and diligence, based on the nature of their office and on their expertise. In general, SpA non-executive directors carry no liability for damages following actions or omissions relating to the exercise of powers formally or de facto delegated to the executive committee or to one or more executive directors¹⁸.
- 2.2.2 However – no matter whether an executive or non-executive – directors of SpA must act in an informed way¹⁹ and are jointly and severally liable vis-à-vis the corporation if, being aware of actions damaging the corporation, they fail to do what is in their power to avoid or reduce the harmful consequences of such actions or omissions²⁰.
- 2.2.3 Liability for such actions does not apply to the directors who, being without fault, promptly express in the minutes their dissent and give immediate written notice to the chairman of the board of statutory auditors.
- 2.2.4 Specific duties attach to members of the audit committee under the one-tier corporate governance system. The audit committee must verify the adequacy of the company's organizational structure, internal control system and management and accounting system. It must also perform the additional tasks assigned to it by the board of directors, with special reference to relations with the company's independent auditor²¹.

¹⁸ Article 5, paragraph 2, Bankruptcy Law. According to case law, a company is insolvent, inter alia, if it faces unfavorable conditions of liquidity, irrespective of the ratio of assets to liabilities, or if it has insufficient cash flow to meet its current obligations in spite of positive net assets (e.g., due to illiquid investments). Likewise, a company may be insolvent, despite having large inventories, if its goods are not saleable under standard conditions without resorting to selling below cost, or if the company faces unfavorable terms of access to credit due to its particular situation or general market conditions.

²⁰ Article 2381, Civil Code.

²¹ Article 2392, Civil Code.

- 2.2.4.1 Audit committees under the one-tier corporate governance system also have the power to file a complaint with the court alleging that other directors have violated their duties and that the company may suffer damage therefrom. The court may then order an inspection and, if the irregularities are found, it may order provisional measures and call the general meeting for the consequent resolutions or, in the most serious cases, remove the directors and appoint a judicial administrator²².
- 2.2.4.2 Listed companies' audit committees under the one-tier corporate governance system have a similar duty to report to CONSOB (the Italian Securities and Exchange Commission) any irregularities in the management of the company²³.
- 2.2.4.3 Therefore, audit committee members who, being aware of actions damaging the corporations taken by executive directors in violation of their duties, omit to file the complaint mentioned above under paragraph 2.2.4.2 or (if the corporation is listed) to report irregularities to CONSOB will probably be held liable for breach of their duty to do what is in their power to avoid or reduce the damage following the harmful action.
- 2.2.5 Directors of a SpA are also jointly and severally liable vis-à-vis the corporate creditors if they fail to comply with their duties concerning the preservation of the company's assets²⁴ (i.e., the duties which are likely to have an impact on the company's solvency, such as rules on distributions to shareholders, formation of capital, drawing up of financial statements, issuance of bonds).
- 2.2.6 Since the rule described under paragraph 2.2.5 is not replicated by the corresponding provisions applicable to SRL, corporate law scholars debate whether the liability towards creditors may be applied by analogy to the SRL directors who fail to comply with the preservation duties applicable to SRL – the interpretation favored by the prevailing case law – or whether their liability should otherwise be derived from general tort law or company law principles.
- 2.2.7 Directors having an interest – on their own behalf or on behalf of third parties – in a transaction carried out by the company may incur liability if they do not comply with certain rules. In particular (i) directors must disclose their interest to the board of directors, even if such interest is not conflicting with the interest of the company; and (ii) an executive director having any interest in a proposed transaction within the scope of his powers must solicit prior board approval for such transaction. The interested director is not required to abstain from voting on the resolution approving the transaction, but the resolution must state explicitly the reasons for, and the benefit to the company of, the transaction. In the event that these provisions are not complied with, or that the transaction would not have been approved without the vote of the interested director, the resolution approving the detrimental transaction may be challenged and the interested director may be held liable for damages incurred by the company as a result of the transaction²⁵.

²⁵ Article 2394, Civil Code.

- 2.2.8 Moreover, directors having an interest conflicting with the company's interest may incur criminal liability (punished by imprisonment for six months to three years) if they carry out or resolve the transfer of corporate assets for the purpose of procuring an unjustified profit or other advantage to themselves or third parties and thereby intentionally cause damage to the company²⁶.
- 2.2.9 In application of general tort law principles, directors are also liable – together with the corporation – for those damages suffered by individual shareholders and/or third parties as a direct result of their negligence or willful misconduct²⁷. So, for instance, directors issuing false financial statements may be held liable toward shareholders who acquired shares relying upon such statements.

2.3 Directors' duties in the event of a company's dissolution

- 2.3.1 Specific liability provisions apply in the case of a company's dissolution. Such provisions are worth discussing, because one of the events of dissolution as indicated by the law frequently occurs before or at the time a company becomes insolvent: the one connected with the so-called "recapitalize or liquidate rule".
- 2.3.2 Before describing this rule, it is worth recalling that, when an event of dissolution occurs²⁸, directors have a duty to inform the general public without delay that the company is dissolved by way of a notice to be deposited at the Companies Register. If they fail to do so, they are liable to the company, its shareholders, creditors and other third parties for damages²⁹.
- 2.3.3 Upon the occurrence of an event of dissolution and until liquidators are appointed³⁰, directors may manage the company for the sole purpose of preserving the integrity and value of corporate assets. Directors are personally and jointly liable for the damages caused to the company, its shareholders, creditors and third parties for breach of such provision (i.e., entering into transactions with a purpose other than the preservation of the integrity and value of corporate assets)³¹. Since this provision was introduced by the 2003 company law reform, there is no settled case law as to which transactions may fall under this provision; arguably transactions which imply a material increase in the exposure of the company may fall within its scope.
- 2.3.4 According to the recapitalize or liquidate rule, if, as a result of losses exceeding one-third of the share capital, the share capital itself falls below the statutory minimum prescribed by the law (i.e., Euro 120,000 for SpA and Euro 10,000 for SRL), the directors must call without delay a general meeting. The shareholders will resolve whether to reconstitute the capital to an amount not less than the statutory minimum or whether to convert the company into an SRL (provided that the SpA still has net assets, or shareholders contribute assets worth, at least Euro 10,000) or into a partnership (which has no minimum capital). Unless either measure is taken, the company must be dissolved³².

²⁸ Article 2395, Civil Code.

²⁹ Relevant events of dissolution are the following (Article 2484, Civil Code): (i) impossibility to function or protracted inactivity of the shareholders meeting; (ii) reduction of capital below the minimum required by law, unless the company is recapitalized or converted into another company (see text below, paragraph 2.3.4); (iii) voluntary dissolution resolved upon by the shareholders meeting; (iv) other events identified in the by-laws.

³⁰ Article 2484, Civil Code.

³¹ See paragraph 3.2.1 below.

³² Article 2485, Civil Code.

- 2.3.5 According to the case law developed under the previous regime, directors have an ongoing duty to monitor the company's accounts to determine whether net assets fall below the thresholds prescribed by the law. This implies that directors breach the recapitalize or liquidate rule if, during the fiscal year, they willfully or negligently fail to acknowledge that net assets have fallen below the specified thresholds and hence do not call the shareholders meeting.
- 2.3.6 Failure to act by the general meeting when net assets have fallen below these thresholds is an event of dissolution. In practice, it often happens that companies are declared insolvent well after such an event of dissolution has occurred. When this is the case, the directors' actions and omissions subsequent to the time when a diligent director would have taken the steps required by the recapitalize or liquidate rule will be reviewed by the court in light of the requirement that directors act with the sole purpose of maintaining the integrity and the value of the corporate assets.

2.4 Facts giving rise to both criminal and civil liability

- 2.4.1 Italian law provides for specific felonies resulting from actions carried out by the company's representatives in the period immediately preceding the declaration of bankruptcy or during the bankruptcy proceedings.
- 2.4.2 The most relevant felonies punished by the Bankruptcy Law are criminal bankruptcy (bancarotta semplice) and fraudulent bankruptcy (bancarotta fraudolenta). The prerequisite for both of these offences is that the company is declared bankrupt³³.
- 2.4.3 Criminal bankruptcy (bancarotta semplice)³⁴
- 2.4.3.1 This criminal offence is committed when a director, with willful misconduct or gross negligence:
- (i) has wasted or contributed to waste a significant part of the company's assets in hazardous or openly irresponsible transactions;
 - (ii) has carried out or contributed to carry out highly imprudent operations, with the intention to delay bankruptcy proceedings;
 - (iii) has worsened or contributed to worsen the financial distress of the company, by delaying to file the request of declaration of bankruptcy, or by committing another act of gross negligence;
 - (vi) has not fulfilled the obligations undertaken pursuant to a composition with creditors carried out in order to avoid bankruptcy (concordato preventivo) or to end the bankruptcy proceedings (concordato fallimentare); or
 - (v) in the three years preceding the bankruptcy declaration, has kept (or has contributed to keeping) manifestly incomplete accounting books and other accounting records or has kept accounting books and other accounting records that do not comply with the applicable legal requirements; and ³³ Articles 2447, 2482-ter, and 2484, No. 4), Civil Code.

³⁴ The same rules apply in the case of the so-called concordato preventivo (composition with creditors) as well as, upon declaration of insolvency, in the case of liquidazione coatta amministrativa (forced administrative dissolution) and in the case of amministrazione straordinaria (extraordinary administration).

- (vi) by committing any of the actions under (i) to (v) above, has contributed to worsen the financial conditions of the company by disregarding the duties specifically imposed on him by the law.

2.4.3.2 A person found liable of bancarotta semplice is sanctioned with imprisonment for six months to two years and disqualification from carrying on business activities and from holding executive office in any business enterprise for a period of up to two years. Further ancillary sanctions may apply, based on general criminal law rules.

2.4.4 Fraudulent bankruptcy (bancarotta fraudolenta)³⁵

2.4.4.1 This criminal offence is committed when a director, with willful misconduct or gross negligence:

- (i) before the declaration of bankruptcy or during the bankruptcy proceedings, has fraudulently misappropriated, concealed, destroyed or dissipated the company's assets, in whole or in part, or has fraudulently acknowledged and accepted non-existent debts in order to damage the company's creditors;
- (ii) before the declaration of bankruptcy, has concealed, destroyed or falsified, in whole or in part, the company's accounting books or other accounting records, in order to gain an unlawful profit (also in the interest of a third party) or in order to damage the company's creditors, or has kept the company's books and accounting records in a manner that makes it impossible to reconstruct the company's assets or business operations;
- (iii) during the bankruptcy proceedings, has destroyed, concealed, or falsified the company's books and other accounting records;
- (iv) before the declaration of bankruptcy or during the bankruptcy proceedings, has effected payments or simulated priority rights, in order to favour certain creditors of the company;
- (v) before the declaration of bankruptcy, has worsened or contributed to worsen the financial conditions of the company by committing one of the following crimes: (i) false corporate declarations³⁶; (ii) false corporate declarations causing damages to the company's shareholders or creditors³⁷; (iii) unlawful refunds of capital contributions to shareholders³⁸; (iv) unlawful distribution of profits and corporate reserves³⁹; (v) transactions detrimental to the company's creditors⁴⁰; (vi) formation of a fictitious share capital⁴¹; (vii) unlawful disposal of corporate assets⁴²; or

- (vi) has caused with willful misconduct, or as a result of transactions carried out with willful misconduct, the bankruptcy of the company.

2.4.4.2 A person found liable of bancarotta fraudolenta is punished by imprisonment for three to ten years – except for (iv) above, as to which the term is one to five years – and disqualification from carrying on business activities and from holding executive office in any business enterprise for a period of ten years. Further ancillary sanctions may apply, based on general criminal law rules.

2.5 Extent of directors' liability for damages

2.5.1 In principle, no provision either in company or insolvency law makes directors liable to creditors in respect of the whole deficit and no such rule can be derived from general principles on breach of contract, torts or directors' duties toward creditors.

2.5.2 However, the Supreme Court (Corte di Cassazione) has repeatedly held that, when a causal link can be found between the violation of directors' duties, primarily their duties under the recapitalize or liquidate rule or those arising once an event of dissolution occurs (see paragraph 2.3 above), and the deficit to creditors (or in one Court's ruling, the company's insolvency), the directors are liable for the entire deficit.

2.5.3 Prior to the 2003 company law reform, in light of a now-repealed rule under which directors were forbidden to "engage in new transactions" once an event of dissolution occurred, some courts held directors liable for any deficit accumulated after the occurrence of the event. Under the new regime (see paragraphs 2.3.2 and 2.3.3 above), directors will possibly be held liable for the whole deficit accumulated in connection with actions or omissions taken with purposes other than the preservation of the integrity and value of corporate assets. Based on the existing case law, it is not possible to assess whether judges may construe this formula broadly and hold that, after an event of dissolution, the continuation of the company's business is per se inconsistent with those purposes.

2.5.4 Courts have consistently held that the deficit to creditors is no cap to directors' liability (i.e., that they may be held liable for further damages, if the plaintiff provides evidence thereof). This is because in an insolvency proceeding the trustee may also bring suit against directors for damages suffered by the corporation (i.e., by shareholders qua shareholders).

2.5.5 Courts have also held directors are liable to creditors in respect of the whole deficit in cases in which directors had completely omitted to keep the company's books.

2.5.6 See also paragraph 1.2.2 above for the extent of directors' liability in the event of violation of the duty to petition the court for an insolvency ruling.

2.6 Defences

2.6.1 The following are the most common defences to which directors resort in liability suits brought by the insolvency trustee:

- Non-executive directors may argue that harmful actions were taken by executive directors within the scope of their delegated power (see paragraph 2.2.1). Once this is proven, the issue becomes whether non-executive directors knew or should have known, in light of their general duty of due care and diligence, that harmful actions had occurred and whether they failed to do what was in their power to avoid or reduce the consequences.
 - Statute of limitations (see paragraph 8.1).
 - Absence of causal link between the violation and the damage suffered by the corporation and/or its creditors.
 - Prompt expression of dissent to the harmful act (reported in the board minutes) and immediate written notice to the chairman of the board of statutory auditors⁴³.
- 2.6.2 The courts have consistently held that, for the purpose of determining whether the directors are liable towards the company for certain harmful transactions, it is generally irrelevant whether such transactions have been previously authorized by the shareholders.

QUESTION 3

3. Other persons involved with the company's affairs who may become liable in respect of their actions during the "twilight" period
- (a) In addition to the formally appointed directors of the company, can others be held liable in respect of the company's activities during the "twilight" period if the company were to become subject to a formal insolvency procedure?
 - (b) In respect of which acts may other persons be held liable and to what extent does the liability of third parties differ from that for directors identified in question 2 above?
 - (c) Will liability be limited to that resulting from involvement with a particular transaction or more generally in relation to the overall loss suffered by creditors?
- 3.1 General manager
- 3.1.1 Italian companies usually appoint a general manager/chief operating officer (direttore generale), who may or may not be also a member of the board of directors. General managers are liable to the corporation, its creditors and third parties under the same rules applicable to directors. Liability, however, only covers violations relating to the general managers' tasks as defined in the appointment resolution or in the by-laws.

⁴³ Article 2634, Civil Code.

- 3.1.2 Like directors (see paragraph 2.2.9 above), general managers may be held liable to shareholders and third parties according to general tort law principles.
- 3.1.3 Like directors (see paragraph 2.4 above), general managers may be held criminally liable for bancarotta semplice or bancarotta fraudolenta.
- 3.1.4 It is debated whether other top officers shall be deemed subject to the liability regime applicable to general managers. However, in listed companies, the officer in charge of preparing the company's financial reports (dirigente preposto alla redazione dei documenti contabili societari), in relation to the duties and responsibilities entrusted to his office – essentially corresponding to those typically assigned to chief financial officers – is expressly subject to the same liability regime applicable to the members of the board of directors⁴⁴

3.2 Company liquidators

- 3.2.1 When a company is dissolved, the shareholders' meeting, or the court in case of inertia by the shareholders, appoints one or more liquidators, whose task it is to sell the company's assets, whether as a going concern or piecemeal, pay creditors and distribute any further proceeds to shareholders. A company may of course enter insolvency proceedings after liquidators have been appointed, in which case the bankruptcy trustee may also sue the liquidators for damages.
- 3.2.2 Liquidators must perform their duties with the degree of care and diligence required by the nature of their office. Rules on directors' liability equally apply to liquidators who have acted in breach of their duties⁴⁵.
- 3.2.3 Like directors (see paragraph 2.4 above), liquidators may be held criminally liable for bancarotta semplice or *bancarotta fraudolenta*⁴⁶.

3.3 Members of the board of statutory auditors

- 3.3.1 The board of statutory auditors in companies who opted for the traditional corporate governance system has a duty to verify: (i) directors' and managers' compliance with the law, the by-laws and principles of correct management; (ii) the adequacy of the organizational, administrative and accounting arrangements adopted by the company and the actual operation thereof.
- 3.3.1.1 In closely-held SpA, which are not under an obligation to prepare consolidated financial statements, the by-laws may entrust to the board of statutory auditors also the auditing of the company's financial statements. In those SRL where the board of statutory auditors is mandatory, the board audits the company's financial statements, unless the by-laws provide otherwise.

⁴⁴ Article 2392, Civil Code for SpA and, with minor differences, Article 2476, Civil Code for SRL.

- 3.3.2 Should the board of statutory auditors become aware or have reason to suspect misbehaviour by directors' or managers' it must act in order to reduce or remove the harmful consequences thereof⁴⁷. It may call a shareholders' meeting and/or file a complaint with the court for material irregularities and/or – provided that two-thirds of the members approve the proposal – bring a derivative suit against directors⁴⁸. Listed companies' boards of auditors may also call a meeting of the board of directors or the executive committee (such powers can also be exercised by at least two members of the board of statutory auditors) and must report to CONSOB of any irregularity of which they become aware⁴⁹.
- 3.3.3 The members of the board of statutory auditors must perform their duties with the degree of care and diligence required by the nature of their office. They are jointly and severally liable – together with the directors – vis-à-vis the company and/or its creditors for the directors' actions and omissions, if the damage would not have occurred had they complied with their duties.
- 3.3.4 Bankruptcy trustees often sue members of the board of statutory auditors for damages according to the provisions described under paragraphs 3.3.1 to 3.3.3 alleging that:
- they failed to exercise their powers to avoid or reduce the damage brought to the corporation and/or its creditors by directors' or managers' actions and omissions;
 - the corporation and its creditors would have suffered no damage (or a lower one) if the members of the board of statutory auditors had complied with their duties.
- 3.3.5 Although the law clearly requires the existence of a link between the statutory auditors' failure to comply with their duties and the damage incurred by the corporation and/or its creditors, courts tend to shift upon the defendants the burden of proving that the damage would not have been avoided or reduced if the statutory auditors had complied with their duties. Further, courts are usually strict in evaluating statutory auditors' conduct when directors kept running the company in violation of their duties under the recapitalize or liquidate rule or of provisions concerning the management of dissolved companies.
- 3.3.6 Like directors, members of the board of statutory auditors may be held liable to shareholders and third parties according to general tort law principles.
- 3.3.7 Like directors, statutory auditors may be held criminally liable for bancarotta semplice or bancarotta fraudolenta.

⁴⁷ Article 2633, Civil Code specifically sanctions as bancarotta fraudolenta the unlawful distribution of corporate assets by liquidators.

⁴⁸ The members of the board of statutory auditors are under a duty to attend the board of directors and executive committees meetings (Article 2405, Civil Code) and that they may at any time carry out inspections, also individually, and request information from the directors regarding the company's management (Article 2403-bis, Civil Code).

⁴⁹ Article 2393, paragraph 3, Civil Code.

3.4 Members of the supervisory board

- 3.4.1 In companies with a two-tier governance system, the supervisory board performs auditing functions which are very similar, in terms of powers and duties, to those pertaining to the board of statutory auditors in the traditional governance system. There are, however, at least two relevant differences. On the one hand, the company's by-laws may not entrust the supervisory board with the audit of the company's financial statements, a task which always has to be performed by an external auditor, even in closely held corporations. On the other hand, the supervisory board appoints and removes the members of the management board.
- 3.4.2 According to the Civil Code, the members of the supervisory board must perform their duties with the degree of care and diligence required by the nature of their office and are jointly and severally liable – together with the members of the management board – vis-à-vis the company and/or its creditors for the damages caused by actions or omissions of the management board, if such damages would not have occurred if they complied with their duties⁵⁰.
- 3.4.3 If the by-laws entrust the supervisory board also with the power to resolve upon strategic transactions and industrial and financial plans drafted by the management board⁵¹, the members of the supervisory board, according to the prevailing interpretation, may be held directly liable vis-à-vis the company, its creditors and/or third parties for the damages resulting from such transactions. However, the members of the management board will remain in any case liable for actions they carry out for the implementation of such resolutions.
- 3.4.4 Liability to shareholders and third parties according to general tort law principles applies to supervisory board members as well.
- 3.4.5 Like directors, supervisory board members may be held criminally liable for bancarotta semplice or bancarotta fraudolenta.

3.5 External auditors

- 3.5.1 SpA are generally required to have external auditors reviewing their financial statements; however the by-laws of closely-held SpA may entrust such review to the board of statutory auditors.
- 3.5.2 External auditors are required by law to verify:
- (a) during the fiscal year, that companies' accounts are kept properly and their transactions reported correctly in the accounting records;
 - (b) that companies' annual and consolidated financial statements correspond to the results of the accounting records and tests performed and that they comply with the relevant statutory and regulatory provisions⁵².

⁵⁰ Articles 149, paragraph 3, and 151, paragraph 2, Legislative Decree No. 58 of 25 February 1998.

⁵¹ Article 2409-terdecies, paragraph 3, Civil Code.

⁵² Article 2409-terdecies, paragraph 1, Civil Code.

- 3.5.3 External auditors may obtain documents and information from the company's directors and may carry out examinations, inspections and controls; with respect to listed companies, they must report to the board of statutory auditors and to CONSOB without delay of any irregularities⁵³.
- 3.5.4 External auditors are liable vis-à-vis the corporation, its creditors and/or third parties for the damages occurred as a result of a breach of their duties⁵⁴.
- 3.5.5 If the external auditor is a legal entity (as required in the case of listed corporations), liability extends to the persons who have audited the company's accounts on its behalf.

3.6 De facto directors

- 3.6.1 Italian courts hold that the directors' liability regime equally applies to anyone, whether a shareholder or an outsider, who acts as a director on a regular basis, even in the absence of any kind of formal or informal appointment.
- 3.6.2 De facto directors may be held criminally liable for bancarotta semplice or bancarotta fraudolenta (see paragraph 2.4 above).

3.7 Sole shareholder

- 3.7.1 After the 2003 company law reform, the Civil Code provides that, in the event of insolvency, for obligations incurred during the period in which the capital of a SpA or SRL was held by a sole shareholder, such shareholder will be unlimitedly liable for the company's obligations if⁵⁵
 - (a) it has not fully paid its capital contributions upon subscription; or
 - (b) the directors or the sole shareholder omit to file with the Companies' Register a declaration identifying the sole shareholder.
- 3.7.2 According to decisions rendered by Italian courts prior to the 2003 company law reform, shares were deemed to be owned by a single shareholder only when it formally held all the outstanding shares or when the other shareholders were mere nominees. For instance, courts have consistently held that no sole shareholder existed when most of the shares were held by one company and the remaining shares were held by one of its wholly owned subsidiaries. Some commentators doubt whether such a formalistic interpretation will be confirmed under the new regime, meaning that a company with a "quasi-sole" shareholder who has not fully paid up its shares or who has omitted to declare that it is the sole shareholder may be held liable for its company's obligations.

⁵⁵ Article 2409-sexies, Civil Code, and Article 164, Legislative Decree No. 58 of 25 February 1998.

- 3.7.3 According to the prevailing case law, the sole shareholder cannot itself be declared bankrupt as a consequence of its unlimited liability for a company's debts.

3.8 Shareholders exercising a back-up business (impresa fiancheggiatrice)

- 3.8.1 As previously mentioned, shareholders may be held liable if they are found to have acted as de facto directors or in the case of a parent company, abusing its "direction and coordination" powers (see paragraph 3.10.3) or, finally, under general tort law principles (see paragraph 3.11). If none of these situations occurs, shareholders will not be held liable for the company's obligations.
- 3.8.2 Italian courts have, however, developed a doctrine under which individuals controlling a group of companies and coordinating and directing such companies' activities may be held to carry-out a back-up commercial business ("impresa fiancheggiatrice") and hence may be declared insolvent as such⁵⁶. However, such individuals will only be liable for debts incurred personally and in the exercise of such back-up business, as opposed to liabilities incurred by their controlled companies. As a matter of practice, only controlled companies' creditors having obtained a personal guarantee from such shareholders will have a claim against them.
- 3.8.3 This doctrine also implies that such shareholders may be held criminally liable for the actions described above (see paragraph 2.4), even in the absence of evidence that they were de facto directors of the insolvent company.

3.9 SRL shareholders resolving upon or authorizing harmful transactions

- 3.9.1 With regard to SRL only, the 2003 company law reform introduced a substantial innovation in the area of shareholders' liability for management actions. According to the new regime, the shareholders who willfully resolved upon or authorized harmful transactions to the detriment of the company, its creditors and/or third parties may be held jointly and severally liable – together with the directors – for the damages resulting from such transactions⁵⁷.

3.10 Groups of companies and the liability of parent companies and their directors

- 3.10.1 According to one of the most problematic provisions in the 2003 company law reform⁵⁸, under certain circumstances parent companies and their directors may be held liable for the damages caused to the subsidiaries' shareholders or creditors.

⁵⁶ Article 2325, Civil Code.

⁵⁸ Article 2476, paragraph 7, Civil Code. As noted by certain commentators, although this provision expressly applies only to limited liability companies, it cannot be entirely excluded that this rule may be somehow extended by the courts to corporations.

- 3.10.1.1 This new liability regime applies to legal entities⁵⁹ with so-called “direction and co-ordination” powers over an Italian company⁶⁰. The law does not set forth specific criteria for determining when an entity exercises de facto “direction and co-ordination” powers over a given company and there is no settled judicial interpretation of this concept yet. However, based on a similar concept under the Prodi Law and according to the prevailing interpretation of the new rule among commentators, an entity may be found to have “direction and co-ordination” powers over a given company where a significant part of the management decisions at the company (a “Directed Company”), although formally implemented by the Directed Company’s managers, is continuously and substantively taken by management at another entity (a “Directing Entity”)⁶¹. The new legal framework also applies when an entity exercises direction and co-ordination powers over a company pursuant to ad-hoc agreements or by-laws provisions⁶².
- 3.10.2 Although the concept of control is not per se equivalent to the exercise of “direction and co-ordination” powers⁶³ a parent entity is rebuttably presumed to exercise “direction and co-ordination” powers with respect to (i) any subsidiaries for which consolidation is compulsory⁶⁴, and (ii) any subsidiaries under its sole control⁶⁵. To rebut this presumption, convincing evidence of appropriate management independence at the subsidiary company should be provided. If management decisions at the subsidiary’s level are effectively independent from the parent entity’s influence, the new regime should not apply.
- 3.10.3 Under the new regime, a Directing Entity may be liable to minority shareholders and creditors of a Directed Company for abuse of “direction and co-ordination” powers⁶⁶. In particular, a Directing Entity that, acting in its own interest or in the interest of third parties, mismanages a Directed Company, is liable:
- (a) to the Directed Company’s other shareholders for any ensuing damage affecting returns on, or the value of, their shareholdings; and
 - (b) to the Directed Company’s creditors for any impairment caused to the Directed Company’s assets that may affect the creditors’ ability to collect on their claims.

⁵⁹ Article 2497, Civil Code.

⁶¹ Article 2497, Civil Code.

⁶³ Article 2497-septies, Civil Code.

- 3.10.4 Any person concurring in the mismanagement (e.g., the Directing Entity's directors), or benefiting from it (e.g., another subsidiary of the Directing Entity), is jointly and severally liable with the Directing Entity⁶⁷.
- 3.10.5 Liability is excluded when damages resulting from the mismanagement are: (a) fully reversed, including through subsequent transactions specifically effected for this purpose, or (b) offset by the overall effect of the "direction and coordination" activities over the Directed Company.
- 3.10.6 Creditors or minority shareholders may bring action only if they have been unable to collect damages from the Directed Company. Therefore, liability of a Directing Entity may in practice be limited to those cases in which the Directed Company itself has become insolvent.
- 3.10.7 Further, under the Prodi Law, in the case of a group of companies, the directors of the parent company may be held jointly liable with the subsidiary's directors for the damages caused to the insolvent subsidiary by means of an abuse of direction powers within the group⁶⁸.

3.11 Other third parties under general tort law principles

- 3.11.1 Third parties involved with the business of a company which enters into a bankruptcy proceeding may be subject to liability if all or part of the loss suffered by the insolvent company is caused by their wrongful action. The plaintiff must establish the existence of (i) a wilful misconduct or gross negligence by the third party; (ii) the damage caused to the company; and (iii) a casual link between the two.
- 3.11.2 The loss may either be (i) general (i.e., suffered by the company, and therefore by all the creditors) in which case the bankruptcy trustee must bring the action or (ii) specific to one creditor in which case the action must be brought by the individual creditor.
- 3.11.3 The action is a civil action which results in the payment of damages (either to the company, in the event of an action brought by the bankruptcy trustee, or to the single creditor, in the event of an action brought by an individual creditor).

3.12 Banks

- 3.12.1 Most suits against third parties as in paragraph 3.11 above are brought against banks or financial institutions which dealt with the insolvent company. The claim is generally based on an abusive grant of financing or an unjustified interruption of financing.

⁶⁷ Article 2497, Civil Code.

⁶⁸ The liability of persons benefiting from the mismanagement is limited to the benefits actually received by such persons (see Article 2497, paragraph 2, Civil Code).

- 3.12.2 Banks which financed a company in an insolvency situation, thereby delaying the opening of a formal insolvency procedure in order to gain certain advantages (e.g., in order to avoid claw-back actions, or to obtain specific guarantees), may be held liable against the company's creditors once the company is declared bankrupt. In fact, the creditors would not have started or continued a business relationship with the company if the insolvency situation were apparent and not hidden by the bank's grant of financing. The loss is specific to the injured creditors and the action against the bank is brought by such creditors and not by the bankruptcy trustee.
- 3.12.3 An unjustified interruption of financing occurs when a bank, without any legitimate reason, stops granting financing to a company, thereby causing its insolvency and the opening of a formal bankruptcy proceeding. In this case, the damage is suffered by the company and therefore the action shall be brought by the bankruptcy trustee.

QUESTION 4

4. Counterparties dealing with the company during the twilight period

- (a) From the point of view of a counter-party dealing with the company during the twilight period, what are the potential heads of challenge which may lead to transactions with the company being set aside.
- (b) What defences, if any, to the areas of vulnerability identified above will be available to a counter-party seeking to protect a transaction from being attacked?

4.1 Transactions potentially subject to a claw-back action

- 4.1.1 According to Italian Bankruptcy Law, under certain circumstances, the bankruptcy trustee may bring an action for the voidance of certain payments and transactions carried out by the company during the so-called preference period (revocatoria fallimentare). The purpose of such action is to reconstitute the company's assets in the interest of all creditors by unwinding certain transactions which (i) have been carried out to the detriment of the company or of creditors as a whole, or (ii) are unfairly beneficial to a specific creditor, and thus violate the general principle of equal treatment of creditors (par condicio creditorum).
- 4.1.2 The Civil Code provides for a similar remedy, called ordinary claw-back procedure (revocatoria ordinaria), whereby a creditor may challenge the transactions undertaken by its debtor – irrespective of its actual insolvency – which defraud the creditor's rights, even if such transactions are carried out before the preference period and subject only to the applicable statute of limitations (see answers to question 8).

- 4.1.3 In light of the foregoing, a third party contracting with a company runs the risk that transactions entered into with the company during the preference period (or even before) may be voided on the basis of the actions described hereof.

4.2 Summary of heads of challenge

4.2.1 Bankruptcy claw-back procedure (revocatoria fallimentare)

- 4.2.1.1 The purpose of the bankruptcy claw-back action – which was substantially amended by the 2005 Bankruptcy Law reform – is to unwind certain transactions carried out by a company to the detriment of the generality of its creditors.

- 4.2.1.2 Compared to other jurisdictions, Italian claw-back rules have traditionally been considered extremely favorable to bankruptcy trustees. Prior to the 2005 Bankruptcy Law reform, payments and transactions, including arm's length ones, could be voided by the court upon request of the bankruptcy trustee, if made within one or two years prior to the bankruptcy declaration, depending on the circumstances. The 2005 reform (i) has shortened the statutory preference periods to six months and one year, respectively; (ii) introduced additional criteria to establish when transactions may be voided as transactions outside the ordinary course of business; and (iii) established certain exemptions from the claw-back action.

4.2.1.3 The relevant preference period varies based on the specific transaction.

- (i) certain actions which fall within the ordinary course of business (i.e., conveyances for adequate consideration, payments of due and payable debts, and granting of security interests upon contracting a debt)⁶⁹ may be voided if (a) they have been carried out within six months prior to the opening of the bankruptcy proceeding, and (b) the bankruptcy trustee proves that the company's counterparty had actual knowledge of the company's insolvency at the time of the transaction⁷⁰ (but see paragraph 4.2.1.4 below for possible exemptions);
- (ii) certain actions which are outside the ordinary course of business (i.e., transactions for inadequate consideration, discharge of due and payable debts not made with cash or other normal means of payment, and pledges and mortgages granted for pre-existing debts not yet due and payable)⁷¹ may be voided if they have been carried out within one year prior to the opening of the bankruptcy proceeding; the company's counterparty may avoid the claw-back by proving that it was not aware of the debtor's insolvency at the time of the transaction;

⁶⁹ Article 90, Legislative Decree No. 270 of 8 July 1999. Some commentators doubt whether this provision is still in force under the new regime of corporate groups, claiming that it should be regarded as implicitly repealed.

⁷⁰ Article 67, paragraph 2, Bankruptcy Law.

⁷¹ In the case of a legal entity (such as a corporation), knowledge is determined by reference to the knowledge of the directors or the officers who contracted with the counterparty. Knowledge may be proved by showing, through circumstantial evidence, that a person using normal diligence would have become aware of the insolvency, (e.g., through public notices of default on promissory notes or executive actions).

- (iii) pledges and mortgages granted as security for due and payable debts may be voided if they have been granted within six months prior to the opening of the bankruptcy proceeding⁷²; the company's counterparty may avoid the claw-back by proving that it did not have actual knowledge of the debtor's insolvency at the time the security was granted.

4.2.1.4 One of the most important innovations of the recent Bankruptcy Law reforms was the introduction of certain exemptions from bankruptcy claw-back⁷³. Exempted transactions include the following:

- (i) payment of goods and services made in the ordinary course of business on customary market terms and conditions;
- (ii) payment of salaries to employees;
- (iii) transactions, payments, guarantees and security in the context of a court-supervised composition with creditors (concordato preventivo), a restructuring agreement ratified by the court (accordo di ristrutturazione) or a recovery plan assessed by the debtor's auditors (piano attestato di risanamento);
- (iv) bank remittances to the extent that they did not materially and durably decrease debtor's exposure towards the bank; and
- (v) sale agreements (or preliminary agreements) of real estate properties used by the purchaser (or its close relatives) for residential purposes, provided that the agreed consideration was fair and the agreement was registered at the Land Registry.

4.2.1.5 Transactions without consideration and early repayments of debts with a maturity date falling on or after the date of the bankruptcy declaration have no effect vis-à-vis the creditors, if made within two years prior to the opening of the bankruptcy proceeding⁷⁵.

4.2.1.6 The bankruptcy claw-back action is also available in the case of amministrazione straordinaria, but only if the procedure involves a sale of corporate assets (liquidation purpose)⁷⁶. By contrast, the claw-back is not available when the amministrazione straordinaria involves the implementation of a restructuring plan (recovery purpose).

4.2.2 Ordinary claw-back procedure (revocatoria ordinaria)

4.2.2.1 Beside the specific bankruptcy claw-back action available vis-à-vis bankrupt debtors, the Civil Code⁷⁷ grants creditors a general right to challenge transactions that defraud their rights. This remedy is available to any creditor, regardless of the actual status of insolvency of the debtor. However, once the bankruptcy proceeding has been opened, only the bankruptcy trustee is entitled to bring this type of action on behalf of all creditors.

⁷² Article 67, paragraph 1, Bankruptcy Law.

⁷³ Article 67, paragraph 1, Bankruptcy Law.

⁷⁴ Article 67, paragraph 3, Bankruptcy Law.

⁷⁵ Articles 64 and 65, Bankruptcy Law. Strictly speaking, these transactions and payments, rather than being subject to claw-back, are ineffective by operation of law.

⁷⁶ Article 49, Legislative Decree No. 270 of 8 July 1999.

⁷⁷ Article 2901, Civil Code.

- 4.2.2.2 The requirements for the revocatoria ordinaria are (i) the existence of a damage to the creditor and (ii) actual knowledge by the debtor and by the third party of the damage caused to the creditor. If the detrimental transaction occurred before the creditor's right arose, the plaintiff must provide evidence that such a transaction was intentionally performed by the debtor – with the participation of the third party – to harm the creditor's rights. However, the revocatoria ordinaria can be quite a lengthy procedure and the burden of proof upon the plaintiff is difficult to meet.

QUESTION 5

5. Enforcement

By whom may action be brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3 above)?

- 5.1 In the case of an insolvency proceeding, the action for damages against directors, members of the board of statutory auditors and of the supervisory board, general managers, de facto directors, external auditors and liquidators may only be brought by the bankruptcy trustee⁷⁸. The same rule applies to actions against parent companies and their directors for damages suffered by the subsidiary's creditors⁷⁹.
- 5.2 Actions against the sole shareholders (see paragraph 3.7) or to shareholders exercising a backup business (see paragraph 3.8) pertain to individual creditors of the insolvent company or of the business respectively: the trustee may not exercise them collectively. In the latter case, however, the insolvent company might also be a creditor of the backup business, whereupon the action will pertain to the bankruptcy trustee.
- 5.3 In the event of bankruptcy of a Directed Company, the action inuring to the creditors as described above (see paragraph 3.10.3) can only be exercised by the bankruptcy trustee⁸⁰.
- 5.4 With the exception of the action referred to under paragraph 5.3, even during insolvency proceedings, nothing prevents individual creditors and other third parties from suing directors and other persons (see question 3) for damages personally and directly received as a consequence of the latter's actions or omissions, when the action is based upon general tort law principles (see paragraph 3.11.2).

⁷⁸ Article 146, Bankruptcy Law.

⁷⁹ Article 2497, Civil Code.

⁸⁰ Ibidem, paragraph 4.

QUESTION 6

6. Remedies: orders available to the domestic court

In respect of the offences identified in question 2, 3 and 4 above, what remedies are available in the domestic court?

- 6.1 For causes of actions outlined under paragraphs 2.1, 2.2, 2.3, 3.1, 3.2, 3.3, 3.4, 3.5, 3.6, 3.9, 3.10, 3.11, and 3.12, liability is civil and extends only to actual damages with a causal link to the defendant's actions or omission, subject to the qualifications provided above. For causes of actions described above under paragraphs 3.7 and 3.8, the shareholders are personally liable for the company's or the business debt.
- 6.2 As mentioned above, the revocatoria fallimentare and the revocatoria ordinaria are aimed at obtaining a voidance of the transaction under challenge. As a consequence of such voidance, the goods that have been transferred from the company to third parties or their proceeds must be returned.
- 6.3 Penalties for criminal bankruptcy and fraudulent bankruptcy have been described under paragraph 2.4 above. According to general principles, a person found liable for a criminal offence may also be held liable for civil damages caused to third parties by his conduct; the final decision of a criminal court is binding on a civil court adjudicating a civil liability case if such decision is rendered after a full trial.
- 6.4 No disgorgement of profit remedy is available under Italian civil law. By contrast, under criminal law, the court may order the forfeiture of the profits resulting from the crime.

QUESTION 7

7. Duty to co-operate

- (a) To what extent are directors (and others identified in question 3 above) obliged to co-operate with an investigation into the company's affairs following its insolvency?
 - (b) Are any human rights laws applicable in the domestic jurisdiction in relation to any obligations (e.g., in the UK and other European jurisdictions Article 6 of the European Convention on Human Rights may apply if domestic law compels a person to provide potentially self-incriminating information at the request of the office-holder appointed under the relevant insolvency procedure adopted)?

7.1 Obligation to commence insolvency proceedings

When a company faces an insolvency situation, the directors or liquidators have the legal obligation to file a petition for a bankruptcy declaration, or commence another insolvency procedure. Failure to do so could result in criminal liability (see paragraphs 1.2.2 and 2.4).

7.2 Participation in the initial steps of the proceedings

Before the bankruptcy declaration, the bankruptcy court shall carry out a preliminary investigation in order to assess the insolvency situation. As part of such preliminary investigation, the court must summon the company's directors.

7.3 Personal duties after the bankruptcy declaration

Once the company has been declared bankrupt, the directors and liquidators are subject to certain obligations. In particular, they must inform the bankruptcy trustee of any change to their residence or domicile. If information or clarifications are needed in connection with the bankruptcy procedure, the directors and liquidators, if so requested, must appear before the judge in charge of the bankruptcy proceeding, the bankruptcy trustee or the creditors' committee. In case of impediment or other justified reason, the judge in charge of the bankruptcy proceeding may authorize the directors and liquidators to appoint an attorney-in-fact to appear on their behalf⁸¹.

7.4 Obligation to co-operate during the bankruptcy proceeding

7.4.1 Given that the directors of a bankrupt company are often best placed to know and understand the company and its activities, their collaboration with the bankruptcy court and with the officers appointed to conduct the bankruptcy proceedings is invaluable. Italian law thus provides for the close involvement of the company's directors in the proceedings.

7.4.1.1 Beside the general duties described under paragraph 7.3 above, the directors have certain specific obligations such as the following.

7.4.2 Immediately after the bankruptcy declaration, the bankruptcy trustee shall draw up a report of the assets of the company, and before completing the report he shall ask the directors whether they are aware of any assets which have not already been included in the report. The directors must provide a response, and if they fail to do so, they may incur criminal liability.⁸²

7.4.3 The directors must be heard by the judge delegated to oversee the drawing up of the lists of creditors' claims, and attend the meeting scheduled for the verification of such claims, although such attendance is not mandatory nor sanctioned in any manner.

⁸¹ Articles 146 and 49, Bankruptcy Law.

⁸² Articles 87 and 220, Bankruptcy Law.

- 7.4.4 The general criminal law principle, according to which an indicted person has the right to remain silent during the prosecutio⁸³ applies also to the company directors charged with the crimes described under paragraph 2.4 above.

7.5 Human rights

- 7.5.1 Italy is a contracting party to the European Convention for the protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (Treaty of Rome dated 4 November 1950, the "Convention"), the provisions of which were incorporated into Law No. 848 of 4 August 1955.

- 7.5.2 The persons identified in response to question 3 will thus be entitled to rely upon the rights contained in the Convention (the "Convention Rights"). This is the case whether such persons are individuals or companies. In a bankruptcy context, a legal representative, director or other person entitled to Convention Rights under the Convention will be able to:

- (i) require that a particular provision of insolvency law is construed in accordance with such Convention Rights or otherwise declared incompatible; or
- (ii) claim that judicial bodies are a public authority and are acting unlawfully in breach of that person's Convention Rights.

- 7.5.3 In the context of bankruptcy proceedings, and the duty of co-operation discussed above, certain Convention rights may be particularly relevant. These include:

- (i) Article 6 - the right to a fair trial;
- (ii) Article 4 - prohibition of slavery and forced labour;
- (iii) Article 8 - right to respect for private and family life;
- (iv) Protocol 1, Article 1 - right to peaceful enjoyment of possessions.

- 7.5.4 Case law on the application of the Convention to bankruptcy proceedings is, however, particularly scarce in Italy.

QUESTION 8

8 Appeals and limitation periods

- (a) What limitation period, if any, will apply to actions brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3) in connection with the offences in question 2?

⁸³ Article 64, Criminal Procedure Code.

- (b) Please indicate whether an appeal is available from the decision of the lower court.

8.1 Statute of limitations

8.1.1 The statute of limitations for:

- (i) actions for damages against directors, statutory auditors, members of the supervisory board, general managers, voluntary liquidators, external auditors, and de facto directors, when based upon violations of their duties to the corporation, is five years from the date when the relevant person has ceased from office⁸⁴;
- (ii) actions for damages against directors, general managers, statutory auditors, voluntary liquidators, external auditors and de facto directors, when based upon violations of their duties to creditors (2.2.5), is five years from the date when the damage has occurred⁸⁵, i.e., according to the case law, from the date when the company's assets have become insufficient for the payment of the company's debts (this can be a date prior or subsequent to that in which the court declares the company insolvent, although courts tend to presume that the two dates coincide). According to some court decisions, if the defendant has ceased from office after the company's assets have become insufficient, the five-year period starts from the termination date;
- (iii) actions for damages against SRL directors and shareholders (paragraphs 2.2 and 3.9), is five years from the date when the damage has occurred⁸⁶. However, if, as is usually the case, the damage occurs before directors leave office, the five-year period starts from the termination date;
- (iv) all actions for damages described above under 2 or 3 which are based upon tort law principles, is five years from the date of the harmful act or omission⁸⁷.

8.1.2 Sole shareholders are liable for the debts of their company in special circumstances (paragraph 3.7). Similarly, shareholders exercising a back-up business are liable for the debts incurred in such activity. Actions against them can be brought so long as the relevant claims, whether stemming from a contract or from torts, are not statute barred. Subject to specific exceptions, the statute of limitations for actions relating to claims arising from a contract is ten years, while it is five years, as mentioned, for torts claims.

8.1.3 The majority of commentators holds that the liability of Directing Entities (see paragraph 3.10) is a specification of general tort law principles. If this is so, then the statute of limitations for such actions for damages is also five years. Otherwise, if liability is deemed to be contractual in nature, the statute of limitations is ten years.

⁸⁵ Article 2949, Civil Code; Article 223-septies, Disposizioni di Attuazione del Codice Civile; Article 164, Legislative Decree No. 58 of 25 February 1998.

⁸⁶ Article 2949, Civil Code

⁸⁷ Article 2947, Civil Code.

- 8.1.4 The statute of limitations for the revocatoria ordinaria is five years from the date when the transaction being challenged is carried out, whereas the statute of limitations for the revocatoria fallimentare is three years from the date of the bankruptcy declaration.
- 8.1.5 According to the general rules of Italian criminal law, the statute of limitations for criminal offences depends on the applicable sanctions. Accordingly, the statute of limitations for bancarotta semplice and for bancarotta fraudolenta, under normal circumstances, is 5 and 15 years, respectively.

8.2 Appeals

- 8.2.1 Any decisions rendered by lower courts are subject to appeals on the merits, and the decisions of the courts of appeal are subject to revision by the Supreme Court, but only on the basis of violations of laws.

QUESTION 9

9. Foreign Corporations

Do the legal provisions and procedures outlined above apply to both domestic and foreign corporations?

- 9.1 In general, Italian company law applies to companies incorporated in Italy and to companies incorporated abroad having their administrative seat or their principal place of business in Italy⁸⁸. Therefore, liability actions described above and based upon company law provisions⁸⁹ may be brought against such entities' directors and other relevant persons.
- 9.1.1 As a general matter, it is doubtful whether, in light of the Centros case law⁹⁰, the conflict of law rule described under paragraph 9.1 would withstand scrutiny from the European Court of Justice with respect to companies incorporated in other EU jurisdictions.
- 9.2 According to international private law principles, Italian tort law applies if the harmful event has occurred in Italy⁹¹.
- 9.3 It is debated whether provisions on Directing Entities liability apply to foreign directing entities as well. As previously highlighted, it is also uncertain whether such entities' liability for undue influence upon their subsidiaries is an application of general tort law principles. Arguably, if it is indeed an application of such principles, then the rule described under paragraph 9.2 should apply. If it is, instead, part of company law, then the rule described under paragraph 9.1 should apply.

⁸⁸ Article 25, Law No. 218 of 31 May 1995.

⁸⁹ See paragraphs 2.2, 2.3, 3.1, 3.2, 3.3, 3.4, 3.5, 3.6, 3.7, and 3.9 above.

⁹¹ Article 62, Law No. 218 of 31 May 1995.

- 9.4 With regard to liability of shareholders exercising a back-up business, the citizenship or nationality of the shareholders is irrelevant, provided that, according to conflict of bankruptcy law rules, their business may be declared insolvent by an Italian court (see paragraph 9.5 below).
- 9.5 Pursuant to Article 9 of the Bankruptcy Law, the bankruptcy procedure applies not only to companies having their principal place of business in Italy, but also to companies having their principal place of business abroad but operating in Italy. The commencement of bankruptcy proceedings abroad will not prevent the commencement of bankruptcy proceedings against the same company in Italy.
- 9.6 Once jurisdiction has been accepted by an Italian court, all judicial remedies provided by Italian law will be available.
- 9.7 At the European Union level, Council Regulation No. 1346/2000 sets forth the rules governing cross-border insolvency proceedings “which entail the partial or total divestment of a debtor and the appointment of a liquidator”. Pursuant to Article 3 of such Regulation, the courts of a Member State within the territory of which the centre of a debtor’s main interests is situated shall have jurisdiction to open insolvency proceedings, whereas the courts of another Member State shall have jurisdiction to open insolvency proceedings against the debtor only if it possesses an establishment within the territory of that other Member State, and the effects of those proceedings (the so-called “secondary proceedings”) shall be restricted to the assets of the debtor situated in the territory of the latter Member State.
- 9.8 The law applicable to insolvency proceedings and their effects (i.e., the conditions of their opening, their conduct and their closure) shall be that of the Member State within the territory of which such proceedings are opened⁹². The Regulation also contains specific provisions for creditors’ claims.
- 9.9 The law of the State of the opening of proceedings also determines the rules relating to the voidability or unenforceability of legal acts detrimental to all creditors. However, such rule does not apply where the person who benefited from an act detrimental to all the creditors proves that (i) the said act is subject to the law of a Member State other than that of the State of the opening of proceedings, and (ii) such law does not allow any means of challenging that act in the relevant case.

⁹² Article 4, Regulation No. 1346/2000.

QUESTION 10

10. Insurance

Is directors' and officers' insurance available in your jurisdiction? If so, to what extent will the availability of such insurance provide effective protection to directors against personal liability which may arise in connection with the issues raised in questions 1-9 above.

- 10.1 Directors' and officers' insurance policies covering the exposure of directors of Italian corporations are available in the Italian insurance market. First introduced in the US and UK in the late fifties and in civil law countries in the late seventies, these types of insurance started to materialize in Italy in the early nineties. In most of the cases, insurance policies are not executed by the directors, but rather are entered into by the company on behalf of its directors.
- 10.2 In practice, while insurance companies are generally willing to cover the liability of directors vis-à-vis the company's creditors and shareholders as well as third parties directly damaged, they are not always available to cover the directors' liability vis-à-vis the company. Insurance policies typically cover the directors' civil liability resulting from faults, errors, omissions, mistakes and erroneous interpretations of legal or regulatory provisions. Insurance policies will always exclude any form of fraudulent behaviour, whereas coverage for actions which are the consequence of gross negligence can be negotiated.
- 10.3 In light of the 2003 company law reform, it is debated which is the competent corporate body of the company that shall resolve on the execution of insurance policies for and on behalf of company directors. According to the majority of Italian scholars such insurance policies constitute a form of compensation and, therefore, they must be approved by the shareholders, unless they refer to directors vested with special powers in compliance with the by-laws, in which case the relevant resolution is entrusted with the company's board of directors. If provided by the by laws, the general meeting may establish a cap for the aggregate remuneration of all directors, including those vested with special powers.

QUESTION 11

- 11. How safe is it for directors and others to incur further credit during the twilight period? Can an unconnected third party rely on the validity of transactions entered into by the company (in particular guarantees and securities) during the twilight period?
- 11.1 Italian law does not preclude directors or other officers from incurring further credit during the twilight period, but rather sanctions their conduct when specific circumstances show that the reasons for a particular transaction are not in the interest of the company or may otherwise be considered as an act of mismanagement. Accordingly, one shall not conclude that incurring further credit during the twilight period is per se likely to be sanctioned by Italian courts.
- 11.1.1 However, a strict scrutiny will normally be adopted in considering transactions entered into when a company faces financial difficulties. Moreover, from a criminal law perspective, the directors, general managers and liquidators who incur or continue to incur further credit, concealing the status of insolvency of the company, are punished by imprisonment from six months to three years⁹³.
- 11.1.2 In consideration of the foregoing, directors and other officers shall take an extremely prudent approach when considering the opportunity to incur further debt in the twilight period (in particular in those circumstances where a court may deem the company already insolvent, as opposed to simply having financial troubles).
- 11.2 As noted in paragraph 4 above, a number of transactions undertaken during the twilight period may be subject to bankruptcy claw-back procedures. Some of them, however, will not be affected unless the third party dealing with the company is aware of the insolvency situation or of the prejudice caused to creditors by the transaction. A third party dealing with a company that is facing an insolvency situation must take a different approach depending on whether such party is aware of the situation⁹⁴.
- 11.3 Finally, the new exemptions from bankruptcy claw-back (see paragraph 4.2.1 above) are intended to protect certain categories (i.e., employees and purchasers of residential properties) and to incentivize the restructuring procedures introduced (or improved) by the Bankruptcy Law reforms. However, the introduction of the exemption for transactions carried out in the exercise of debtor's business at customary market terms will generally encourage the continuation of ordinary business relationships with enterprises that may be in financial distress (though not yet insolvent) and influence the overall approach taken by third parties dealing with such enterprises. However, since those new exemptions were introduced by the 2005 Bankruptcy Law reform, there is no clear guidance from case law on how the relevant criteria (in particular the reference to customary market terms) should be interpreted.

⁹³ Articles 218 and 225, Bankruptcy Law.

⁹⁴ In a number of cases, Italian courts have found that certain circumstances (such as acceleration of debt, systematic seizures of debtor's assets) may justify a presumption of knowledge of debtor's insolvency.

JAPAN

QUESTION 1

1. The start and duration of the “twilight” period

What is the length of the period ending with formal insolvency proceedings during which transactions entered into by a company are vulnerable to attack or are liable to give rise to personal liability on the part of directors and/or others involved in the management of the company?

1.1 Overview

- 1.1.1 In general, Japan's Bankruptcy Law has no clear period that can be labelled as the “twilight zone” as sometimes found in other systems. The bankruptcy law has been revised on January 1, 2005. In general, the changes were intended to bring uniformity between the Bankruptcy Law and the related Civil Rehabilitation Law and Corporate Reorganization Law.

In a standard bankruptcy filing, there is no automatic stay between the time of filing and the adjudication of bankruptcy. However, there is a right of avoidance, which may affect certain transactions that occur prior to the start of bankruptcy proceedings. Directors and officers may be subject to higher risk of criminal and civil liabilities resulting from transactions that occur during this period, with increased scrutiny falling on transactions that are voided. The bankruptcy law provides several types of transactions, and restrictions thereto, with respect to the period preceding adjudication of bankruptcy, which the bankruptcy trustee may void by exercising the right of avoidance. The transactions which may be set aside include:

- (a) Any transaction where the obligor and the beneficiary of the transaction know that such transaction would prejudice creditors (Bankruptcy Law, Art 160 Sec 1, Para 1).
- (b) Any provision of security (collateral) or extinguishment of obligation, or similar transaction, by the obligor that is prejudicial to creditors, that occurs after the obligor's suspension of payment, or the filing of the bankruptcy petition, provided that the beneficiary of such transaction knew of the prejudicial effect, where the burden of proof regarding such knowledge rests with the bankruptcy trustee (Bankruptcy Law, Art 160, Sec 1, Para 2, Art 162, Sec 1, Para 1).
- (c) Any provision of security or extinguishment of obligation that occurs after the obligor's suspension of payment, or filing of the bankruptcy petition, or within the 30-day period prior thereof, that the obligor has no duty to honour, provided that the beneficiary of such transaction knew of the prejudicial effect, where the burden of proof regarding lack of knowledge rests with the beneficiary (Bankruptcy Law, Art 162, Sec 1, Para 2).

- (d) Any transaction that is deemed a gratuitous act of an obligor that occurs after the obligor's suspension of payment, or filing of the bankruptcy petition, or within the 6-month period prior thereof (Bankruptcy Law, Art160, Sec 3).
- (e) Where under (b), or (c), above, the beneficiary of the obligor's acts knew of the obligor's suspension of payment, but one or more years have lapsed between the subject transaction and the adjudication of bankruptcy, the beneficiary's knowledge may not be relied on as the basis for voiding the transaction (Bankruptcy Law, Art 166).

In the application of the Right of Avoidance, the requirements of the relevant period thereof are usually left to interpretation due to the absence of statutory provisions, with the exception of those described above. In practice, the avoidance of transactions is more likely to be upheld by the court if the underlying transaction occurred within the around 3-month period immediately preceding the suspension of payment or filing of the bankruptcy petition. Transactions between around 3-months and a year must be increasingly egregious for the trustee to avoid the transaction. Although the statutory language creating the one-year limit described in (e), above, is specific to certain situations, transactions beyond one year are rarely, if ever, voided in practice.

In the context of the application of the right of avoidance referred to above, the risk of personal civil and/or criminal liability of a director or other persons involved in management is increased because of several statutory provisions. Part IV of the Bankruptcy Law consists of penal provisions to be applied specifically for crimes related to bankruptcy, including the actions of directors and managers (Bankruptcy Law, Art 265, 266, 268, 269, 270, 271, 272, 273, 274, 275). The Bankruptcy Law provides for civil liability of directors and statutory auditors of bankrupt which provides for the trustee to bring an expedited action to determine the civil liability of a corporate director and certain other officers for direct damages. Courts may also bring such an action on their own accord. In conjunction with the commencement of such action, the trustee may ask for, or the court may apply, a provisional attachment on the defendant director's (officer's) assets.

No penal provision of the Bankruptcy Law exclusively applies to the period covered by the Right of Avoidance although in practice, potential fraudulent activity by the management of the debtor company is most likely to occur during this period. Of the penal provisions, the following are the most relevant to this discussion:

- (a) The crime of Fraudulent Bankruptcy includes the concealment or destruction of properties related to the estate in bankruptcy, the disposition of such properties in a manner prejudicial to creditors, and the fraudulent increase of liabilities of the estate, and is punishable with imprisonment not to exceed ten years (Bankruptcy Law, Art 265, Sec1, Paras 1 & 2 with the additional punishment of either imprisonment and/or a fine not to exceed ten million yen).

- (b) The crime of Negligent Bankruptcy includes any provision of security or extinguishment of obligation that is preferential to some creditors notwithstanding existing knowledge regarding the causes of bankruptcy, or that the debtor has no duty to entertain such provision of security or extinguishment of obligation, and is punishable with imprisonment not to exceed five years or a fine not to exceed five million yen or both (Bankruptcy Law, Art 266).

Besides the Bankruptcy Law, the Companies Act provides for both criminal and civil liabilities that are relevant to this discussion.

- (a) Under the crime of Special Misappropriation, any director, officer, or the other management of a company that, in breach of their duties, acts in order to benefit themselves or third persons, or to inflict damage on the company, and actually causes proprietary damage to the company, is liable to be punished with imprisonment not to exceed ten years or to be fined an amount not to exceed ten million yen (Companies Act, Art 960 Sec 1). Any attempt to commit this crime is also subject to punishment (Companies Act, Art 962).
- (b) Directors are jointly and severally liable to the company for the amount of damages caused by an act in violation of law or the articles of incorporation (Companies Act, Art 423). This liability may be limited for acts taken in good faith and in the absence of gross negligence (Companies Act, Art 425, Sec 1).
- (c) Directors are jointly and severally liable to third persons for damages caused by acts involving wrongful intent or gross negligence (Companies Act, Art 429 Sec 1).

In practice, criminal charges based on the penal provisions of the Bankruptcy Law are rarely pursued; charges are more often brought under the Companies Act and other laws.

QUESTION 2

2. Actions potentially giving rise to liability for directors

- (a) In respect of which acts during the “twilight” period may a director be held personally liable which may otherwise have adverse consequences for him?
- (b) In relation to each act identified in (a) above:
 - (i) is any resulting liability against a director civil, criminal or both?

- (ii.) can a director be made personally liable in respect of the whole loss caused to the company or the deficit to creditors?
- (iii.) will liability attach to individual directors in proportion to their specific involvement?;
- (iv.) is there a specified period before commencement of a subsequent insolvency procedure within which the relevant act must have been undertaken in order for liability to attach to a director?; and
- (v.) what differences, if any, will be available in relation to each offense?

- 2.1 Major acts by the company for which directors may be held personally liable are trading acts, the transfer of property, the performance of an obligation, and the provision of security. In practice, because the transfer of property through a transaction is customary for a company, it is rare that such a transfer would cause a director to incur liability, except in cases such as the transfer of property without compensation, or at an extremely low price with an intention to benefit specific creditors. However, new obligations assumed despite a clear state of insolvency, may be deemed a fraudulent act done to benefit the other party to the transaction. Directors' conduct is subject to scrutiny with respect to the performance of existing obligations and the provision of security, in transactions where the Right of Avoidance may be exercised.
- 2.2 A director may incur both civil and criminal liabilities. However, in practice, the imposition of criminal liability is rare. Apart from civil liability under law, in Japan, representative directors of small- and medium-sized companies usually personally guarantee certain of companies' debts, where the directors are contractually liable as co-signers of each loan. Therefore, in practice, upon a company's bankruptcy, the representative director often becomes personally insolvent making any additional civil liability moot. In larger companies, where the management lies with a broader board of directors, the personal guarantee of the representative or any other director is less common, and the discussion is relevant. In such cases, the pursuit of civil liability against directors becomes practical.
- 2.3 The civil liability incurred by a director to compensate for damage is based on the provisions of the Bankruptcy Law and the Companies Act. A director is liable for all the actual damage incurred by a company. In addition, a director is liable for actual damage to a third party for damages suffered by the creditor concerned. Provisions under the Companies Act allow claims against a director to the extent that there is reasonable cause and effect between the damage and the director's act that violates laws and ordinances or the articles of incorporation, or his or her gross negligence.
- 2.4 A director attends meetings of the board of directors and signs board minutes of the board's resolutions, and so, all directors who do not raise objections and have them noted are jointly and severally liable for the consequences of those resolutions. However, in practice, there is the possibility that the extent of a director's involvement will be considered in determining the actual share of responsibility.

- 2.5 As stated above, claims must be brought under the Bankruptcy Law, Companies Act and other laws. While the “twilight zone” period in terms of increased risk of avoidance and personal liability is unclear, the statute of limitations under Japan’s Civil Code for claims under the Companies Act, including those for the personal liability of directors, is construed as ten years by court precedent. However, for “twilight zone”-related liability, the increased risk to directors corresponds to the period during which transactions may be voided, immediately preceding the suspension of payment, or filing of bankruptcy, as described in the answer to question 1, above.
- 2.6 Of all the acts mentioned above, with respect to those acts relating to the right of avoidance, it is an effective defence to prove that the transfer of property, the performance of an obligation, or the provision of collateral, conducted before the filing of bankruptcy, had a proper objective and were executed in good faith. A company can conduct ordinary business activities until the company decides to stop business activities. Therefore, if the act concerned is conducted as a transaction within the scope of ordinary business activities, no criminal liability for that act will be incurred.

QUESTION 3

3. Other persons involved with the company’s affairs who may become liable in respect of their actions during the “twilight” period
- (a) In addition to the formally appointed directors of the company, can others be held liable in respect of the company’s activities during the “twilight” period if the company were to become subject to a formal insolvency procedure?
 - (b) In respect of which acts may other persons be held liable and to what extent does the liability of third parties differ from that for directors identified in question 2 above?
 - (c) Will liability be limited to that resulting from involvement with a particular transaction or more generally in relation to the overall loss suffered by creditors?

- 3.1 The liability to compensate for damage under the Companies Act is a liability imposed only on directors and statutory auditors. However, there is judicial precedent that affirms the existence of a third party liability, based on Article 266-3, Commercial Code (amended to Article 429, Companies Act) in the case of a substantial entrepreneur who, although not a director at the time of an act, had the right to decide on important matters externally and internally. In addition to directors and statutory auditors, in respect of criminal liability, certain managers (those registered as having the executive power to represent the business) may be charged with the crime of Special Misappropriation. Basically, no persons other than directors are supposed to assume criminal liabilities under the Bankruptcy Law. Under the Companies Act provisions described in the answer to question 1, above, persons that may be subject to criminal liability include a broader spectrum and may include employees without executive powers if they have been assigned certain duties and act in violation of those duties. Civil liability to third parties for "twilight zone" related claims are limited to directors and statutory auditors, and in those companies that have adopted the committee form of management, to the executive officers.
- 3.2 There is no difference in the acts for which parties other than directors may be held liable.
- 3.3 The measurement of liability is as stated in 2 (b) (ii) above.

QUESTION 4

4. Counterparts dealing with the company during the twilight period
- (a) From the point of view of a counterparty dealing with the company during the twilight period, what are the potential heads of challenge which may lead to transactions with the company being set aside?
- (b) What difference, if any, to the areas of vulnerability identified above will be available to a counterparty seeking to protect a transaction from being attacked?
- 4.1 In terms of the "twilight zone" period, the factor given the most weight in terms of whether a transaction can be voided is whether one or both parties of the transaction knew the company's state of insolvency. In addition, apart from transaction subject to being voided as discussed in the answer to question 1, above, the bankruptcy trustee must review all existing executory contracts to which the company is a party, and has the option of voiding remaining portions of the contract (Bankruptcy Law, Art 53).
- 4.2 Defences against challenges of transactions that take place during the "twilight zone" are limited and are based primarily on the counter-party's knowledge of the company's state of insolvency. Where prior knowledge is clear, there is little defence against avoidance.

QUESTION 5

5. Enforcement

By whom may action be brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3 above)?

- 5.1 For criminal violations under the Bankruptcy Law or the Commercial Code the national government, through the regional prosecutor's office has sole standing to take legal action against directors and others included in question 3 above.

Under the Bankruptcy proceeding, with respect to a director's civil liability to the company based on Article of the Bankruptcy Law, the bankruptcy trustee has standing to bring suit. Prior to the adjudication of bankruptcy, this power rests with the statutory auditor of the company. In legal theory, if the bankruptcy trustee (or the statutory auditor) takes no legal action, shareholders may bring a derivative suit. With respect to third party liability based on Article 429 of the Companies Act, the creditor that suffered the damage has standing to sue. However, where all creditors similarly suffered loss, it is possible that a lead creditor in cooperation with the bankruptcy trustee would bring a combined lawsuit. This problem is left open to some interpretation in the absence of a clear statutory provision.

QUESTION 6

6. Remedies: orders available to the domestic court

In respect of the offenses identified in questions 2, 3, and 4 above, what remedies are available in the domestic court?

- 6.1 There are no specific remedies other than the awarding of damages resulting from a civil suit, as described in answers to questions 1 through 4, above.

QUESTION 7

7. Duty to cooperate

- (a) To what extent are directors (and other identified in question 3 above) obliged to co-operate with an investigation into the company's affairs following its insolvency?

- (b) Are any human rights laws applicable in the domestic jurisdiction in relation to any such obligations (e.g. in the UK and other European jurisdictions Article 6 of the European Convention of Human Rights may apply if domestic law compels a person to provide potentially self-incriminating information at the request of the office-holder appointed under the relevant insolvency procedure adopted)?
- 7.1 For the purpose of bankruptcy proceedings, the person in bankruptcy, including its directors, are obliged to provide necessary explanations regarding the bankruptcy upon the demand of the bankruptcy trustee, or the meeting of creditors (Bankruptcy Law, Art 40). Failure to abide by this requirement is a criminal violation, which is punishable by imprisonment not to exceed one year or a fine of no more than three million yen (Bankruptcy Law, Art 268, Sec 1 with the punishment becoming imprisonment not to exceed three years, or a fine not to exceed three million yen, or both). This duty obliges directors to provide all the information necessary to preserve the assets of the company and to enable the bankruptcy trustee to otherwise perform its duty. In addition, where a representative director is personally insolvent and has filed for bankruptcy, his/her lack of co-operation in explaining the company's bankruptcy may be deemed as a reason to withhold discharge from debts in his/her personal bankruptcy proceedings (Bankruptcy Law, Art 252, Sec 1, Para 11).
- 7.2 No such provisions exist.

QUESTION 8

8. Appeals and limitation periods

- (a) What limitation period, if any, will apply to actions brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3) in connection with the offenses identified in question 2.
- (b) Please indicate whether an appeal is available from the decision of the lower courts.

- 8.1 In general, the statute of limitations under the Civil Code for civil claims by a creditor is construed as ten years. While no statutory provision exists under the Companies Act, the courts in Japan have generally construed that civil liability under the Companies Act should follow similar liability under the Civil Code. The statute of limitation for criminal liability varies depending on the particular law. For the crime of Special Misappropriation under the Companies Act, the statute of limitation is seven years from the illegal activity. Under the Bankruptcy Law, the statute of limitation is seven years from the illegal activity for the crime of Fraudulent Bankruptcy, whereas the statute of limitation is five years from the illegal activity for the crime of Negligent Bankruptcy. However, in practice, enforcement of the two criminal provisions under the Bankruptcy Law has been rare. Furthermore, although the statute of limitation is seven and five years, respectively, in practice, the enforcement of these laws would require the strong participation of the bankruptcy trustee, whose tenure typically lasts from one to at most three years. If a criminal investigation by the district prosecutor's office based on these two laws is not commenced during the bankruptcy trustee's tenure, the risk of indictment after the bankruptcy trustee's tenure may be assumed to be lower.
- 8.2 Appeals against final judicial decisions are available for all statutes regarding criminal and civil liabilities that are described herein. All judicial procedures described above are conducted within the jurisdiction of the District Court. Therefore, all appeals must follow the respective general appeals procedures for criminal and civil decisions. No special appeals process exists for bankruptcy related crimes and civil suits.

QUESTION 9

9. Foreign corporations

Do the legal provisions and procedures outlined above apply to both domestic and foreign corporations?

- 9.1 Under the Bankruptcy Law, foreign persons and corporations have the same status for bankruptcy purposes as Japanese nationals and Japanese corporations (Bankruptcy Law, Art 3).

QUESTION 10

10. Insurance

Is director's and Officers' insurance available in your jurisdiction? If so, to what extent will the availability of such insurance policies provide effective protection to directors against personal liability which may arise in connection with the issues raised in question 1-9 above?

- 10.1 The history of D&O insurance coverage in Japan is still short; purchase of D&O coverage became commonly available in Japan only after 1993, when the Commercial Code was amended, allowing shareholders to bring suit more easily. An insurance contract, including D&O insurance, is enforceable under Japanese law. Publicly known examples of claims under such insurance are still rare. While coverage may vary between insurers, coverage for bankruptcy related liability, if included in D&O policies, has yet to be thoroughly tested in the courts.

QUESTION 11

11. How safe is it for directors and others to incur further credit during the twilight period?

- 11.1 Under Japan's bankruptcy process, a bankruptcy trustee is appointed at the time of adjudication of bankruptcy. Until the appointment of the trustee, all authority and responsibility for executing the business of the company rests with the board of directors and designated officers of the company. Therefore, it is necessary to consider fiduciary duty to the company: apart from whether taking on additional credit increases risk, whether taking the proposed credit can be deemed necessary to the company is also pertinent. If the proposed additional credit is determined to be necessary under the normal course of business, then the board of directors and/or executive officers have a duty to incur such credit. Although this is the theory, in practice, there would be judicial scrutiny of the facts surrounding the transaction and therefore the outcome would differ case by case.

In Japan, the chief executive officer of most small and medium sized businesses is also the owner and representative director of the company. As such, he/she will already personally guarantee much of the company's debt. In the "twilight zone" period, incurring additional credit would be viewed as natural, if such representative director were acting in the best interests of the company. Therefore, so long as the transaction does not violate the tests of the specific criminal and civil liability statutes described herein, it is very unlikely that the director would incur any additional liability, other than any contractual liability, from his/her decision that the company should incur the additional credit. This not with standing, a potential good faith creditor would be expected to determine the creditworthiness of the potential debtor including the state of solvency of the company. Thus, while incurring additional credit by itself is not necessarily egregious, clearing the hurdle regarding prior knowledge without the transaction becoming subject to being voided may be difficult.

QUESTION 1

1. The start and duration of the “twilight period”

What is the length of the period ending with formal insolvency proceedings during which transactions entered into by a company are vulnerable to attack or are liable to give rise to personal liability on the part of directors and/or others involved in the management of the company?

1.1 Overview

- 1.1.1 The twilight period will commence once the company is insolvent and continues until the commencement of the liquidation (presentation of a winding up petition in the case of compulsory liquidation and the passing of a resolution to wind up in the case of voluntary liquidation).¹
- 1.1.2 There are two categories of insolvency.
- 1.1.3 The first category concerns actual insolvency. The question is whether the company was ‘insolvent’ at the time (or as a result) of the relevant transaction. A company is insolvent when it is unable to pay its debts.

There are three tests of a company’s inability to pay its debts.² They are:

- (i) the “commercial insolvency” test – a company is insolvent when it is unable to pay debts as and when they fall due. A company may wind up an asset rich but cash strapped company on account of deemed insolvency;³
- (ii) unsatisfied execution process – clearly if execution or other process issued on a judgment is returned unsatisfied in whole or in part, it means that the company does not have cash and sufficient assets or assets of sufficient value which may be realised by judicial process to satisfy the judgment debt;⁴ and

² Loh Siew Cheang in Corporate Powers Accountability (2nd Edition). The CA 1965 does not set out or define when a company is insolvent but merely provides the various circumstances in which the court may order the winding up of the company; section 218 of the CA 1965. There is nothing in the CA 1965 to say that the three different means of proof are exhaustive or exclusive of other kinds of evidence to prove inability to pay debts under section 218(1)(e) CA 1965. Additionally, petitioners are not restricted to and need not limit the means available to them under section 218(2) CA 1965 to prove their case; Weng Wah Construction Co Sdn Bhd v Yik Foong Development Sdn Bhd [1994] 2 MLJ 266.

³ Section 218(2)(a) CA 1965: Sri Hartamas Development Sdn Bhd v MBF Finance Bhd [1992] 1 MLJ 313; Datuk Mohd Sari bin Datuk Hj Nuar v Idris Hydraulics (M) Bhd [1997] 5 MLJ 377; Malayan Plant Pte Ltd v Moscow Narodny Bank Ltd 1980] 2 MLJ 53.

⁴ Section 218(2)(b) CA 1965 – a company is deemed to be insolvent if ‘execution or other process issued on a judgment’ is ‘returned unsatisfied in whole or in part’.

- (iii) the “overall assets and liability” test – a petitioner may prove to the satisfaction of the court by positive evidence that the company is unable to pay its debts because the company’s liabilities exceed the value of its assets. In this respect, the court shall take into account the contingent and prospective liabilities of the company.⁵
- 1.1.4 For this category of insolvency, a range of ‘clawback’ provisions apply (see para 1.2 below), which will affect transactions entered into by the company.
- 1.1.5 The second category concerns the concept of ‘insolvent trading’ where the law identifies the time at which a director had no reasonable or probable ground of expectation of the company being able to pay the debt. A director who continues to trade or incur liability in such circumstances will be personally liable unless he can show that he had a reasonable or probable ground to believe that the company was able to pay the debt.
- 1.1.6 The obligations of the directors of a company will change fundamentally once a company is insolvent. In normal circumstances where a company is solvent, directors owe their duties to the company, that is, to its present and future members, who are entitled to ratify generally breaches of duty by the directors.⁶
- 1.1.7 Where a company is insolvent, however, it is the creditors rather than the members which are likely to suffer as a result of such breaches. Therefore, where a company is insolvent the directors owe their duties to take into account the interests of the creditors. In this circumstance, the shareholders do not have the power or authority to absolve the directors from that breach.⁷ However, this does not, in the absence of any conferral of such right by statute, confer upon creditors any general law right against former directors of the company to recover loss suffered by those creditors.⁸
- 1.2 Vulnerable periods
 - 1.2.1 The winding up of a company is deemed to commence at the time of the presentation of the petition for the winding up.⁹ The various clawback periods under CA 1965 are:
 - (a) sale at an undervalue or acquisition at an overvalue – 2 years prior to the commencement of winding up (section 295);
 - (b) undue preferences – 6 months prior to the commencement of winding up (section 293); and
 - (c) invalid floating charges – 6 months prior to the commencement of winding up (section 294).

⁵ Section 218(2)(c) CA 1965.

⁶ Gilbert Engineering Co Inc v Zainuddin Ahmad & Ors [2001] 7 CLJ 489 where Vincent Ng J held that directors generally do not owe a fiduciary duty to the company’s creditors.

⁷ Kinsela v Russell Kinsela Pty Limited (In Liq) [1986] 4 NSWLR 722.

⁸ Sycotex Pty Ltd v Baseler & Ors [1994] 12 ACLC 494.

⁹ Section 219(2) CA 1965.

- 1.2.2 In addition, section 223 CA 1965 also provides that any dispositions made after the commencement of the winding up by the court shall, unless the court otherwise orders, be void.
- 1.2.3 The CA 1965 confers on a provisional liquidator power to exercise all functions and powers of a liquidator subject to certain prescribed limitations and restrictions or as specified by the court in the order appointing him.¹⁰ However, there are certain actions which can only be initiated by a liquidator; for instance transactions which will be affected by the clawback provisions (see para 1.2).

A provisional liquidator may not initiate actions to set aside such transactions which will be affected by the clawback provisions because he is appointed by the court after the presentation of a winding up petition and before the making of a winding up order. In reality, a winding up order as against a company in provisional liquidation may or may not be granted.

QUESTION 2

2. Actions potentially giving rise to liability for directors

- (a) In respect of which acts during the “twilight period” may a director be held personally liable or which may otherwise have adverse consequences for him?
- (b) In relation to acts identified in (a) above:
 - (i) is any resulting liability against a director civil, criminal or both?;
 - (ii) can a director be made personally liable in respect of the whole loss caused to the company or the deficit to creditors?;
 - (iii) will liability attach to individual directors in proportion to their specific involvement?;
 - (iv) is there a specified period before commencement of a subsequent insolvency procedure within which the relevant act must have been undertaken in order for liability to attach to a director?; and
 - (v) what defences, if any, will be available in relation to each offence?

¹⁰ Section 231 CA 1965.

2.1 Insolvent trading¹¹

- (a) (i) In the course of winding up or any other proceedings against a company where it appears that an officer of the company who was knowingly a party to the contracting of a debt had, at the time of contracting, no reasonable or probable ground of expectation of the company being able to pay the debt, the officer commits an offence.
- (ii) Proof of reasonable ground of expectation is judged by the standards of a director or manager of ordinary competence.¹²
- (b) (i) Liability is criminal and civil. A person guilty of this offence is liable to imprisonment for one year or a RM5,000.00 fine.
- (ii) Section 304(2) CA 1965 provides that where a person is convicted of insolvent trading, the court may declare that the person shall be personally responsible without any limitation of liability for the payment of the whole or any part of that debt. Personal liability under this section is dependent on a conviction being obtained under section 303(3) CA 1965. The court also has powers to make consequential orders to give effect to the declaration.¹³
- (iii) The court has wide discretion to determine the extent of liability.
- (iv) There is no specified period.
- (v) The defence to this offence is that the director or officer at the time of contracting of a debt had a reasonable or probable ground of expectation of the company being able to pay the debt.

2.2 Fraudulent trading¹⁴

- (a) Where it appears that any business of the company had been “carried on with intent to defraud creditors of the company or the creditors of any other person or for any fraudulent purpose”, the court may if it thinks proper to do so, declare that any person who was knowingly a party to the carrying on of the business in that manner is to be personally responsible without any limitation of liability, for all or any of the debts or other liabilities of the company as the court may direct.¹⁵ The application for such declaration may be made by the liquidator or any creditor or contributory of the company. The elements of the offence are as follows:
 - (i) This section is not restricted to winding up proceedings against the company. It applies where the company is in the course of winding up or where there are other proceedings against the company;¹⁶

¹¹ Section 303(3) CA 1965.

¹⁶ Tang Eng Iron Works Co. Ltd v Ting Ling Kiew & Anor [1990] 3 CLJ (Rep) 211.

- (ii) Fraud and fraudulent purpose connotes actual dishonesty involving, according to current notions of unfair trading among commercial men, real moral blame in relation to the expected standard of an ordinary and honest people.¹⁷ The test applicable is whether the party concerned was fulfilling his role of "The Reasonable Expectations of an Honest Businessman".¹⁸ "Defraud" requires a person (natural or corporate) as its object. An accused is guilty of fraud if he intends by deceit to induce a person to act in a way that puts that person's economic interests in jeopardy, even though he does not intend that he should ultimately suffer loss;
 - (iii) The scope of liability for "fraudulent trading" is wider than "insolvent trading" as the former applies to "any person who was knowingly a party" whilst the latter is confined only to "officers of the company";
 - (iv) In theory, it could be wide enough to catch a financier who funded the fraudulent trading knowing that it was being done dishonestly; and
 - (v) It is not necessary in order to establish an offence to show that creditors were in fact defrauded.¹⁹ An intention to defraud is sufficient. An intent to defraud is an intent to deprive creditors, or some creditors, of an economic advantage or inflict upon them some economic loss.²⁰
- (b) (i) Liability may be criminal or civil. A person guilty of this offence is liable to imprisonment for 3 years or a RM10,000.00 fine.
- (ii) The court has a wide discretion to order compensation for the loss caused to the company by the director's conduct. While declarations under section 304(2) CA 1965 refer only to personal liability for that particular debt, under section 304(1), personal liability may be for all the company's liabilities. Creditors benefit because the insolvent company is then in a better position to pay its debts. The court also has powers to make consequential orders.²¹
 - (iii) The court has wide discretion to determine the extent of liability.
 - (iv) There is no specified period.
 - (v) The defence is that the party concerned was not dishonest and that he had no intention to defraud creditors. As long as he honestly believed that the new debt incurred would ultimately be repaid in full, he may not be found liable.

¹⁷ H. Rosen Engineering B.V. v Siow Yoon Keong [1997] 1 CLJ 137. In H. Rosen's case, the High Court considered the word "fraud" and stated that "The term 'fraud' has a distinctive meaning given in the Concise Oxford Dictionary - 9th Edn. as 'the use of false representation to gain an unjust advantage; a dishonest artifice or trick; a person not fulfilling what is expected of him/her'. 'Fraudulent Purpose' - achieving by fraud; or dishonestly."

¹⁸ In H. Rosen Engineering B.V. v Siow Yoon Keong [1997] 1 CLJ 137 it was stated that "keeping in mind 'that honesty is the best policy' the defendant was expected to live to the standards to be observed by honest businessmen and not of an unconscionable conduct contrary to good conscience. The law of equity and good conscience is to be the order to be adopted in such commercial transactions to make good the resulting loss to an innocent person whose trust in the defendant has been betrayed by his misconduct."

2.3 Offences by officers of companies in liquidation

2.3.1 *Misconduct in the course of company being wound up*²²

- (a) Personal liability will attach to a past or present officer of the company who:
 - (i) does not to the best of his knowledge and belief fully and truly discover to the liquidator all the property movable and immovable of the company, and how and to whom and for what consideration and when the company disposed of any part thereof except such part as has been disposed of in the ordinary course of business;²³
 - (ii) does not deliver up to the liquidator all the movable and immovable property of the company (including all books and papers) in his custody or under his control and which he is required by law to deliver up;²⁴
 - (iii) knowing or believing that a false debt has been proved by any person fails for a period of one month to inform the liquidator;²⁵ or
 - (iv) prevents the production of any book or paper affecting or relating to the property or affairs of the company;²⁶
- (b) (i) Liability is criminal. A person guilty of this offence is liable to imprisonment for two years or a RM5,000.00 fine. The gravity of the wrongdoing will be reflected in the length of imprisonment or the extent of the fine that is ordered.
- (ii)&(iii) In exercising its punitive jurisdiction under this section the court is not seeking to compensate the company.
- (iv) The offences must have taken place when a company is being wound up.
- (v) Absence of intention to defraud is a defence to a charge under 2.3.1(a)(i) or (ii) above and absence of intent to conceal the state of affairs of the company or to defeat the law is a defence to a charge under 2.3.1(a)(iv) above.

2.3.2 *Fraud in the course of company being wound up*²⁷

- (a) A past or present officer of the company commits an offence if he has:

- (i) concealed any part of the property of the company to the value of RM50.00 or upwards, or has concealed any debt due to or from the company;²⁸
 - (ii) fraudulently removed any part of the property of the company to the value of RM50.00 or upwards;²⁹
 - (iii) concealed, destroyed, mutilated, falsified or has been privy to the concealment, destruction, mutilation or falsification of any book or paper affecting or relating to the property or affairs of the company;³⁰
 - (iv) made or has been privy to the making of any false entry in any book or paper affecting or relating to the property or affairs of the company;³¹
 - (v) fraudulently parted with, altered or made any omission in, or has been privy to fraudulent parting with, altering or making any omission in, any document affecting or relating to the property or affairs of the company;³²
 - (vi) by any false representation or other fraud, has obtained any property for or on behalf of the company on credit which the company has not subsequently paid for;³³
 - (vii) obtained on credit, for or on behalf of the company, under the false pretence that the company is carrying on its business any property which the company has not subsequently paid for;³⁴
 - (viii) pawned, pledged or disposed of any property of any company which has been obtained on credit and has not been fully paid for unless the pawning, pledging or disposing was in the ordinary way of the business of the company;³⁵ or
 - (ix) attempted to account for any part of the property of the company by fictitious losses or expenses.³⁶
- (b) (i) Liability is criminal. A person guilty of this offence is liable to imprisonment for two years or a RM5,000.00 fine. The gravity of the wrongdoing will be reflected in the length of imprisonment or the extent of the fine that is ordered.

- (v) Absence of intention to defraud is a defence to a charge under 2.3.2(a)(i), (vii) or (viii) above and absence of intent to conceal the state of affairs of the company or to defeat the law is a defence to charge under 2.3.2(a)(iii) or (iv) above.

2.4 Falsification of books³⁸

- (a) Every officer of any company being wound up commits an offence if he destroys, mutilates, alters or falsifies any books, papers or securities, or makes or is privy to the making of any false or fraudulent entry in any register or book of account or document belonging to the company with intent to defraud or deceive any person.
- (b) (i) Liability is criminal. A person guilty of this offence is liable to imprisonment for five years or a RM30,000.00 fine. The gravity of the wrongdoing will be reflected in the length of imprisonment or the extent of the fine that is ordered.
- (ii)&(iii) In exercising its punitive jurisdiction under this section the court is not seeking to compensate the company.
- (iv) This offence applies when a company is being wound up.
- (v) Absence of intent to defraud or deceive is a defence to this charge.

2.5 False representations to creditors³⁹

- (a) Any past or present officer of the company commits an offence if he makes any false representation or acts fraudulently for the purpose of obtaining the consent of the creditors of the company or any of them to an agreement with reference to the affairs of the company or to the winding up.
- (b) (i) Liability is criminal. A person guilty of this offence is liable to imprisonment for two years or a RM5,000.00 fine. The gravity of the wrongdoing will be reflected in the length of imprisonment or the extent of the fine that is ordered.
- (ii)&(iii) In exercising its punitive jurisdiction under this section the court is not seeking to compensate the company.

- (v) Absence of intent to mislead the company's creditors into giving their consent on the basis of a false premise is a defence to this charge.

2.6 Material omissions from statement relating to company's affairs⁴⁰

- (a) A past or present officer of a company commits an offence if he makes any material omission in any statement relating to the affairs of the company.
 - (b) (i) Liability is criminal. A person guilty of this offence is liable to imprisonment for two years or a RM5,000.00 fine. The gravity of the wrongdoing will be reflected in the length of imprisonment or the extent of the fine that is ordered.
 - (ii)&(iii) In exercising its punitive jurisdiction under this section the court is not seeking to compensate the company.
 - (iv) This offence applies to statements made when a company is being wound up.
 - (v) Absence of intent to defraud is a defence to this charge.

2.7 Misfeasance⁴¹

- (a) (i) Any person who has taken part in the formation or promotion of the company or past or present liquidator or officer of the company who has misapplied or retained or become liable or accountable for any money or property of the company may be examined by the court.
- (ii) The court may do the same where such parties are guilty of any misfeasance or breach of trust or duty in relation to the company. The application to the court for such examination may be made by the liquidator or any of the company's creditors or contributories.⁴²
- (iii) In the case of an officer of the company, the court's power extends to and applies in respect of the receipt of any money or property by any officer of the company during the two years preceding the commencement of the winding up whether by way of salary or otherwise appearing to the court to be unfair or unjust to other members of the company.⁴³

- (b) (i) Liability is civil.
- (ii) The court may order the director to repay or restore the money or property or any part of it, with interest at such rate as the court thinks just, or to contribute such sum to the assets of the company by way of compensation in respect of the misapplication, retainer, misfeasance or breach of trust or duty as the court thinks just.
- (iii) The court has wide discretion in relation to the making of orders under this provision. It is able to apportion the order made against individual directors in proportion to their involvement and culpability.
- (iv) Apart from the offence in respect of the receipt of any money or property by an officer of the company (during the two years preceding the commencement of the winding up), there is no time period within which the impugned acts must have occurred in order for liability to attach.
- (v) It shall be a defence if the director in default can show that he has acted honestly and reasonably and the court concludes that he ought fairly to be excused.

2.8 Proper accounts not kept⁴⁴

- (a) (i) This offence applies where it is shown that proper books of account were not kept by the company for the period of 2 years immediately preceding the commencement of the investigation or winding up. The liability is on each officer who is in default.
- (ii) Proper books of account shall be deemed not to have been kept in the case of any company if there have not been kept such books or accounts as are necessary to exhibit and explain the transactions and financial position of the trade or business of the company, or if the books or accounts have not been kept in such manner as to enable them to be conveniently and properly audited, whether or not the company has appointed an auditor.
- (b) (i) Liability is criminal. A person guilty of this offence is liable to imprisonment for three years or RM10,000.00 fine. The gravity of the wrongdoing will be reflected in the length of imprisonment or the extent of the fine that is ordered.
- (ii)&(iii) In exercising its punitive jurisdiction under this section the court is not seeking to compensate the company.
- (iv) The act in question must have occurred throughout the period of two years immediately preceding the commencement of the investigation or winding up or the period between the incorporation of the company and the commencement of the investigation or winding up (whichever is lesser).⁴⁵

⁴⁴ Section 303 CA 1965.

⁴⁵ Section 303(1) CA 1965.

- (v) It shall be a defence if the director in default can show that he acted honestly and that in the circumstances in which the business of the company was carried on, the default was excusable.

2.9 General duties of a director

- (a) (i) The general duties of a director are codified in section 132 CA 1965, which states that a director of a company shall at all times exercise his powers for a proper purpose and in good faith in the best interest of the company. These statutory duties largely restate the fiduciary duties under the general law. As long as the company is solvent, the interests of the company are the interests of its shareholders. However, the company's creditors' interests become increasingly important when the company is in financial difficulties.
 - (ii) The fiduciary duties of directors include:
 - (1) duty to act bona fide in the interests of the company;
 - (2) duty to act for their proper purpose;
 - (3) duty to retain their discretionary powers;
 - (4) duty to avoid conflicts of interest and duty;
 - (5) duty to disclose interests in contracts at general law; and duty not to make secret profits.
 - (iii) The statutory duties above operate in addition to any general law duties.⁴⁶ The main duties are set out in further details below.
- (b) (i) Liability is civil.
 - (ii) The court will award damages to compensate the company for loss that has been suffered as a result of the director's breach of duty.
 - (iii) Liability for all the loss suffered by the company because of the breach of duty will be joint and several. The court can allocate contributions as between the defendant directors based on their respective levels of culpability for the loss.
 - (iv) Subject to the Limitation Act considerations, there is no time limit within which action may be taken against a director.
 - (v) (a) There is no breach where a director acts in what he honestly believes to be in the interests of the company. The court is generally reluctant to override the business judgment of directors. A director is presumed to have acted bona fide for the benefit of his company and persons alleging a breach of duty bear the onus of proving that he has not acted bona fide.⁴⁷

⁴⁶ Section 132(5) CA 1965.

⁴⁷ Intrico Pte Ltd v Multi-Pak Singapore Ltd [1995] 1 SLR 313, CA.

- (b) A director of a company is only expected to exercise reasonable care, skill and diligence with the knowledge, skill and experience which may reasonably be expected of a director having the same responsibilities and any additional knowledge, skill and experience which the director in fact has.⁴⁸

2.10 Duty to act bona fide in the interests of the company

- 2.10.1 Section 132(1) CA 1965 requires a director to exercise his powers for a proper purpose and in good faith in the best interest of the company at all times. This provision corresponds with section 181(1) of the Corporations Act 2001 of Australia (Australian Act).

Good Faith

- 2.10.2 This duty is two-pronged in that it imposes a duty on the director to act “in good faith” and “in the best interest of the company”. The requirements of the duty to act in good faith are that the director must:

- (1) exercise his powers in the interest of the company;
- (2) not misuse or abuse his power;
- (3) avoid conflict between his personal interests and those of the company;
- (4) not take advantage of his position to make secret profits; and
- (5) not misappropriate the company’s assets for himself.⁴⁹

- 2.10.3 The test as to whether or not a director has acted in the best interest of the company is a subjective one. A director must act bona fide in what he considers – and not what the court may consider – is in the best interest of the company. This test precludes the court from second guessing the commercial decisions of the director as to where the best interest of the company lies.⁵⁰

- 2.10.4 A director’s primary duty is to act in the interests of the company of which he is a director. The proper test in the absence of evidence of the subjective state of mind of the director is whether ‘an honest and intelligent man in the position of the directors, taking an objective view, could reasonably have concluded that the transactions were in the interests of the company’. If the court concludes that an honest and intelligent person could have reasonably concluded that, the transactions were in the interests of the company, there is no breach of fiduciary duty.⁵¹

2.11 Duty to exercise powers for proper purposes

- 2.11.1 The requirement to act for a proper purpose is distinct from the requirement that the directors act bona fide. The test is whether the director's actions had been taken in accordance with the purpose for which it was intended and was exercised for the benefit of the company. A director may therefore still breach this duty even if he honestly believes his actions are in the best interests of the company as a whole. The court will first examine the power which the director had exercised to determine the purpose for which the power was granted. Then, the court will determine the substantial purpose for which the power was in fact exercised to determine if the power was exercised honestly and in the interest of the company.⁵²
- 2.11.2 The onus of establishing that a director had acted in breach of such duty is on those alleging the breach.

2.12 Duty to act with reasonable care, skill and diligence

- 2.12.1 Section 132(1A) CA 1965 provides a partly subjective and partly objective test for reasonable care, skill and diligence:

"A director of a company shall exercise reasonable care, skill and diligence with

- (a) the knowledge, skill and experience which may reasonably be expected of a director having the same responsibilities; and*
- (b) any additional knowledge, skill and experience which the director in fact has."*

- 2.12.2 A director is thus required to take, in the performance of his duties, such care as an ordinary man might be expected to take and he is also required to exhibit in the performance of these duties such degree of skill as may reasonably be required from a person with his knowledge and experience.⁵³
- 2.12.3 The recent amendment to section 132 CA 1965 introduced a new sub-section (1B) whereby a director who makes a business judgment is deemed to meet the requirements of reasonable care, skill and diligence test in sub-section (1A) and the equivalent duties under the common law and equity if the director:
- (a) makes the business judgment in good faith for a proper purpose;
 - (b) does not have a material personal interest in the subject matter of the business judgment;
 - (c) is informed about the subject matter of the business judgment to the extent the director reasonably believes to be appropriate under the circumstances; and
 - (d) reasonably believes that the business judgment is in the best interest of the company.

⁵² Howard Smith Ltd v Ampol Petroleum [1974] AC 821, PC.

⁵³ Dorchester Finance Co Ltd v Stebbing [1989] BCLC 498 at 501-502, Foster J.

- 2.12.4 The 'business judgment rule' describes an American company law rule which prevents the court from questioning the merits of a business judgment made by directors after reasonable investigation, in good faith without personal interest and in reasonable belief that they are acting for the benefit of the company. This rule was developed to protect an honest director and other officers from the risks inherent in hindsight reviews of their unsuccessful decisions, and because of a desire to refrain from stifling innovation and entrepreneurship.
- 2.12.5 This rule is developed on the general principle that it is not the function of the court to substitute its judgment for the business judgment of a director as it is expected or presumed that a director knows best about the business of the company and have more time and expertise at his disposal to evaluate the best interest of the company. In order to satisfy the business judgment rule, it is not necessary to show that the decision itself was reasonable or that the court would have arrived at the same decision. Rather, it is sufficient for a director to show that he took reasonable steps to inform himself about the subject matter before making the business judgment and that he reasonably believed that judgment was in the best interest of the company.
- 2.12.6 Whilst this rule has remained as a judicial doctrine in America, Australia has enacted a statutory formulation of this business judgment rule. Section 132(1B) CA 1965 corresponds with the provisions of the Australian Act.⁵⁴
- 2.12.7 The business judgment rule only qualifies the scope of the duty to act with reasonable care, skill and diligence prescribed in section 132(1A) CA 1965. It does not provide a defence to a breach of a director's statutory duty to act for a proper purpose and in good faith in the best interest of the company under section 132(1).

2.13 Duty to avoid conflict of interests and to avoid secret profits

- 2.13.1 A director has an obligation to avoid conflict of interests. Section 132(2) CA 1965 codified the common law prohibition against the improper use of the company's property, position and corporate opportunity. This sub-section prohibits a director of a company from using property of the company or his position as a director of the company to gain directly, or indirectly a benefit for himself or any person, or cause detriment to the company.
- 2.13.2 A director is regarded as a trustee of the property of the company. Such property may only be used for the purposes of the company. A director who uses the property of the company to make a profit for himself or any other person not only commits a breach of his duty to the company, but will also commit a criminal offence if the property is misappropriated.
- 2.13.3 The same section also prohibits a director from using any information or opportunity of the company which he acquired or became aware of, in the performance of his functions as a director of the company to gain directly or indirectly, a benefit for himself or any other person, or cause detriment to the company.

- 2.13.4 A director who obtains information and knowledge, and which he withholds from the company and uses for his personal gain will be liable to account for the profits earned. This is because the information had come into his possession when he was a director of the company and the information was relevant for the company to know. The director is not absolved from liability even if the company is not deprived of any profits.⁵⁵
- 2.13.5 The duty of a director not to make use of his position to obtain a profit for himself is similar to an agent's duty not to make secret profits out of his position as agent. The rule that prohibits a director from making secret profits is so strict that a director is liable to account for profits made in breach of this duty even though the director is not guilty of any moral wrong. Lack of bad faith will not absolve a director from such liability. Once it is established that what the director did was so related to the affairs of the company that it can properly be said to have been done in the course of his management and using his opportunities and special knowledge as directors, the director will be liable to account for the profits obtained.⁵⁶
- 2.13.6 A director's duty not to usurp for himself, or divert to his associates, a maturing business opportunity which the company is actively pursuing is imposed on the director even after his resignation where the resignation may fairly be said to be prompted or influenced by a wish to acquire for himself the opportunity sought by the company.⁵⁷ Therefore, a director's duty does not end upon resignation.
- 2.13.7 A director is not prohibited from engaging in business which is in competition with the company so long as he does not breach his fiduciary duties and duties of confidentiality to the company. A director is at liberty to be a director of a rival company unless prohibited from doing so by the articles of association of a company.⁵⁸

3. Other persons involved with the company's affairs who may become liable in respect of their actions during the "twilight period"
- (a) In addition to the formally appointed directors of the company, can others be held liable in respect of the company's activities during the "twilight" period if the company were to become subject to a formal insolvency procedure?
- (b) In respect of which acts may other persons be held liable and to what extent does the liability of third parties differ from that for directors identified in question 2 above?

- (c) Will liability be limited to that resulting from involvement with a particular transaction or more generally in relation to the overall loss suffered by creditors?

3.1 Introduction

- 3.1.1 Malaysian law is similar to English law in that it may impose liability on a wide variety of persons who have been involved in the management of a company during the twilight period depending on the particular act or offence. Malaysian courts have adopted the English position citing with approval the English authorities.⁵⁹ Malaysian law recognises that a company's affairs during this time are not only influenced by those formally appointed as directors but also by a wide range of other people. If such persons have caused loss to the company and its creditors during this time, they may also be found personally liable for such loss. Malaysian law may impose personal liability on "shadow" and "de facto" directors in certain circumstances.
- 3.1.2 Third parties who are not in any way involved in the management of the company but who may be a party to transactions during the twilight zone may also have transactions challenged and set aside under the clawback provisions for undue provisions.
- 3.1.3 Finally, third parties who have knowledge of breach of duty of a director or directors when entering into transactions, or had either fraudulently assisted in that breach and/or received property from the company with knowledge of that breach, will under general equitable principles be liable as a constructive trustee of such property and be liable to return it or to pay compensation to the company.

3.2 De facto and shadow directors

- 3.2.1 The concept of "shadow directors" is reflected in CA 1965 to catch persons who, although not on the board or making day to day decisions at the company, are in fact pulling the strings behind the scenes.
- 3.2.2 Section 4(1) CA 1965 provides that unless a contrary intention appears, the term 'director':

"includes any person occupying the position of director of a corporation by whatever name called and includes a person in accordance with whose directions or instructions the directors of a corporation are accustomed to act and an alternate or substitute director."

- 3.2.3 A director is not necessarily defined by his designation as such but rather by the dominant or controlling role that he plays in the running of the company. Section 4(1) CA 1965 encompasses a de facto as well as a shadow director who is "a person in accordance with whose directions or instructions the directors of a corporation are accustomed to act".⁶⁰

⁶⁰ Cepatwasan Group Bhd & Anor v Tengku Dato' Kamal Ibni Sultan Sir Abu Bakar & Ors [2008] 2 CLJ 620.

- 3.2.4 Whilst the terms de facto and shadow director have been used interchangeably, case laws have made a distinction between the two terms. There are contrarian authorities in this regard where one school of thought claims that the two terms are mutually exclusive⁶¹ whilst recent judicial dicta held that the two terms are not mutually exclusive and it is possible that a person conducts himself in a mixture of both.⁶² However, a recent Malaysian court has opined that whether the two terms are mutually exclusive or overlap would depend on the particular facts and circumstances of each individual case.⁶³

3.3 De facto directors

- 3.3.1 A de facto director is a person who though not validly appointed as such, purports or claims or holds himself out to be a director. To establish that a person was a de facto director of a company it is necessary to plead and prove that he undertook functions in relation to the company which could properly only be discharged by a director. It is not sufficient to show that he was concerned in the management of the company's affairs or undertook tasks in relation to its business which can properly be performed by a manager below board level.⁶⁴
- 3.3.2 The question of whether a person is occupying the position of director or not is a question of fact.
- 3.3.3 A de facto director is subject to the same statutory and fiduciary duties as a director who has been validly appointed.⁶⁵ A de facto director would be liable for any act of commissions or any omission on his part in the same manner and to the same extent as if he had been a de jure as well as de facto director. It must be shown that something he did resulted in a loss to the company and for which, if he had been duly appointed directors of the company, the company would have been entitled to a remedy against him.
- 3.3.4 A de facto director is also able to bind the company in contracts and agreements with bona fide third parties in his capacity as an agent of the company with actual and/or apparent authority. Under principles of general agency law, he is not personally liable under those contracts but may be liable in damages for breach of an implied warranty of authority if he can be deemed to have warranted that he had authority to act on behalf of the company when no such authority existed.

3.4 Shadow director

3.4.1 A shadow director may not necessarily in all cases act as a director but conceals or hides his role as such.⁶⁶ A shadow director has been described to be in reality a puppeteer who pulls the string and his puppets on the board dance.⁶⁷ A shadow director is a person who, through directions and instructions to the directors of the company, exercises real influence over some, if not all, of the affairs of the company. He often lurks in the shadows, but it is not a necessary ingredient that he must lurk in the shadows all the time. The primary consideration is whether real influence was exercised and not the means by which influence was exercised.⁶⁸

3.4.2 In order to establish that a person is a shadow director of the company it is necessary to allege and prove:

- (i) the identities of the directors of the company, whether de facto or de jure;
- (ii) that the person concerned directed those directors how to act in relation to the company or that he was one of the persons who did so;
- (iii) that those directors acted in accordance with such directions; and
- (iv) that those directors were accustomed so to act.

3.4.3 In Malaysia, the Report of the Finance Committee on Corporate Governance (February 1999) recognised the difficulty in establishing whether a particular director is acting under the control of another and recommended that considerations be given to deeming significant shareholders of a certain shareholding threshold and above as directors.

'Directions' and 'instructions'

3.4.4 'Directions' and 'instructions' refer to communication between an alleged shadow director and the board of directors. Communication may be written or oral and formal or informal. Whether any particular communication constitutes 'direction' or 'instruction' is a question of fact which is to be objectively ascertained in the light of all evidence.

3.4.5 Whilst it is not necessary to show the existence of actual directions or instructions in order to constitute shadow directorship, there must be evidence of a controlling or commanding role exercised by the 'shadow director' over the de jure directors.⁶⁹ The implications are that the de jure directors did not exercise any discretion or independent judgment but exhibited a pattern of acting in compliance with the directions of the shadow director.⁷⁰

⁷⁰ Cepatwasan Group Bhd & Anor v Tengku Dato' Kamal Ibni Sultan Sir Abu Bakar & Ors [2008] 2 CLJ 620.

- 3.4.6 There is no requirement that the de jure directors be shown to have acted in a subservient role to the de facto or shadow director and the Report referred to above cautioned against going beyond what is required by statute. What is required under section 4(1) CA 1965 is the lower threshold of compliance rather than subservience to the directions and instructions of the alleged shadow director.

Accustomed to act

- 3.4.7 The focus of 'accustomed to act' is directed at results flowing from directions and instructions and not the underlying means through which the results are obtained.
- 3.4.8 The 'influence' also need not be such as to show that the de jure director exercises no discretion of his own. He must be the 'cat's paw' of the shadow director. He must act on the directions or instructions of the shadow director as a matter of regular practice.⁷¹ All that is required to constitute 'accustomed to act' is that over a period of time and as a regular course of conduct the communications of the alleged shadow director have been acted upon by proof of results, as opposed to proof of an underlying expectation or understanding that the communication would be acted upon by the recipient.⁷²
- 3.4.9 To construe a person as a shadow director, there must be shown the existence of a 'pattern' of 'custom' in which the shadow director plays a controlling role over the de jure director in respect of the management of the company.⁷³
- 3.4.10 Section 4(2) CA 1965 provides that a person who merely gives advice to the directors in his or her professional capacity is not to be regarded as a 'director' for the purposes of section 4(1). This suggests that a professional adviser can be a shadow director if what he is providing the directors is something more than just professional advice.

3.5 Officers

- 3.5.1 Liability for many of the acts identified in question 2 above is often imposed on an 'officer' of the company. Section 4(1) CA 1965 defines 'officer' to include directors, secretaries, employees and receivers and managers, and liquidators under a voluntary winding up.

3.6 Other third parties who may be held liable

- 3.6.1 A third party may be held liable either to return such property or provide such compensation as the court may order if he receives property as a result of transactions at undervalue, preference or as a result of a transaction defrauding creditors.
- 3.6.2 If a third party receives property of the company which has been disposed of after the winding up order has been made without the court's validation, the disposal will be void.⁷⁴

⁷⁴ Section 223 CA 1965.

- 3.6.3 A third party who is knowingly a party to the carrying on of a business with the intent to defraud creditors will be liable for fraudulent trading.
- 3.6.4 Any third party who has dishonestly assisted in a breach of duty by a director or other officer of a company or knowingly received property arising from such a breach will be liable for any loss arising.

3.7 Summary

- 3.7.1 Liability may attach to persons not formally appointed as directors for the following offences:

Offence/Activity	Persons liable	Extent of liability
Insolvent trading	Officer of a company	Same as for director
Fraudulent trading	Any person who was knowingly a party to the carrying on of the business for a fraudulent purpose	Same as for director
Misconduct in the course of company being wound up	Past or present officer or a contributory of the company	Same as for director
Fraud in the course of company being wound up	Past or present officer or a contributory of the company	Same as for director
Falsification of books	Every officer or contributory of a company	Same as for director
Proper accounts not kept	Officer of a company	Same as for director
False representations to creditors	Past or present officer or a contributory of the company	Same as for director
Material omissions from statement relating to company's affairs	Past or present officer or a contributory of the company	Same as for director
Misfeasance or breach of trust or duty	Any person who has taken part in the formation or promotion of the company or any past or present liquidator or officer who has misapplied or retained or become liable or accountable for any money or property of the company or been guilty of any misfeasance or breach of trust or duty in relation to the company	Same as for director
Preference	Recipient of preference Return of property received or removal of specific benefit received	Same as for director
Sale at undervalue or overvalue	Recipient of property received	Return of property received and/or pay compensation to the company

QUESTION 4

4. Counterparties dealing with the company during the twilight period

- (a) From the point of view of a counterparty dealing with the company during the twilight period, what are the potential heads of challenge which may lead to transactions with the company being set aside?
- (b) What defences, if any, to the areas of vulnerability identified above will be available to a counter-party seeking to protect a transaction from being attacked?

4.1 Introduction

- 4.1.1 As in most legal systems, Malaysian law too has provisions that seeks to undo transactions prejudicial to a company and/or which are unfairly beneficial to a counterparty, particularly when they are entered into during the twilight period.

4.2 Summary of heads of challenge

- 4.2.1 The potential heads of challenge which may lead to transactions with the company being set aside from the point of view of a counterparty, are as follows:
 - (a) sale at an undervalue or overvalue;
 - (b) undue preference;
 - (c) invalid floating charges;
 - (d) breach of a director's fiduciary duties;
 - (e) disclaimer of onerous property;
 - (f) dispositions of the company's property made after the commencement of winding up; and
 - (g) failure to register a charge.

4.3 Sale at undervalue or acquisition at an overvalue⁷⁵

- 4.3.1 Section 295 CA 1965 provides as follows:
 - (1) Where any property, business or undertaking has been acquired by a company for a cash consideration within a period of two years before the commencement of the winding up of the company
 - (a) from a person who was at the time of the acquisition a director of the company; or
 - (b) from a company of which, at the time of the acquisition, a person was a director who was also a director of the first-mentioned company,

the liquidator may recover from the person or company from which the property, business or undertaking was acquired any amount by which the cash consideration for the acquisition exceeded the value of the property, business or undertaking at the time of its acquisition.

- 4.3.2 Conversely, in similar circumstances, where the company has sold any such property, the liquidator may recover from the person or company to whom the property, business or undertaking was sold, any amount by which the value of the property, business or undertaking at the time of the sale exceeded the cash consideration.⁷⁶

Conditions for setting aside a sale at undervalue or acquisition at an overvalue

- 4.3.3 The court can only make an order for restoration of the status quo by way of relief under this provision if the following conditions are satisfied:

- (1) the company is in liquidation and an application is made by the liquidator;
- (2) the company acquired/sold property, business or undertaking within a period of two years before the commencement of the winding up of the company; and
- (3) the property, business or undertaking was acquired/sold for a cash consideration. 'Cash consideration' means a consideration for the acquisition or sale which is payable otherwise than by an issue of shares in the company.⁷⁷

- 4.3.4 'Value' includes the value of any goodwill or profits which might have been made from the business or undertaking or similar considerations.⁷⁸

4.4 Undue preference⁷⁹

- 4.4.1 Section 293 CA 1965 deals with undue preferences. This section incorporates the provisions of section 53 of the Bankruptcy Act 1967 (BA 1967), by giving the liquidator the power to recover the value of certain pre-liquidation dispositions of the company's property from creditors. These dispositions are referred to as preferences. Section 293 is designed to preserve the sanctity of the pari passu principle by which creditors in a winding up participate equally in the assets available for distribution.⁸⁰

- 4.4.2 By virtue of section 53 of the BA 1967, every transfer of property, every payment made and every obligation incurred by any person unable to pay his debts as they become due, from his own money in favour of any creditor shall be deemed to have given a creditor a preference over other creditors if the person making the same is adjudged bankrupt on a petition presented within 6 months after making the same and such act shall be deemed fraudulent and void as against the Official Assignee.

⁸⁰ Sime Diamond Leasing (M) Sdn Bhd v JB Precision Moulding Industries Sdn Bhd (In Liquidation) [1998] 4 MLJ 569.

- 4.4.3 There is no requirement in section 53(1) BA 1967 that the transactions were carried out with the view to creating a preference or with a desire to produce the effect of preference.
- 4.4.4 The transactions which will be void as being undue preferences are inter alia payments made to an existing creditor within the 6 month period prior to the presentation of the winding up petition [on the assumption that the company is ultimately wound up]. The commencement date of winding up is deemed to be:
- (1) the date of presentation of the winding up petition; or
 - (2) where before the presentation of the petition a resolution has been passed by the company for voluntary winding up the date upon which the resolution to wind up the company voluntarily, is passed,
- whichever is the earlier; and
- (3) in the case of a voluntary winding up the date upon which the winding up is deemed by the CA 1965 to have commenced.
- 4.4.5 The effect of the payment on the other creditors is to be determined objectively. The test is whether the payment has the effect of giving a creditor a preference over the other creditors and it is irrelevant whether the debtor intended to give the creditor preferential treatment.⁸¹
- 4.4.6 Whilst section 53(1) BA 1967 declares the preferences are void, it is settled law that 'preferences' relating to companies are merely voidable at the option of the liquidator.⁸²

Conditions for setting aside a 'preference'

- 4.4.7 The court can only make an order for restoration of the status quo by way of relief under this provision if the following conditions are satisfied:
- (i) the transaction in question must take place within six months prior to the commencement of the winding up;
 - (ii) it must be the type of transaction mentioned in section 53(1) of the BA 1967;
 - (iii) it took place at a time when the company was insolvent;
 - (iv) the person in whose favour the transaction was effected was a creditor to the company; and
 - (v) the effect of that transaction was to confer on that person a preference, priority or advantage over other creditors in the winding up.⁸³

- 4.4.8 Under section 53 BA 1967, it appears that if the five conditions are proved, preference is deemed to have been given and shall be deemed to be fraudulent and void.

4.5 Invalid floating charges⁸⁴

- 4.5.1 Section 294 CA 1965 deals specifically with the situation where the security takes the form of a floating charge. A floating charge on the undertaking or property of the company created within six months of the commencement of the winding up is invalid except to the amount of any moneys paid to the company at the time of, and in consideration for, the charge together with interest at five per cent per annum or such other rate as is prescribed.⁸⁵ The floating charge is not invalid if the creditor proves the company was solvent immediately after the creation of the charge.

- 4.5.2 This section aims to prevent companies which are on the verge of insolvency from securing past debts by granting floating charges over its assets in favour of particular creditors.

Conditions for setting aside

- 4.5.3 A floating charge on the undertaking or property of the company is invalid under this provision if the following conditions are satisfied:

- (1) the company is insolvent; and
- (2) the charge is created within six months of the commencement of winding up.

- 4.5.4 It should be noted that section 294 CA 1965 only invalidates the floating charge and not the debt. The debt can still be proved.⁸⁶ Further, the section only affects the recovery of money under the debenture creating a floating charge. It does not affect the ability to recover money secured by a separate contract of guarantee.⁸⁷

4.6 Breach by directors of general/common law duties

- 4.6.1 If the directors cause the company to contract with another party on terms disadvantageous to the company, they may be in breach of their general/common law duty to put the company's interests first. Where the counterparty has knowledge of this, there may be circumstances where there are proprietary or restitutionary rights to recover the property. These are rights under the general law and, whilst not dependent upon insolvency, are more likely to be examined and/or exercised after a formal insolvency event.

4.7 Disclaimer of onerous property⁸⁸

4.7.1 In order to preserve the remaining assets of the company, section 296 CA 1965 enables the liquidator to disclaim any onerous property on behalf of the company.

4.7.2 This includes:⁸⁹

- (a) any estate or interest in land which is burdened with onerous covenants;
- (b) shares in corporations;
- (c) unprofitable contracts; or
- (d) any other property that is unsaleable, or not readily saleable, by reason of its binding the possessor to the performance of any onerous act, or to the payment of any sum of money.

4.7.3 The purpose of the power of disclaimer is to relieve the company of an asset, which in reality is merely a liability. This power may only be exercised within 12 months after the commencement of the winding up and only with the leave of the court or the committee of inspection. The disclaimer operates to terminate the rights, interests and liabilities of the company as from the date of disclaimer. However, all liabilities arising up to the date of commencement of winding up remain and rank with other debts of equal priority.

4.7.4 The disclaimer determines the rights, interest and liabilities of the company and the property of the company in or in respect of the property disclaimed. The disclaimer does not (except so far as necessary for the purpose of releasing the company from any liability) affect the rights or liabilities of any other person. Any person injured by the operation of a disclaimer is deemed to be a creditor of the company to the amount of the injury, and may prove the amount as a debt in the winding up.

4.7.5 There can be no disclaimer if the liquidator fails, within a period of twenty-eight days after the receipt of an application requiring him to decide whether he will or will not disclaim, to give notice to the applicant that he intends to apply to court or committee for leave to disclaim.

4.8 Disposition of property of the company made after the commencement of winding up⁹⁰

4.8.1 Section 223 CA 1965 provides that any disposition of the company's property including things in action and any transfer of shares or alteration in the status of the members of the company made after the commencement of the winding up by the court is void, unless validated by the court.

⁸⁸ Section 296 CA 1965.

⁹⁰ Section 223 CA 1965.

- 4.8.2 A company may seek a court validation order in respect of transactions in this period, when perhaps it is unclear whether the company will be able to pay off the petitioning creditors. The question of validating such transaction is at the discretion of the court, following an application by the person seeking an order for validation.⁹¹ The commencement of the winding up backdates to the date of presentation of the petition for compulsory winding-up if an order is ultimately made.

4.9 Failure to register a charge⁹²

- 4.9.1 Section 108 CA 1965 sets out the charges (whether legal or equitable) which must be registered with the Registrar of Companies. The charges required to be registered under section 108(3) CA 1965 are:

- (a) a charge to secure any issue of debentures;
- (b) a charge on uncalled share capital of a company;
- (c) a charge on shares of a subsidiary of the company which are owned by the company;
- (d) a charge or an assignment created or evidenced by an instrument which if executed by an individual within Peninsular Malaysia and affecting property within Peninsular Malaysia would be invalid or of limited effect if not filed or registered under the Bills of Sale Act, 1950;
- (e) a charge on land wherever situate or any interest therein;
- (f) a charge on book debts of the company;
- (g) a floating charge on the undertaking or property of a company;
- (h) a charge on calls made but not paid;
- (i) a charge on a ship or aircraft or any share in a ship or aircraft;
- (j) a charge on goodwill, on a patent or licence under a patent, on a trade mark, or on a copyright or a licence under a copyright; and
- (k) a charge on the credit balance of the company in any deposit account.

- 4.9.2 It appears that the charges required to be registered under section 108(3) CA 1965 are exhaustive. This is because charges which are not referred to in section 108 CA 1965 do not require registration; for instance fixed charges over partnership interests and commercial contracts.⁹³

- 4.9.3 Where a company does not lodge a notice of charge within the prescribed period of 30 days after its creation, the charge will be void as against the liquidator or any creditor of the company. The time limit of 30 days is subject to any extension ordered by the court under section 114 CA 1965. Where the charge is void against a liquidator, the chargee nevertheless remains a creditor of the company, but without security, thereby rendering him or her as merely an unsecured creditor of the company.⁹⁴ Section 108 CA 1965 applies without prejudice to any contract or obligation for repayment of the money secured by a charge. When a charge becomes void under this section, the money secured thereby shall immediately become payable.⁹⁵

⁹⁵ Section 108(2) CA 1965.

- 4.9.4 The main purpose of these provisions is to enable a potential creditor of that company, who proposes to lend money on security of particular assets, to ascertain whether the company has already given a charge over those assets. They also enable an unsecured creditor to determine the extent to which the assets of a company have been charged, and thereby to ascertain the rights of secured creditors who rank ahead of an unsecured creditor in priority of payment.

QUESTION 5

5. Enforcement

By whom may action be brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3 above)?

5.1 Introduction

- 5.1.1 A liquidator is required to review the action taken by directors and other persons involved in the affairs of the company during the twilight period as part of his duty to collect and then realise assets of the company for the benefit of the creditors. If the circumstances require, he is obliged also to bring proceedings to obtain compensation for the company for any loss caused to the company by persons interested in the company, including directors. Consequently, in most cases it is the liquidator who is empowered to bring actions against directors.

5.2 Criminal proceedings

- 5.2.1 In the course of a winding up of a company by the court, if it appears to the court that any past or present officer, or any member of the company has been guilty of an offence in relation to the company for which he is criminally liable, the court may direct the liquidator either himself to prosecute the offender or to refer the matter to the Minister charged with the responsibility for companies within section 4 CA 1965 ("Minister"). The court may give such directions either on the application of a person interested in the winding up or of its own motion.⁹⁶
- 5.2.2 In the case of a voluntary winding up, where it appears to the liquidator that such persons mentioned above are guilty of such offences, the liquidator must report forthwith the matter to the Minister and furnish the Minister with such information or documents relating to the matter and give to him such access to and facilities for inspecting and taking copies of any documents as may be required.⁹⁷

- 5.2.3 The Minister may, if he thinks fit, investigate the matter and may then apply to the court or an order conferring on him or any other person designated by him powers of investigating the affairs of the company as are provided by the CA 1965 in the case of a winding up by the court.⁹⁸ If the Minister considers that the case is one in which a prosecution ought to be instituted, he may institute proceedings accordingly, and the liquidator and all past and present officer and agent of the company shall give the Minister or Official Receiver all assistance in connection with the prosecution which they are reasonably able to give.⁹⁹
- 5.2.4 If any person fails or neglects to give assistance in the manner as required, the court may, on an application of the Minister or official receiver direct that person to provide such assistance. If the application is made with respect to a liquidator, unless it appears that the failure or neglect to comply was due to the liquidator not having in his hands sufficient assets of the company to enable him to do so, the court may direct that the costs of the application be borne by the liquidator personally.¹⁰⁰
- 5.2.5 The Minister may direct that the whole or any part of any costs and expenses properly incurred by the liquidator in such proceedings be defrayed out of moneys provided by Parliament.¹⁰¹ All other costs and expenses shall be payable out of the assets of the company as part of the costs of winding up.¹⁰²
- 5.2.6 However, if it appears to the Minister that the case is not one in which proceedings ought to be taken by him, he shall inform the liquidator accordingly, and thereupon subject to the approval by the court, the liquidator may himself take proceedings against the offender.¹⁰³
- 5.2.7 Section 371(1) CA 1965 provides that except where provision is otherwise made in the CA 1965 proceedings, for any offence of that Act may be taken by the Registrar or, with the written consent of the Minister, by any person.¹⁰⁴
- 5.2.8 The following are criminal offences in the CA 1965 in respect of which either the liquidator or Minister may bring an action against the directors and others involved:
- (a) inducement to be appointed liquidator – section 301;
 - (b) falsification of books – section 302;
 - (c) proper accounts not kept – section 303(1);
 - (d) insolvent trading – section 303(3);
 - (e) fraudulent trading – section 304;
 - (f) misconduct in the course of company being wound up – section 300;
 - (g) fraud in the course of company being wound up – section 300;

Pursuant to section 376(i) of the Criminal Procedure Code, the Attorney-General shall be the Public Prosecutor and shall have the control and direction of all criminal prosecutions and proceedings under the said Code.

- (h) false representations to creditors – section 300;
- (i) material omissions from statement relating to company's affairs – section 300; and
- (j) misfeasance or breach of trust or duty – section 305.

5.3 Civil proceedings

- 5.3.1 As for civil proceedings, the ability to bring actions against directors and others is primarily held by the liquidator of the company.
- 5.3.2 The table below sets out those people who may bring an action against the directors and others in connection with certain transactions which the company has entered into or for disqualification proceedings.

QUESTION 6

6. Remedies: orders available to the domestic court

In respect of the offences identified in questions 2, 3 and 4 above, what remedies are available in the domestic court?

Activity/transaction	Person able to bring proceedings
Misfeasance	Liquidator, creditor or contributory of the company
Fraudulent trading	Liquidator, creditor or contributory of the company
Insolvent trading	Liquidator, creditor or contributory of the company
Sale at undervalue or acquisition at overvalue	Liquidator only
Undue preference	Liquidator, creditor or contributory of the company
Disposition of the company's property made after the commencement of winding up	Liquidator, creditor or shareholder ¹⁰⁵ of the company
Disqualification as director	Registrar, Official Receiver or any person. Any person intending to apply for the leave of court for this order must give to the Registrar notice of his intention to apply and the Registrar shall be made a party to the proceedings.
Breach of director's duties	Liquidator only

QUESTION 7

7. Duty to co-operate

- (a) To what extent are directors (and others identified in question 3 above) obliged to co-operate with an investigation into the company's affairs following its insolvency?

Offence	Remedy Available
Falsification of books	The penalty is imprisonment for five years or a RM30,000.00 fine.
Inducement to be appointed liquidator	The penalty is imprisonment for one year or a RM1,000.00 fine.
Proper accounts not kept	The penalty is imprisonment for three years or a RM10,000.00 fine.
Insolvent Trading	The court may, on the application of the liquidator or any creditor or contributory of the company, declare that the person shall be personally responsible without any limitation of liability for the payment of the whole or any part of that debt. The court also has powers to make consequential orders to give effect to the declaration above. Where the court makes a declaration under section 303(3) CA 1965 that an individual is liable to make contribution to the company's assets, then whether or not an application has been made for his disqualification, the court may make an order that the individual be disqualified from acting as a company director and prohibit him from being in any way concerned in or taking part in the management of a corporation for a period of five years from the date of order.
Insolvent Trading	The penalty is imprisonment for one year or a RM5,000.00 fine.
Fraudulent Trading	The court may, on the application of the liquidator or any creditor or contributory of the company, declare that any person who was knowingly a party to the carrying on of the business in that manner shall be personally responsible without any limitation of liability, for all or any of the debts or other liabilities of the company. The court also has powers to make consequential orders to give effect to the declaration above.

	Where the court makes a declaration under section 304 CA 1965 that an individual is liable to make contribution to the company's assets, then whether or not an application has been made for his disqualification, the court may make an order that the individual be disqualified from acting as a company director and prohibit him from being in any way concerned in or taking part in the management of a corporation for a period of five years from the date of order.
Fraudulent Trading	The penalty is imprisonment for three years or a RM10,000.00 fine.
Misconduct in the course of company being wound up	The penalty is imprisonment for two years or a RM5,000.00 fine.
Fraud in the course of company being wound up	The penalty is imprisonment for two years or a RM5,000.00 fine.
False representations to creditors	The penalty is imprisonment for two years or a RM5,000.00 fine.
Material omissions from statement relating to company's affairs	The penalty is imprisonment for two years or a RM5,000.00 fine.
Misfeasance	The court may order the director to repay or restore the money or property or any part of it, with interest at such rate as the court thinks just, or to contribute such sum to the assets of the company by way of compensation in respect of the misapplication, retainer, misfeasance or breach of trust or duty as the court thinks just.
Fiduciary duties	The director may be ordered to compensate the company for any loss or damage caused by breach of his fiduciary duty, to restore to the company any property appropriated or acquired in breach of his fiduciary duty and to account to the company for any benefit or profits obtained in breach of fiduciary duty.
Duties of skill and care	The director may be ordered to compensate the company for all loss and damage caused by breach of his duty of skill and care.
Conduct rendering a director unfit to be concerned in the management of a company	The court may order disqualification for a period not exceeding five years. There is no financial penalty. ¹⁰⁶
Transactions at an undervalue and preferences	The court may make such order as it thinks fit in order to restore the position to that which would have existed if the company had not entered into the impugned transaction.
Invalid floating charges	The court can declare that the floating charge is invalid.

¹⁰⁶ Section 130A of the CA 1965.

- (b) Are any human rights laws applicable in the domestic jurisdiction in relation to any such obligations (e.g. in the UK and other European jurisdictions Article 6 of the European Convention of Human Rights may apply if domestic law compels a person to provide potentially self-incriminating information at the request of the office-holder appointed under the relevant insolvency procedure adopted)?

7.1 Introduction

7.1.1 There is no provision in the CA 1965 imposing a general duty on directors and others involved in the affairs of the company to co-operate with a liquidator, provisional liquidator or Official Receiver, as can be found under English law in section 235 Insolvency Act 1986 (IA 1986). Liquidators in Malaysia must rely on the specific provisions which are set out below when investigating the company's affairs.

7.1.2 A person is guilty of an offence against the CA 1965 if he:¹⁰⁷

- (a) does an act which under the CA 1965 he is forbidden to do;
- (b) does not do that which by or under the CA 1965 he is required or directed to do; or
- (c) otherwise contravenes or fails to comply with any provision of the CA 1965.

7.1.3 A person who is convicted of an offence under the CA 1965 shall be liable to a penalty or punishment not exceeding that expressly mentioned for the offence, or if no such penalty or punishment is expressly mentioned, to a penalty not exceeding RM5,000.00.¹⁰⁸

7.2 Obligation to produce for inspection books and papers of the company¹⁰⁹

7.2.1 The court may order the inspection of the books and papers of the company by creditors and contributories as the court thinks just and any books and papers in the possession of the company may be inspected by creditors or contributories accordingly.

7.3 Company's statement of affairs¹¹⁰

7.3.1 In a compulsory liquidation, section 234 CA 1965 requires persons who were the directors and secretary at the time of winding up order to submit a report to the liquidator in the prescribed form as to the affairs of the company. This statement as to the affairs of the company as at the date of the winding up order must show:

- (i) the particulars of its assets, debts and liabilities;
- (ii) the names and addresses of its creditors;

¹⁰⁸ Section 369(2) CA 1965.

¹⁰⁹ Section 248 CA 1965.

¹¹⁰ Section 234 CA 1965.

- (iii) the securities held by them respectively;
- (iv) the dates when the securities were respectively given; and
- (v) such further information as is prescribed or as the Official Receiver or the liquidator requires.

7.3.2 The report must be submitted within 14 days after the making of the winding up order unless otherwise extended.¹¹¹ Persons who may also be required to supply information on the affairs of the company if requested by the liquidator are:

- (i) present or former officers;
- (ii) persons who have taken part in the formation of the company within a year of the date of winding up order; or
- (iii) persons who are or have been within that period officers in the employment of a corporation which is, or within that period was, an officer of the company to which the statement relates.¹¹²

7.3.3 Such persons making the statement may be paid out of the assets of the company, such costs and expenses incurred in and about the preparation and making of the statement as the Official Receiver or the liquidator considers reasonable.¹¹³

7.3.4 Every person who commits a default in submitting such a report without reasonable excuse shall be liable to imprisonment for three years or RM10,000.00 fine or both.¹¹⁴ The liquidator shall report such default to the court.¹¹⁵

Preparation of statement of affairs¹¹⁶

7.3.5 The liquidator may from time to time hold personal interviews with such persons who are required to submit and verify statement of affairs of the company mentioned above for the purpose of investigating the company's affairs. Such persons are duty bound to attend on the liquidator at such time and place as the liquidator may appoint and give the liquidator all information that he may require.¹¹⁷

Information subsequent to statement of affairs

7.3.6 After the statement of affairs of a company has been submitted to the liquidator, it shall be the duty of each person who has made or concurred in making it, if and when required, to attend on the liquidator and answer all such questions as may be put to him and give all such further information as may be required of him by the liquidator in relation to the statement of affairs.

7.4 Private examination¹¹⁸

- 7.4.1 The court may summon before it and examine on oath any officer of the company or person:
- (i) who is known or suspected to have in his possession any property of the company; or
 - (ii) who is supposed to be indebted to the company; or
 - (iii) whom the court deems capable of giving information concerning the promotion, formation, trade dealings, affairs or property of the company.¹¹⁹
- 7.4.2 The court may examine such persons on oath either by word of mouth or on written interrogatories and may reduce his answers to writing and require him to sign them, and any writing so signed may be used in evidence in any legal proceedings against him.¹²⁰
- 7.4.3 Such persons may also be required to produce any books and papers in his custody or power relating to the company. However, where he claims any lien on books or papers the production shall be without prejudice to that lien, and that the court shall have jurisdiction to determine all questions relating to that lien.¹²¹
- 7.4.4 If any person so summoned after being tendered a reasonable sum for his expenses refuses to come before the court at the time appointed not having a lawful excuse, the court may cause him to be apprehended and brought before the court for examination.¹²²

7.5 Public examination of officers¹²³

- 7.5.1 The liquidator is obliged to submit a preliminary report to the court as soon as practicable after receipt of the statement of affairs from one of the persons identified in section 234(2) CA 1965.¹²⁴ In his report, he may opine as to whether any fraud has been committed or any material fact has been concealed by any person in the promotion or formation of the company or by an officer in relation to the company since its formation or that an officer has failed to act honestly and diligently or has been guilty of any impropriety or recklessness in relation to the affairs of the company.¹²⁵
- 7.5.2 Where the liquidator has submitted a report under section 235(2) CA 1965 the court may, after consideration of the report publicly examine:
- (i) any person or officer; or

- (ii) any other person who was previously an officer of the company, including any banker, advocate or auditor; or
 - (iii) any person who is known or suspected to have in his possession any property of the company or is supposed to be indebted to the company; or
 - (iv) any person whom the court deems capable of giving information concerning the promotion, formation, trade dealings, affairs or property of the company.
- 7.5.3 The court may direct that such person shall attend before the court on a day appointed and be publicly examined as to the promotion or formation or the conduct of the business of the company, or in the case of an officer or former officer as to his conduct and dealings as an officer thereof.¹²⁶
- 7.5.4 In the examination, the court may put or allow to be put such questions as the court thinks fit.¹²⁷
- 7.5.5 The person is examined under oath and is obliged to answer all such questions as the court puts or allows to be put.¹²⁸ The notes of the examination:¹²⁹
- (i) shall be reduced into writing;
 - (ii) shall be read over to or by and signed by the person examined;
 - (iii) may thereafter be used in evidence in any legal proceedings against him; and
 - (iv) shall be open to the inspection of any creditor or contributory at all reasonable times.
- 7.6 Obligation to assist with delivery of property to liquidator¹³⁰
- 7.6.1 A liquidator may apply to the court for orders requiring certain persons to hand over any money, property, books and papers to which the company is prima facie entitled. Such persons include any contributory, trustee, receiver, banker, agent or officer of the company. The court may require such persons forthwith or within such time as the court directs to pay, deliver, convey, surrender or transfer such property to the liquidator or provisional liquidator.¹³¹

7.7 Sanction for absconding contributories¹³²

- 7.7.1 The court may cause a contributory, director or former director of the company to be arrested and his books and papers and movable personal property to be seized from him, to be safely kept until such time as the court orders, on proof of probable cause for believing that such person:
- (i) is in hiding or had absconded; or
 - (ii) is about to quit Malaysia or otherwise to abscond or to remove or conceal any of his property for the purpose of evading payment of calls or of avoiding examination respecting the affairs of the company; or
 - (iii) otherwise avoiding, delaying or embarrassing proceedings in other winding up.
- 7.7.2 The court may make such order at any time before or after making a winding up order.

7.8 Human rights

- 7.8.1 The Human Rights Commission of Malaysia Act 1999 (HRCMA 1999) came into force on 20 April 2000 which essentially gave statutory recognition to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights 1948 (1948 Declaration). In furtherance of the protection and promotion of human rights in Malaysia, the functions of the Commission shall be:
- (a) to promote awareness of and provide education in relation to human rights;
 - (b) to advise and assist the Malaysian Government in formulating legislation and administrative directives and procedures and recommend the necessary measures to be taken;
 - (c) to recommend to the Malaysian Government with regard to the subscription or accession of treaties and other international instruments in the field of human rights; and
 - (d) to inquire into complaints regarding infringements of human rights referred to in section 12 HRCMA 1999.
- 7.8.2 Section 4(4) HRCMA 1999 provides that for the purpose of the Act, regard shall be had by the courts¹³³ to the 1948 Declaration to the extent that it is not inconsistent with the Federal Constitution.

¹³² Section 251 CA 1965.

¹³³ Mohamad Ezam Mohd Noor v Ketua Polis Negara & Other Appeals [2002] 4 CLJ 309 (FC) where Siti Norma Yaakob FCJ stated that "the use of the words 'regard shall be had' in s. 4(4) of the Human Rights Commission of Malaysia Act can only mean an invitation to look at the 1948 Declaration if one was disposed to do and to consider the principles stated therein and be persuaded by them if need be."

- 7.8.3 However, the Malaysian Federal Court had opined that the Universal Declaration of Human Rights 1948 is not legally binding on Malaysian courts.¹³⁴

QUESTION 8

8. Appeals and limitation periods

- (a) What limitation period, if any, will apply to actions brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3) in connection with the offences identified in question 2?
- (b) Please indicate whether an appeal is available from the decision of the lower courts.

8.1 Limitation periods

Limitation period for criminal proceedings

- 8.1.1 Section 371(2) CA 1965 provides that:

Notwithstanding anything in the CA 1965 proceedings for any offence against the Act may be brought within the period of seven years after the commission of the alleged offence or, with the consent of the Minister, at any later time.

Limitation period for civil actions

- 8.1.2 In relation to any liabilities created by the provisions of the CA 1965 the limitation period is 6 years from the date on which the cause of action accrued.¹³⁵
- 8.1.3 In relation to breaches of the director's fiduciary duties the limitation period is generally 6 years from the date on which the cause of action accrued.¹³⁶

¹³⁴ Mohamad Ezam Mohd Noor v Ketua Polis Negara & Other Appeals [2002] 4 CLJ 309 (FC). The Federal Court upheld the case of Merdeka University Berhad v. Government of Malaysia [1981] 1 CLJ 175; [1981] CLJ (Rep) 191 where the 1948 Declaration was described as a non legally binding instrument as some of its provisions depart from existing and generally accepted rules; "It is merely a statement of principles devoid of any obligatory character and is not part of our municipal law". "It must be borne in mind that the 1948 Declaration is a resolution of the General Assembly of the United Nations and not a convention subject to the usual ratification and accession requirements for treaties. By its very title it is an instrument which declares or sets out statement of principles of conduct with a view to promoting universal respect for and observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms. Since such principles are only declaratory in nature, they do not, I consider, have the force of law or binding on Member States. If the United Nations wanted those principles to be more than declaratory, they could have embodied them in a convention or a treaty to which Member States can ratify or accede to and those principles will then have the force of law. The fact that regard shall be had to the 1948 Declaration as provided for under s. 4(4) of the Human Rights Commission of Malaysia Act 1999 makes no difference to my finding. This is so as my understanding of the pertinent words in the sub-section that "regard shall be had" can only mean an invitation to look at the 1948 Declaration if one is disposed to do so, consider the principles stated therein and be persuaded by them if need be. Beyond that one is not obliged or compelled to adhere to them. This is further emphasised by the qualifying provisions of the sub-section which states that regard to the 1948 Declaration is subject to the extent that it is not inconsistent with our Federal Constitution."

¹³⁶ Section 22(3) of the Limitation Act, 1953.

- 8.1.4 In relation to breaches of the director's common law duties the limitation period is also 6 years from the date on which the cause of action accrued.¹³⁷

8.2 Appeals

Winding up

- 8.2.1 The High Court¹³⁸ or a judge thereof has jurisdiction over winding up proceedings.¹³⁹
- 8.2.2 Winding up orders can be withdrawn, altered or modified before being perfected.¹⁴⁰ Once perfected, the order cannot be discharged / varied; any application to discharge or vary the order must be by way of appeal. The decision of the High Court is appeal able. There are two levels of appeals, namely to the Court of Appeal, and thereafter to the Federal Court (with leave).
- 8.2.3 The appeal to the Court of Appeal in relation to a petition for winding up is as of right, and no leave of court is required. The Court of Appeal may review the exercise of the High Court's discretion in making the order to wind up the company. However, the Court of Appeal would not interfere with the exercise of the discretion unless:
- (i) it was exercised on a wrong principle;
 - (ii) it was obviously "misused"; or
 - (iii) it has effected a substantial injustice to one or other of the parties.¹⁴¹
- 8.2.4 The final level of appeal is to the Federal Court, and leave must be obtained from the Federal Court before the appeal can be made. Section 96 of the Courts of Judicature Act 1964 provides that:
- Subject to any rules regulating the proceedings of the Federal Court in respect of appeals from the Court of Appeal, an appeal shall lie from the Court of Appeal to the Federal Court with the leave of the Federal Court:
- (a) from any judgment or order of the Court of Appeal in respect of any civil cause or matter decided by the High Court in the exercise of its original jurisdiction involving a question of general principle decided for the first time or a question of importance upon which further argument and a decision of the Federal Court would be to public advantage; or
 - (b) from any decision as to the effect of any provision of the Constitution including the validity of any written law relating to any such provision.

Civil suit

- 8.2.5 Hearings take place at first instance either at a Magistrates Court, Sessions Court or the High Court depending on the nature of the case and the value of the amount in issue. The Magistrates Court¹⁴² has jurisdiction to try all actions and suits of a civil nature where the amount in dispute or the value of the subject matter does not exceed RM25,000.00 whereas the Sessions Court¹⁴³ has jurisdiction where the amount in dispute or the value of the subject matter does not exceed RM250,000.00 save for actions and suits in respect of motor vehicle accidents, landlord and tenant and distress, where the Sessions Court has unlimited jurisdiction. The High Court shall have jurisdiction where the value of the amount in issue exceeds RM250,000.00.
- 8.2.6 In addition, section 69 of the Subordinate Courts Act 1948 sets out the subject matters where an action must commence at the High Court.
- 8.2.7 If the court of first instance is the Magistrates Court/Sessions Court (subordinate courts), the aggrieved party may appeal to the High Court and thereafter the Court of Appeal. There can be no appeal to the High Court from a decision of a subordinate court where the amount in dispute or the value of the subject matter is RM10,000.00 or less except on a question of law.¹⁴⁴ The final level of appeal here is the Court of Appeal. Section 67(1) of the Courts of Judicature Act 1964 states that the Court of Appeal has jurisdiction to hear and determine appeals from any judgment or order of any High Court subject to the Act or any other written law.
- 8.2.8 Where the amount of claim exceeds RM250,000.00, the appeal to the Court of Appeal is as of right. There is a right to appeal without leave of court¹⁴⁵ for, inter alia a certiorari, declaration, injunction, and petition for winding up, bankruptcy proceedings. Leave of court is required where the amount of claim is less than RM250,000.00 or the judgment is on costs only. However, there can be no appeal where by any written law for the time being in force, the judgment or order of the High Court, is expressly declared to be final.¹⁴⁶

Criminal suit

- 8.2.9 Hearings take place at first instance either at a Magistrates Court, Sessions Court or the High Court depending on the nature of the offence. Section 371(3) CA 1965 states that proceedings for any offence against the CA 1965 other than an offence punishable with imprisonment for a term exceeding three years may be prosecuted in a Magistrates Court. In the case of any offence punishable with imprisonment for a term of three years or more it shall be prosecuted in the Sessions Court or in the High Court.

- 8.2.10 The Sessions Court may also impose any punishment authorised by the CA 1965 notwithstanding that it is a greater punishment than the Sessions Court is otherwise empowered to impose.¹⁴⁷
- 8.2.11 If the court of first instance is the Magistrates Court/Sessions Court, the aggrieved party may appeal to the High Court and thereafter the Court of Appeal (with leave). Such appeal shall be confined to only question of law which have arisen in the course of the appeal or revision and the determination of which by the High Court has affected the event of the appeal or revision.¹⁴⁸ However, no leave of the Court of Appeal is required where the appeal is by the Public Prosecutor.¹⁴⁹
- 8.2.12 If the Court of first instance is the High Court, the aggrieved party may appeal to the Court of Appeal and thereafter the Federal Court. An appeal to the Federal Court in this instance is as of right¹⁵⁰ and may lie on a question of fact or a question of law or a question of mixed fact and law.¹⁵¹

9. Foreign corporations

Do the legal provisions and procedures outlined above apply to both domestic and foreign corporations?

9.1 A “foreign company” is defined¹⁵² as:

- (a) a company, corporation, society, association or other body incorporated outside Malaysia; or
- (b) an unincorporated society, association or other body which under the law of its place of origin may sue or be sued, or hold property in the name of the secretary or other officer of the body or association duly appointed for that purpose and which does not have its head office or principal business in Malaysia.

9.2 A foreign corporation may be wound up in Malaysia as an unregistered company¹⁵³ provided that the principal place of business of the company in Malaysia shall for all the purposes of the winding up be the registered office of the company.¹⁵⁴

¹⁵² Section 4 CA 1965.

¹⁵⁴ Section 315(1)(a) CA 1965.

- 9.3 Section 332(1) CA 1965 states the duties of every foreign company desiring to establish a place of business or to carry on business within Malaysia to lodge with the Registrar for registration:
- (a) a certified copy of the certificate of its incorporation or registration in its place of incorporation or origin or a document of similar effect;
 - (b) a certified copy of its charter, statute or memorandum and articles or other instrument constituting or defining its constitution;
 - (c) a list of its directors containing similar particulars with respect to its directors as are by this Act required to be contained in the register of the directors, managers and secretaries of a company incorporated under this Act;
 - (d) where the list includes directors resident in Malaysia who are members of the local board of directors, a memorandum duly executed by or on behalf of the foreign company stating the powers of the local directors;
 - (e) a memorandum of appointment or power of attorney under the seal of the foreign company or executed on its behalf in such manner as to be binding on the company and, in either case, verified in the prescribed manner, stating the name and address of one or more persons resident in Malaysia, not including a foreign company, authorised to accept on its behalf service of process and any notices required to be served on the company;
 - (f) (Deleted by Act A616); and
 - (g) a statutory declaration in the prescribed form made by the agent of the company.
- 9.4 An “agent” of the company, defined as a person named in a memorandum of appointment or power of attorney lodged under the CA 1965 or under any corresponding previous written law:¹⁵⁵
- (i) shall be answerable for the doing of all such acts, matters and things as are required to be done by the company by or under the CA 1965; or
 - (ii) be personally liable to all penalties imposed on the company for any contravention of the CA 1965 unless he satisfies the court hearing the matter that he should be not so liable.¹⁵⁶

9.5 Winding up of foreign companies

- 9.5.1 The provisions with respect to winding up of a domestic company by the court shall apply to a foreign company (see para 9.2) and the court or liquidator may exercise any powers or do any act in the case of a foreign company which might be exercised or done by it or him in winding up companies.¹⁵⁷

¹⁵⁵ Section 330 CA 1965.

¹⁵⁶ Section 333(2) CA 1965.

- 9.5.2 A foreign corporation may be wound up in Malaysia notwithstanding the fact that it is being wound up, or has been dissolved, or has otherwise ceased to exist as a company under or by virtue of the laws of the place under which it was incorporated.¹⁵⁸
- 9.5.3 No unregistered company may be wound up voluntarily.¹⁵⁹
- 9.5.4 An unregistered company may be wound up if:¹⁶⁰
- (a) it is dissolved or has ceased to have a place of business in Malaysia, or has a place of business in Malaysia only for the purpose of winding up its affairs, or has ceased to carry on business in Malaysia;
 - (b) it is unable to pay its debts;
 - (c) the court is of opinion that it is just and equitable that the company should be wound up.
- 9.5.5 An unregistered company shall be deemed to be unable to pay its debts if:¹⁶¹
- (a) a creditor by assignment or otherwise to whom the company is indebted in a sum exceeding RM500.00 then due has served on the company a demand under his hand requiring the company to pay the sum so due and the company has for three weeks after the service of the demand neglected to pay the sum or to secure or compound for it to the satisfaction of the creditor;
 - (b) any action or other proceeding has been instituted against any member for any debt or demand due/claimed to be due from the company or from him in his character of member, and notice in writing of the institution of the action or proceeding has been served on the company and the company has not within ten days after service of the notice paid, secured/compounded for the debt or demand, or procured the action or proceeding to be stayed, or indemnified the defendant to his reasonable satisfaction against the action or proceeding and against all costs, damages and expenses to be incurred by him;
 - (c) execution or other process issued on a judgment, decree or order obtained in any court in favour of a creditor against the company, any member or any person authorised to be sued as a nominal defendant on behalf of the company is returned unsatisfied; or
 - (d) it is otherwise proved to the satisfaction of the court that the company is unable to pay its debts.

9.5.6 Section 316 CA 1965 provides that:

- (1) On an unregistered company being wound up every person shall be a contributory:
 - (a) who is liable to pay or contribute to the payment of:
 - (i) any debt or liability of the company;
 - (ii) any sum for the adjustment of the rights of the members among themselves; or
 - (iii) the costs and expenses of winding up; or
 - (b) where the company has been dissolved in the place in which it is formed or incorporated, who immediately before the dissolution was so liable,
- and every contributory shall be liable to contribute to the assets of the company all sums due from him in respect of any such liability.

QUESTION 10

10. Insurance

Is directors' and officers' insurance available in your jurisdiction? If so, to what extent will the availability of such insurance provide effective protection to directors against personal liability which may arise in connection with the issues raised in questions 1-9 above?

10.1 Directors' and officers' management liability insurance

Directors and officers may take out Directors' and officers' management liability insurance to protect the directors and officers against personal liability which may arise in connection with the issues raised in questions 1-9 above. The company and directors/officers may jointly pay the premiums. This insurance coverage provides independent protection to directors and officers personally and also reimburse companies for costs incurred in defending the directors and officers.

10.2 Indemnity

At common law, a director as agent or trustee of a company is entitled to indemnity for acts carried out on behalf of the company where he is acting within the powers conferred upon him.

- 10.2.1 However, the scope of indemnities a company can make available to a director is restricted by section 140 CA 1965. Any provision (whether contained in the articles or in any contract with a company or otherwise) for exempting any officer or auditor of the company from, or indemnifying him against, any liability which by law would otherwise attach to him in respect of any negligence, default, breach of duty or breach of trust, of which he may be guilty in relation to the company is void.¹⁶²
- 10.2.2 However, notwithstanding the above, a company may pursuant to its articles or otherwise indemnify any officer or auditor against any liability incurred by him in defending any proceedings, whether civil or criminal, in which judgment is given in favour or in which he is acquitted or in connection with any application in relation thereto in which relief is under the CA 1965 granted to him by the court.¹⁶³

- 11. How safe is it for directors and others to incur further credit during the twilight period?
- 11.1 Generally, directors do not owe a fiduciary duty to the company's creditors. However, where a company is insolvent or nearing insolvency, the creditors are to be seen as having a direct interest in the company and that interest cannot be overridden by the shareholders. Nevertheless, this restriction does not, in the absence of any conferral of such a right by statute, confer upon creditors any general law right against former directors of the company to recover losses suffered by those creditors.¹⁶⁴
- 11.2 A claim by a liquidator for damages for breach of duties may arise where the directors incur further credit which cannot be satisfied in full when due, and which leads to an inability to satisfy the claims of other creditors in full.
- 11.3 A reckless incurring of credit by directors during the twilight period, without proper consideration as whether the company can make full repayment, may also lead to disqualification of directors. To prevent personal liability or vulnerability to disqualification proceedings, a director should not incur credit during the twilight period, unless, following proper consideration, he is satisfied that there is a reasonable prospect that the credit can be discharged when due.

NETHERLANDS

QUESTION 1

1. Twilight: when and how long?

What is the length of the period ending with formal insolvency proceedings during which transactions entered into by a company are vulnerable to attack or are liable to give rise to personal liability on the part of directors and/or others involved in the management of the company?

1.1 A few general remarks on insolvency proceedings in the Netherlands

For companies in the Netherlands, there are two types of insolvency proceedings: suspension of payments (surseance van betaling) and bankruptcy (faillissement). Insolvency procedures are governed by the Dutch Civil Code (Burgerlijk Wetboek) ("DCC") and the Dutch Bankruptcy Act (Faillissementswet) ("DBL").

The purpose of suspension of payments is to give a debtor an opportunity to reorganize its business. Only a debtor may apply for suspension of payments, but there is no legal obligation to do so. A company can request suspension of payments if it foresees it will not be able to pay all its creditors having due and payable claims. As long as the request is properly submitted to the competent court, a provisional suspension of payments is immediately granted. On granting a suspension of payments, the court will appoint one or more administrators (bewindvoerder) and a supervisory judge (rechter-commissaris). During the suspension of payments, unsecured creditors may no longer have recourse against the debtor. The debtor may pay its creditors, but only if payments can be made to all creditors, in proportion to their respective claims¹. During the suspension of payments, directors retain their authority to represent the company, but the co-operation of the administrator is required².

The purpose of bankruptcy is to liquidate an insolvent company, although a going-concern sale of the assets is common. Bankruptcy proceedings can be initiated by the debtor, by one or more creditors (including the tax authorities) or by the public prosecutor. The court will declare a company bankrupt if the facts and circumstances show that the company is in a position that it has ceased to pay its debts. The case law has established that "ceased to pay its debts" implies that the debtor has at least one due and payable debt, and two or more creditors. On declaring a company bankrupt, the court will appoint one or more trustees (curator) and a supervisory judge. From midnight (00.00 hours) at the start of the day on which the bankruptcy is declared, the directors lose the authority to dispose of the company's assets.

A distressed company is not legally obliged to apply for suspension of payments or bankruptcy, but a director risks incurring personal liability if he or she allows an insolvent company to remain in business. During suspension of payments and bankruptcy, the task of the supervisory judge is to supervise the insolvency proceedings. During suspension of payments, the supervisory judge merely has an advisory role. During the bankruptcy, a number of actions and juridical acts (rechtshandelingen) conducted by the trustee require the supervisory judge's consent. For example, the permission of the supervisory judge is required for the private sale of assets³, the termination of mutual agreements, rental agreements and employment agreements⁴ and the decision to continue the debtor's business⁵.

1.2 What is the length of the period ending with formal insolvency proceedings?

Unlike in certain other European countries, there is no formal twilight period in the Netherlands, i.e. a period prior to bankruptcy during which the acts of a company may be questioned or undone. Nevertheless, the law does grant the trustee, creditors and the tax authorities tools to hold the directors liable for losses caused by mismanagement and to undo transactions performed during the period prior to the adjudication of bankruptcy.

With regard to director's liability, the period of three years prior to bankruptcy is very important⁶. The period during which transactions are most vulnerable to being challenged by a trustee is the last year preceding the suspension of payments or bankruptcy. During this last year a possible ground for annulment is the so-called "actio pauliana".

1.3 The concept of "actio pauliana"

The Dutch concept of "actio pauliana" resembles the concepts of "fraudulent transfer" and "preferred mandatory transaction" known in other jurisdictions.⁷ The actio pauliana is the means available under Dutch law for declaring transactions that were detrimental to the bankrupt estate null and void.

The actio pauliana may be relied on by creditors outside the bankruptcy and by the trustee during bankruptcy. The scope of the actio pauliana during the bankruptcy itself is much wider as it is not limited to voluntary transactions, but also includes the possibility of invalidating obligatory transactions.

A trustee may invalidate a voluntary transaction if he or she establishes that the following four requirements have been met: (i) there was a juridical act (rechtshandeling); (ii) the transaction was detrimental to the creditors; (iii) the debtor was aware of the fact that the transaction would prejudice the creditors' interest; and (iv) the counterparty of the debtor was aware of the prejudice.

³ Art. 101 DBL and Art. 176 DBL.

⁴ Art. 68(2) DBL and Art. 37, 39, 40 DBL.

⁵ Art. 98 DBL.

⁶ Art. 2:138/248 DCC.

⁷ Peter J.M. Declercq, Netherlands Insolvency Law, the Netherlands Bankruptcy Act and the Most Important Legal Concepts, (2002) T.M.C. Asser Press, The Hague; see for an extensive elaboration of the "actio pauliana" in English, pages 135-150.

A statutory presumption that the debtor knew the transaction was prejudicial to creditors applies where the voluntary transaction was performed within one year before the bankruptcy adjudication and the transaction belongs to one of the following categories: (a) transactions where the value of the payment the debtor received was substantially less than the estimated value of the assets given; (b) the payment of debts, or the granting of security for debts which are not due and payable yet; (c) transactions with relatives or affiliated parties. The presumption of knowledge is rebuttable.

Only in exceptional circumstances may a trustee annul a mandatory transaction. Annulment of the transaction is possible in cases where payment was made, or security was granted to a creditor who knew a petition for bankruptcy was pending, or where the trustee establishes that payment was made or security was granted as a result of consultation between the debtor and creditor. From the case law, it follows that “consultation” is to be interpreted restrictively. Consultation implies conspiracy between the debtor and his counterparty to defraud the other creditors.

For the actio pauliana to become effective, an extra-judicial statement by the trustee suffices.

1.4 Does the feasibility of a claim based on actio pauliana and director's liability depend on whether a formal insolvency procedure is instituted?

The one-year period for annulling transactions on the basis of actio pauliana and the three-year period during which director's acts may lead to a director being liable for the bankruptcy deficit on the basis of articles 2:138/248 DCC is calculated from the moment of the adjudication of bankruptcy.

However, the actio pauliana under which voluntary transactions may be declared null and void also applies outside the bankruptcy. Creditors have the option of annulling any non-obligatory juridical act if a creditor is able to establish that both the debtor-company and its counterparty knew, or should have known, that the specific transaction would be detrimental to one or more creditors⁸. Creditors lose this ground for annulment as soon as a company is declared bankrupt. In the case of bankruptcy only the trustee may annul transactions on the basis of actio pauliana.

Apart from liability for the bankruptcy deficit under articles 2:138/248 DCC, directors can be liable towards the company under article 2:9 DCC. Then liability may also be based on tort⁹ (“wrongful act” or onrechtmatige daad). Liability towards the company and liability in tort are not restricted to insolvency, but have a much wider scope. The different liabilities are explained in paragraph 2 below.

1.5 Is the nature of the transaction relevant with respect to the concept of actio pauliana?

The nature of the transaction is relevant to the risk of nullification of pre-bankruptcy transactions on the basis of actio pauliana. A voluntary transaction is more vulnerable to annulment than a mandatory transaction, as explained above in paragraph 1.3.

⁸ Art. 3:45 DCC.

⁹ Art. 6:162 DCC.

According to Dutch case law and legal doctrine, the following transactions are inter alia included in those considered voluntarily undertaken: granting security for a debt when the loan documentation does not require additional security; selling assets and setting off the purchase price against the debt; payment of a debt in kind instead of in money without a contractual obligation to do so; and payment of a debt which is not yet due and payable.

1.6 With respect to the actio pauliana, is it relevant whether the party to the transaction is connected to or associated with the company?

If a party to the transaction is connected to or associated with the debtor-company it will be easier for the trustee to annul the transaction on the basis of actio pauliana. For annulment it is required that both the debtor-company and its counterparty knew or should have known that the transaction would prejudice the interests of the creditors. To ease the burden of proof on the trustee, Dutch bankruptcy law provides for a statutory presumption of knowledge if the transaction was performed within one year of the declaration of bankruptcy and provided that it can be established that the transaction falls in certain categories, one of which is that the transaction was entered into by the debtor-company with certain relatives or related parties. The statutory presumption of knowledge only applies to non-obligatory transactions.

1.7 Will other circumstances lengthen or shorten the “twilight” period?

Even though there is no formal twilight period in the Netherlands, there are circumstances that influence the time when a debtor should petition for bankruptcy. In the Netherlands, the informal twilight period commences when directors of a company realize that the company's bankruptcy is most probably unavoidable. Directors are extremely vulnerable to being held liable for losses of creditors if they allow the company to enter into obligations knowing that it is very likely that the company will not be able to meet its obligations and that the creditors will not recover the losses they will suffer as a consequence. According to Dutch case law, directors are personally liable for these losses. This is referred to as “Beklamel liability” (see paragraph 2.5 below). On the other hand, Dutch case law stipulates that directors are not only allowed to continue to carry on the business of the company, but actually have an obligation to do, as long as a successful reorganization is still feasible.¹⁰

2. Actions potentially giving rise to liability for directors

- (a) In respect of which acts during the “twilight” period may a director be held personally liable or which may otherwise have adverse consequences for him?

¹⁰ Court of Amsterdam, 22 August 2001, JOR 2001/212.

- (b) In relation to each act identified in (a) above:
- (i) is any resulting liability against a director civil, criminal or both?;
 - (ii) can a director be made personally liable in respect of the whole loss caused to the company or the deficit to creditors?;
 - (iii) will liability attach to individual directors in proportion to their specific involvement?;
 - (iv) is there a specific period before commencement of a subsequent insolvency procedure within which the relevant act must have been undertaken in order for liability to attach to a director?; and
 - (v) what defences, if any, will be available in relation to each offence?

2.1 General remarks regarding Dutch company law

In order to gain a better view of the risks of director liability it is useful to have a basic understanding of Dutch company law. In the Netherlands, there are generally two types of company: the limited liability company ("Naamloze Vennootschap" or "NV") and the private limited liability company ("Besloten Vennootschap" or "BV"). Both types of companies have capital requirements and have capital divided in shares: the main difference between the two is that the articles of association of a private limited liability company must contain a clause restricting the free transferability of the shares.

Under the current Dutch law, small companies may have a management structure only comprising a board of directors. However, most large companies have a two-tier corporate governance structure with a board of directors and a board of supervisory directors. Large companies meeting the following three criteria: (i) having at least one hundred employees, (ii) having a works council, as required by law; and (iii) having an issued capital of at least €16 million are obliged to adopt the two-tier system¹¹. Directors represent the company in its dealings with third parties and have a duty to manage the company. The supervisory directors have a duty to supervise the directors, and their actions are not binding on the company. In March 2008, a bill was introduced proposing a one-tier corporate governance structure for all Dutch companies. If this bill is enacted into law, the articles of association of a company will stipulate that a company has a board of directors consisting of executive directors and non-executive directors¹².

2.2 With respect to which acts may a director be held personally liable?

Dutch law provides for three kinds of director liability. First, there is liability to the company, also known as "internal liability"¹³. Second, there is liability to the bankruptcy estate, or "external liability"¹⁴. Third, there is liability for a wrongful act or tort liability¹⁵.

¹¹ Art. 2:153/263 DCC.

¹² Art. 2:129a/239a DCC.

¹³ Art. 2:9 DCC.

¹⁴ Art. 2:138/248 DCC.

¹⁵ Art. 6:162 DCC.

2.3 Internal liability

Internal liability occurs if a director does not properly perform the assigned duties or violates the articles of association of the company. As a general rule, a managing director is only liable for improper performance of duties in the case of serious negligence, taking into account all relevant circumstances. The criterion developed by the Dutch Supreme Court is “whether no other well-informed and diligent managing director in a similar position and under similar circumstances would have decided, or would have acted, the way the managing director did”¹⁶.

If a matter pertains to the field of activities of two or more directors, each of them is jointly and severally liable for the failure unless one of them proves that the mismanagement is not attributable to the director and that the director was not negligent in taking measures to prevent or limit the consequences thereof.

2.4 External liability

External liability arises if it can be established that the directors have mismanaged the company and that the mismanagement was an important cause of the bankruptcy. If directors have failed either in their obligation to keep financial records in accordance with article 2:10 DCC or if their company has not published its annual accounts in time in accordance with article 2:394 DCC, two statutory presumptions apply. First, there is an irrefutable presumption that the board of directors has performed its duties improperly. Second, there is a rebuttable presumption that the violation of the obligation was an important cause of the bankruptcy.

2.5 Tort

A director is liable in tort if: (i) there was an act or omission that infringed someone's rights, violated a legal obligation or breached a duty of care; (ii) the act or omission can be attributed to the director; (iii) a third party, or third parties, suffered loss or damage; and (iv) it can be established that the act or the omission was the cause of the loss or damage. In particular, a misleading representation in the prospectus and prejudice to creditors can result in tort liability.

Under article 6:194 DCC, a managing director can be liable towards third parties for a misleading representation of the financial position of the company in a prospectus. The relevant rules shift the burden of proof with respect to the misleading presentation to the issuer of the prospectus.

¹⁶ Supreme Court, 10 January 1997, Van de Ven/Automobilbedrijf Venlo B.V., NJ 1997, 360.

As far as prejudice to creditors is concerned, it follows from the case law that a managing director is liable under article 6:162 DCC if the managing director entered into a contract on behalf of the company knowing, or having reason to know, that the company would not, or would not within a reasonable time, be able to fulfil its obligations and would not have assets against which the creditor could take recourse¹⁷. The turning point, or reference date, is the day on which a director knew, or should have known, bankruptcy was unavoidable. To prevent liability in tort, a director should inform the company's creditors about it in a timely manner. The Supreme Court has ruled that a managing director can limit this form of liability by making the creditors aware in a timely manner of the financial situation or by filing a request for suspension of payments in a timely manner¹⁸. The Supreme Court has acknowledged that this places directors in a dilemma. Informing creditors too early of a looming state of insolvency will make bankruptcy inevitable; whereas informing creditors too late may lead to personal liability. For this reason the Supreme Court has ruled that, to be safe, the date of the turning point is to be the date on which the director must have known bankruptcy was unavoidable.¹⁹

2.6 What are the consequences of personal liability?

Under article 2:9 DCC directors are personally and severally liable for the losses suffered by the company.

Directors are personally and severally liable for the bankruptcy deficit in the case of external liability under articles 2:138/248 DCC. The court will reduce the amount if the sentence is considered excessive in relation to the degree of mismanagement of the respective director²⁰.

If the director is liable in tort, the director will be liable for the loss and damage suffered by the creditor, or the creditors, as a consequence of the wrongful act.

2.7 Is liability attached to individual directors in proportion to their specific involvement?

The first two kinds of liabilities, internal and external liability, provide for the collective liability of the board. It is possible for an exception to be made for an individual director if he or she is able to establish that the mismanagement of the board of directors is not to be attributed to his performance²¹. Liability in tort attaches to individual directors.

2.8 Is there a specific period before insolvency within which the relevant act must have been undertaken?

For liability under articles 2:138/248 DCC, a period of three years applies before the formal bankruptcy declaration. Liability under article 2:9 DCC or 6:162 DCC is not limited to a certain period of time but is most likely to arise in the year preceding a bankruptcy order.

²⁰ Art. 2:138/248 para. 2 DCC.

2.9 What defences, if any, will be available in relation to a claim?

The general meeting of shareholders may discharge a director or the board of directors at the end of the book year upon acceptance of the annual accounts. Such a discharge may prevent liability under article 2:9 DCC. However, the discharge does not apply to facts that were not disclosed in the annual accounts. A discharge decision may also be invalidated if it is considered to be in violation of the principle of reasonableness and fairness²². However, the case law indicates that even if a director has deliberately prejudiced the company's interest, the decision to discharge the director is not contrary to the principle of reasonableness and fairness.²³

If a claim is based on articles 2:138/248 DCC, a defence could be that a director or the board of directors may have mismanaged the company, but that the mismanagement has not caused, or at least is not the main cause of, the bankruptcy order. If the directors are able to establish that other circumstances, e.g. the economic situation, has caused the bankruptcy, the directors will not be held liable on the basis of this provision. A decision to discharge the director will not prevent liability under articles 2:138/248.

To prevent action being taken by the tax authorities, a debtor should, as soon as payment difficulties arise, inform the tax authorities of the debtor's inability to fulfil the debtor's tax obligations. For that purpose the Dutch tax department has developed special forms.

2.10 Is there a risk of criminal liability?

In the case of fraudulent transactions, directors are subject to criminal prosecution. Criminal prosecution of companies and directors used to be rare, but in the last few years this process has been initiated quite a few times. Both companies and their directors may be prosecuted under the Dutch Penal Code ("DPC"), for example, for deliberately publishing annual accounts that contain irregular activities²⁴, falsification of correspondence²⁵ or deceiving the accountant²⁶. A well-known example is the prosecution of the directors of Ahold, a criminal case that in the end was settled out of court. From Ahold and other case law, it is apparent that official directors and other managers risk criminal liability if it is found that they were in charge of the illegal transactions performed by the company and the formal director or manager knew, or should have known, that the transactions were illegal. If the director or manager is found guilty, the director faces imprisonment for a certain number of years (a maximum of six years for the publication of incorrect annual accounts and the falsification of correspondence and a maximum of four years for fraud) or a fine "in the fifth category", for which the maximum amount is €74,000 (Article 23 DPC)."

QUESTION 3

3. Other persons involved with the company's affairs who may become liable in respect of their actions during the "twilight" period

- (a) In addition to the formally appointed directors of the company, can others be held liable in respect of the company's activities during the "twilight" period if the company were to become subject to a formal insolvency procedure?
- (b) In respect of which acts may other persons be held liable and to what extent does the liability of third parties differ from that for directors identified in question 2 above?
- (c) Will liability be limited to that resulting from involvement with a particular transaction or more generally in relation to the overall loss suffered by creditors?

Liability to the bankruptcy estate²⁷ is also a possibility for any manager or person who has (even partly) influenced the company's policy.

Like the managing directors of a company, members of the board of supervisory directors can be held liable on the basis of article 2:9 DCC and articles 2:138/248 DCC. Members of the supervisory board are responsible for supervising the directors. They will only be held liable if it is established that they breached their duty to properly perform the tasks assigned to them.

Finally, the shareholders of a company may be liable towards the creditors. In the Netherlands, the main principle is that shareholders of a company are only liable up to the amount of the shares for which they have subscribed²⁸. However, there may be exceptional circumstances in which shareholders may become liable [for more than their shareholding], e.g. if they have had a serious influence on the company's policies and may therefore be deemed de facto managing director²⁹.

²⁷ Art. 2:138/248 DCC.

²⁸ Articles 2:80/191 DCC and articles 2:81/192 DCC.

²⁹ Art. 2:138/248 par. 7 DCC.

The Dutch Supreme Court has ruled that, in the case of a parent company being the shareholder, the shareholder may, in its capacity as parent company, also be held liable in tort for the loss and damage suffered by creditors of the subsidiary. Also vulnerable to liability is a shareholder that had insight into, and control over, the policy of the subsidiary, that was considerable and to such an extent that the shareholder knew, or should have known, that new creditors would be prejudiced by the lack of recourse and yet, despite this knowledge, failed to protect the payment to be made to the subsidiary's creditors. A shareholder may further be liable to creditors if the shareholder has caused creditors to have the expectation (for example, by publishing something in the newspaper) that the shareholder would successfully reorganize the debtor-company as a consequence of which payment to all the creditors would be guaranteed. Other circumstances increasing the risk of the extended liability of a shareholder are: accepting pay-outs of dividends, thus leaving the company with insufficient reserves to continue its business; accepting security over most of the assets of the subsidiary, knowing that such a transaction would leave other creditors unpaid; and allowing the subsidiary to satisfy the claims of its creditors with the exception of one or a few specific creditors. In these cases the shareholder risks incurring liability for the loss and damage suffered.

QUESTION 4

4. Counterparties dealing with the company during the “twilight” period

- (a) From the point of view of a counterparty dealing with the company during the “twilight” period, what are the potential heads of challenge which may lead to transactions with the company being set aside?
- (b) What defences, if any, to the areas of vulnerability identified above will be available to a counterparty seeking to protect a transaction from being attacked?

The most important challenge for parties dealing with a financially unhealthy company is the risk that a transaction may be considered a fraudulent transaction, thus causing the nullification of the transaction by a trustee (actio pauliana). To limit the risk of nullification, voluntary transactions, especially with affiliated parties, should be avoided. When dealing with this type of situation one should always be aware that the best defence against possible actions brought by a future trustee in bankruptcy is the ability to prove that the creditors' interests were not prejudiced by the specific transaction or that the counterparty had no knowledge of the prejudice. Mandatory transactions will hardly ever be nullified.

QUESTION 5

5. Enforcement

By whom may action be brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3 above)?

A trustee in bankruptcy may bring actions against directors (and de facto directors) on the basis of internal liability³⁰, external liability³¹ and tort³².

Even if the bankrupt company does not have the right to bring a tort claim against that third party, there may be room for the trustee to start legal proceedings. In the Netherlands, one of the main duties of a trustee is to serve the interests of the creditors of the bankrupt company. For that reason, a trustee may not, e.g. by bringing an action against a third party, represent the interests of only some of the creditors. A trustee has the right to bring a tort action against a third party for the losses suffered by creditors only if the trustee is able to establish that all creditors have suffered losses as a consequence of the wrongful act. In Dutch legal doctrine, this is referred to as a "Peeters/Gatzen claim".³³ The enforcement of this kind of claim is not the exclusive right of the trustee. Creditors may also bring a tort action against the directors and may do so at the same time as the trustee.³⁴

Shareholders may take action against the directors on the basis of tort. Furthermore, the Dutch Supreme Court has recently ruled that shareholders may also institute an action on the basis of internal liability.³⁵

The tax authorities may start legal proceedings against directors (and de facto directors) if the bankrupt company has violated certain tax regulations.

QUESTION 6

6. Legal remedies

In respect of the offences identified in questions 2, 3 and 4 above, what remedies are available in the domestic court?

³⁰ Art. 2:9 DCC.

³¹ Art. 2:138/248 DCC.

³² Art. 6:162 DCC.

³³ Dutch Supreme Court, 14 January 1983, NJ 1983, 597 and Dutch Supreme Court 16 September 2005, NJ 2006, 311.

³⁴ Dutch Supreme Court 21 December 2001, NJ 2005, 96.

³⁵ Dutch Supreme Court, 20 June 2008, LJN: BC 4959 - Art. 2:9 DCC.

Each creditor, and the bankrupt company, may file a petition with the supervisory judge to object to any act initiated by the trustee³⁶. The supervisory judge makes the decision within three days. Within five days after that, any interested party may subsequently lodge an appeal with the court against the decision of the supervisory judge.

Finally, directors may initiate injunction proceedings, which will result in an interim court decision within a few weeks. This type of proceeding is often used to lift attachments, e.g. attachments on bank balances.

QUESTION 7

7. Duty to co-operate

- (a) To what extent are directors (and others identified in question 3 above) obliged to co-operate with an investigation into the company's affairs following its insolvency?
- (b) Are any human rights laws applicable in the domestic jurisdiction in relation to any such obligations?

The Dutch Bankruptcy Law obliges managing directors and supervisory directors to provide the trustee and the creditor's committee with all information requested with respect to the company's business³⁷. The case law indicates that the duty to provide information includes information not specifically requested if the director knows, or should know, that the information is relevant to the trustee³⁸. Directors may not escape their obligation to provide information by relying on the right to remain silent³⁹. The trustee can enforce co-operation by requesting the supervisory judge to order the director to appear in court to present evidence⁴⁰. If a director remains reluctant to co-operate, the director may even be taken into custody⁴¹. Finally, not providing information may constitute an offence punishable under the Dutch Penal Code art 194 by a fine or imprisonment for a maximum of one year.

QUESTION 8

8. Appeals and limitation periods

- (a) What limitation period, if any, will apply to actions brought against the directors (and/or others identified in question 3) in connection with the offences identified in question 2?
 - (b) Please indicate whether an appeal is available from the decision of the lower courts.
- 8.1 The limitation period for relying on an actio pauliana is three years from the day the trustee in bankruptcy becomes aware of the preferred transaction⁴².
- With respect to the director liability⁴³, the general limitation period applies, which is five years from the day on which the plaintiff discovers the facts or circumstances causing the liability⁴⁴, and no later than twenty years from the day on which the circumstances causing the liability occurred. However, if the liable person is still a director on the day on which the limitation period expires, there will be an extension of the time limit until six months after the director's resignation⁴⁵. The same extension applies if the director deliberately conceals his or her liability to the company⁴⁶.
- 8.2 In all the various liability situations described above, appeal against the decision of a lower court is possible. The decision of the court in first instance may be appealed to the court of appeal within three months of the day of the court's decision⁴⁷. After the decision of the court of appeal is made, one may lodge an appeal to the Supreme Court. However, the Supreme Court will only hear appeals on questions of law. The Supreme Court has no jurisdiction to investigate factual relationships and circumstances. The period for lodging an appeal with the Supreme Court is three months starting on the day of the decision of the court of appeal.

QUESTION 9

9. Foreign corporations

Do the legal provisions and procedures outlined above apply to both domestic and foreign corporations?

⁴² Art. 3:52(1c) DCC.

⁴³ Art. 2:9 DCC.

⁴⁴ Art. 3:310(1) DCC.

⁴⁵ Art. 3:320(1d) DCC.

⁴⁶ Art. 3:320(1f) DCC.

⁴⁷ Art. 339(1) Dutch Code of Civil Procedure.

9.1 Actio Pauliana

On 29 May 2000, the Netherlands adopted the EU Insolvency Regulation (Council Regulation 1346/2000 on Insolvency Proceedings), which entered into force two years later, on 31 May 2002. Since that date the EU Insolvency Regulation has been directly applicable in all EU member states (except Denmark). The EU Insolvency Regulation does not govern the insolvency of companies that do not have their main centre of interest in the EU nor does it regulate the consequences of commencing insolvency proceedings in non-EU member states.

Under the EU Insolvency Regulation, the law applicable to insolvency proceedings and their effect is the law of the member state within the territory in which the proceedings are opened ("lex concursus"), which is the member state in which the company has its centre of main interest.

According to Article 4(2)(m) of the EU Insolvency Regulation, the lex concursus applies to the question whether legal acts detrimental to all creditors are void, voidable or unenforceable. Article 13 of the EU Insolvency Regulation provides for an exception to Article 4(2)(m) of the EU Insolvency Regulation. Under Article 13, the lex concursus does not apply if the transaction is subject to the law of an EU member state (lex causae) other than the EU member state where the insolvency proceedings were opened; and that respective law does not allow the nullification of the fraudulent transfer in the relevant case. Therefore, a transaction can only be nullified if nullification is allowed by the lex concursus and the lex causae.

9.2 Actions based on tort

According to Dutch international private law, Dutch law applies to actions based on tort if the wrongful act took place in the Netherlands⁴⁸, the lex loci delicti, unless both parties agree on the applicability of another law. The place where the losses are suffered as a consequence of the tort is considered the place where the wrongful act took place. On 11 January 2009, the Law on Tort lost most of its relevance as on that date the European Regulation regarding non-contractual relations ("Rome II") entered into force. Rome II applies to tort actions occurring after 11 January 2009 in all European countries (except Denmark). Under Rome II the principle of lex loci damni will apply, which means that the law of the country where the damage occurs will apply, irrespective of the place where the wrongful act took place. However, parties may still agree on the applicability of another law.

9.3 Actions based on articles 2:138 and 2:248 DCC

If a company is declared bankrupt in the Netherlands, the liability of formal and de facto directors for the bankruptcy deficit under articles 2:138 and 2:248 DCC applies to both companies subject to foreign law and companies subject to Dutch law (Conflict of laws act relating to Corporations and the act on formal foreign corporations). The question of what constitutes unmistakably improper management will be governed by the law applicable to the respective corporation (lex societatis)⁴⁹.

⁴⁸ Article 3 of the Law regarding applicability of the Law on Tort.

QUESTION 10

10. Insurance

Is directors' and officers' insurance available in your jurisdiction? If so, to what extent will the availability of such insurance provide effective protection to directors against personal liability which may arise in connection with the issues raised in questions 1-9 above?

In the Netherlands director's liability insurance is available. Liability insurance provides protection against all possible liabilities, including gross negligence, but liability for an intentional and malicious act is always excluded.

QUESTION 11

11. How safe is it for directors and others to incur further credit during the twilight period?

11.1 New credit during the twilight period

The twilight period is probably most difficult for banks. They are between a rock and a hard place. If the credit agreement is terminated too abruptly, a bank may be liable for the losses a company suffers as a consequence. If a bank decides to continue a credit agreement, or to grant new credit, they may be liable to the creditors for having created the expectation that the business would be able to meet its obligations. Furthermore, new credit agreements, and especially new security arrangements, are vulnerable to being nullified on the basis of actio pauliana, as pointed out above. In principle, banks may grant new credit as long as they have justifiable confidence in the company's ability to survive. This means that banks must monitor all financial developments. Further, while dealing with financially unhealthy companies, banks must avoid new transactions that put the bank in a better position (for example, a preferred or secured position) in a bankruptcy.

Managing directors, supervisory directors and shareholders risk liability for the losses suffered by creditors for obligations entered into when they knew, or should have known, that the company would not be able to fulfil the obligations. On the other hand, initiating insolvency proceedings when there is still a window of opportunity may also be wrong and unlawful. As long as there is a well prepared and documented business plan with a reasonable chance of successful reorganization, entering into a new credit agreement should normally not result in personal liability. Hazardous transactions are those transactions that do little more than bring the respective shareholder or director into a better position, for example, by fulfilling obligations guaranteed by a shareholder or director.

QUESTION 1

1. The start and duration of the “twilight” period

What is the length of the period ending with formal insolvency proceedings during which transactions entered into by a company are vulnerable to attack or are liable to give rise to personal liability on the part of directors and/or others involved in the management of the company?

1.1 Overview

Transactions vulnerable to attack

- 1.1.1 The Companies Act 1993 recognises that certain transactions entered into before the commencement of formal insolvency proceedings (liquidation of the company) could have the effect of unfairly advantaging one creditor at the expense of the company and its creditors in general. The Act¹ therefore contains provisions in sections 292 – 299 enabling a liquidator of the company to set aside certain transactions having preferential effect, voidable charges, transactions at an undervalue and transactions which appear to give an advantage to persons who have a special relationship with the company. A full description of these types of transaction can be found in question 4.

The start and duration of the “twilight period” depends on the nature of the transaction and the identity of the parties to it.

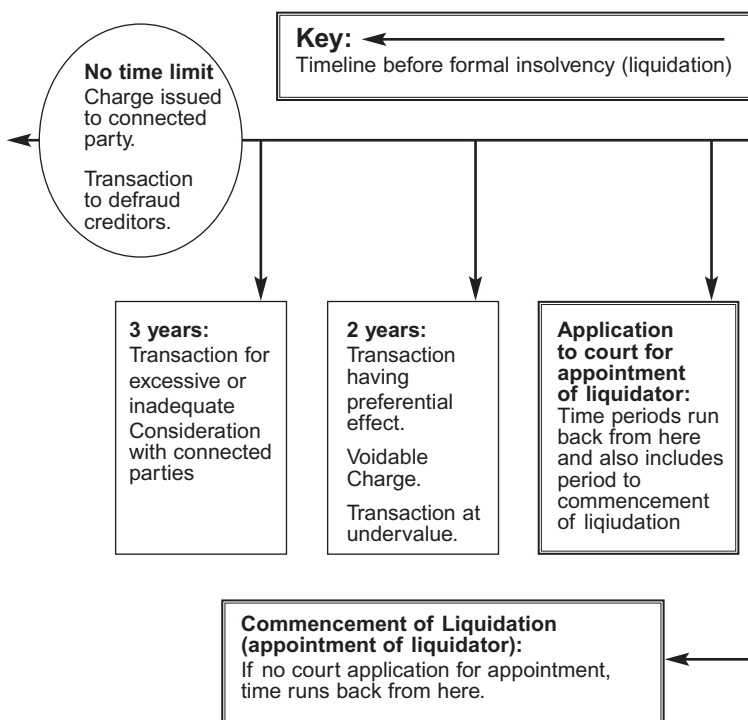

- 1.1.2 The vulnerability periods for transactions entered into by a company before the commencement of formal insolvency proceedings (liquidation) which are vulnerable to attack are:
- (a) insolvent transactions – that is, transactions having preferential effect (s.292) – 2 years
 - (b) voidable charges (s.293) – 2 years
 - (c) transactions at an undervalue (s.297) – 2 years
 - (d) transactions for inadequate or excessive consideration with directors and certain related parties (s.298) – 3 years
 - (e) securities and charges issued by the company in favour of directors and certain related parties (s.299) – no time limit.
- 1.1.3 In each case where the liquidation is initiated by resolution of the shareholders of the company, the period runs back from the date on which a liquidator is appointed to the company. However where either:

¹ References to the Act and all section references in this paper are to the Companies Act 1993, unless otherwise stated.

- (a) the liquidator is appointed by the court; or
- (b) an application is made to the court to put a company into liquidation and after the making of the application a liquidator is appointed by resolution of the shareholders of the company, the period runs back from the date on which the application to the court was made and also includes the period between the date on which the application was made and the date on which the liquidator is appointed.

- 1.1.4 The Property Law Act 2007 also contains provisions which have the effect of avoiding, or requiring compensation to be paid in respect of, any transfer of property of other transactions made with intent to prejudice creditors. The transaction is challengeable at the instance of the person prejudiced or the liquidator of the company. There is no time limit. However the transaction cannot be avoided and no compensation will be payable if the property was transferred to a purchaser in good faith and for value who had no notice of the intention to prejudice creditors.²
- 1.1.5 The following time line shows in graphic form the periods in respect of which certain types of transaction are vulnerable.

² Sections 344-350, Property Law Act 2007.

Personal liability of directors

- 1.1.6 Among the statutory duties of directors under New Zealand law are a duty not to agree or cause or allow the company to trade recklessly (s.135), and a duty not to agree to the company incurring an obligation unless the director believes on reasonable grounds that the company will be able to perform the obligation when it is required to (s.136). These issues are discussed in more detail at question 2.
- 1.1.7 The courts try to identify the time at which a director knew or should have realised that the company was trading while insolvent (i.e. creditors were likely to go unpaid in due course). A director will potentially be personally liable for all losses to creditors arising after that time.

QUESTION 2

2 Actions potentially giving rise to liability for directors

- (a) In respect of which acts during the “twilight” period may a director be held personally liable or which may otherwise have adverse consequences for him?
- (b) In relation to each act identified in (a):-
- (i) is any resulting liability against a director civil, criminal or both?;
 - (ii) can a director be made personally liable in respect of the whole loss caused to the company or the deficit to creditors?;
 - (iii) will liability attach to individual directors in proportion to their specific involvement?;
 - (iv) is there a specified period before commencement of a subsequent insolvency procedure within which the relevant act must have been undertaken in order for liability to attach to a director?; and
 - (v) what defences, if any, will be available in relation to each offence?

2.1 Insolvent trading³

- (a) The elements of insolvent trading are:

³ Section 136.

- (i) it applies to directors, “de facto directors”, “shadow directors” and “deemed directors”⁴ of a company;
 - (ii) a director has a duty not to agree to the company incurring an obligation, unless the director believes at that time on reasonable grounds that the company will be able to perform the obligation when it is required to do so.
 - (iii) the duty has a subjective element relating to the belief of the director, and an objective element, concerning the grounds on which the belief is based.
 - (iv) the section applies only in relation to directors who “agree” to the incurring of an obligation. Therefore directors who are not involved in the process of authorising the company’s obligations might escape liability, at least in relation to this specific duty (as opposed to the statutory duty of care referred to later). However, the courts generally use a very broad interpretation of “agree”. Also, unless the company’s constitution expressly states otherwise, a director who is at a directors’ meeting is taken to have agreed to the company’s assumption of obligations as resolved by the board at that meeting unless he or she expressly dissents from the resolution passed by the majority (Third Schedule of the Act).
 - (v) breach of this duty does not confer any direct cause of action on the creditors of the company; only the company or a shareholder is able to apply for a statutory remedy.⁵ However, if the company is placed in liquidation, a creditor may apply to the court for an Order that a director pay compensation (although generally compensation would be paid to the liquidator for the benefit of all creditors) – section 301.
- (b) (i) Liability is civil.
- (ii) The court has a wide discretion in determining the extent of the personal liability of a director found liable for insolvent trading. However, the essence of the law is to compensate creditors for the loss caused by the director’s conduct. The trend of the cases is that the measure of damages broadly equates with most of the losses (or, sometimes, debt) incurred by the company after a date on which the court considers the company was clearly insolvent and should have stopped trading.
 - (iii) Where more than one director is involved there is an element of proportionality, depending on the degree of involvement and culpability of the particular director and the duration that director was involved.

⁴ See paragraphs 3.2.1 - 3.2.12 below for a full explanation of these terms. For current purposes a “de-facto” director is someone who may not have been formally appointed as a director but who acts in the same way as a director or is held out as such. A “shadow director” is someone in accordance with whose directions or instructions the directors of the company are accustomed to act. It will thus cover the “puppet master” who, for whatever reason, does not wish to appear on the face of the record as a director of the company but who in fact “pulls the strings” and tells the directors what to do. This would also include parent companies who in effect decide what their subsidiaries do.

- (iv) There is no specified period.
- (v) For defences, refer to paragraph 2.3 below.

2.2 Reckless trading⁶

- (a) The elements of reckless trading are:
 - (i) it applies to directors, “de facto directors”, “shadow directors” and “deemed directors”⁷ of a company;
 - (ii) a director has a duty not to agree to, or cause or allow, the business of the company to be carried on in a manner likely to create a substantial risk of serious loss to the company’s creditors;
 - (iii) these concepts are objective and the director’s subjective belief would therefore not excuse breach of the duty.
- (b) (i) Liability is civil.
 - (ii) The court enjoys a wide discretion to compensate for the loss caused to the company by the director’s conduct - in exceptional cases it may also include a punitive element in the award of damages made.
 - (iii) As with insolvent trading, there is usually an element of proportionality, although the court’s discretion is very wide.
 - (iv) There is no specified period.
 - (v) For defences, refer to paragraph 2.3 below.

2.3 Defences to insolvent trading and reckless trading actions

The fact that a director has no knowledge of the company’s affairs will almost certainly not excuse a breach of duty. The days of sleeping directors are long gone – directors must monitor the management of the company⁸.

A non-executive director may not be expected to have the same involvement in the company as an executive director⁹.

Reliance on information provided by others

When exercising powers or performing his or her duties, a director may rely on reports, statements, financial data and other information prepared or supplied by, and on professional or expert advice given by:

⁶ Section 135.

⁷ See paragraphs 3.2.1 - 3.2.12 below for a full explanation of these terms. For current purposes a “de-facto” director is someone who may not have been formerly appointed as a director but who acts in the same way as a director or is held out as such. A “shadow director” is someone in accordance with whose directions or instructions the directors of the company are accustomed to act. It will thus cover the “puppet master” who, for whatever reason, does not wish to appear on the face of the record as a director of the company but who in fact “pulls the strings” and tells the directors what to do. This would also include parent companies who in effect decide what their subsidiaries do.

⁸ Mason v Lewis (2006) 9 NZCLC 264, 024.

⁹ AWA Limited v Daniels (1992) 10 ACLC 993.

- an employee the director believes on reasonable grounds to be reliable and competent in a particular area;
- a professional adviser or expert in relation to the matter believed on reasonable grounds to be within the person's competence; or
- any other director or committee of directors in relation to an area of designated authority (s.138).

In each case there is a requirement of subjective belief coupled with objective grounds for the belief.

Also, reliance is only permitted if the director:

- acts in good faith; and
- makes proper enquiry where the need for enquiry is indicated by the circumstances; and
- has no knowledge that such reliance is unwarranted.

Although the Act does not provide for the consequences of reliance by a director on information or advice provided by others, the implication appears to be that where a breach of duty has arisen as a result of incorrect advice or information given to the director, this reliance may be raised as a defence. Some matters will, however, require the director to exercise his or her own judgment, and in such cases it will not be permissible to pass responsibility on to someone else.

Delegation of powers

A director may have a defence where the board of directors of the company has delegated relevant powers (including powers to enter into contracts and incur obligations) to a committee of directors, a director or an employee of the company. A board is able to delegate most of its powers (s.130).

A board that delegates a power is not responsible for the exercise of the power by the delegate if the board:

- believed on reasonable grounds at all times before the exercise of the power that the delegate would exercise it in conformity with the duties imposed on directors by the Act and the company's constitution; and
- the board has monitored, by means of reasonable methods properly used, the exercise of the power by the delegate.

Where a power of the board has been properly delegated, the delegate will be regarded as a director for the purpose of duties imposed by the Act (s.126).

2.4 Liability to repay distributions made to shareholders¹⁰

- (a) A board of a company may not authorise a distribution to shareholders unless the board is satisfied on reasonable grounds that the company will, immediately after the distribution, satisfy the statutory solvency test.¹¹ Directors who vote in favour of a distribution must sign a certificate stating that, in their opinion, the company will, immediately after the distribution, satisfy the solvency test and the grounds for that opinion.

A distribution made to a shareholder at a time when the company did not, immediately after the distribution, satisfy the solvency test may in certain circumstances be recovered from the shareholder. To the extent that a distribution is not able to be recovered from the shareholder (because the shareholder has no obligation to repay it, because the shareholder has insufficient assets or for any other reason), any director who failed to take reasonable steps to ensure the correct procedures for authorising distributions were followed, or who signed the solvency certificate when there were no reasonable grounds for believing at that time that the company would satisfy the solvency test, will be liable to the company to repay the distribution (s.56).

- (b) (i) The liability is civil and in part criminal (a director commits an offence if he or she voted in favour of a distribution and fails to sign the solvency certificate – s.52(5)).
- (ii) Civil liability is limited to repayment of so much of the distribution as cannot be recovered from shareholders. However, where a company could have satisfied the solvency test by making a distribution of a lesser amount, the court in an action against a director or shareholder has the discretion to permit the shareholder to retain (or relieve the director from liability in respect of) an amount equal to the value of any distribution that could properly have been made.
- (iii) Liability of the relevant directors concerned will be joint.
- (iv) There is no specified period – the critical element is whether immediately after the distribution the solvency test was satisfied.
- (v) A director has a defence if he or she can show that they took reasonable steps to ensure that the statutory procedure which is a prerequisite to authorising a dividend was followed, or that there were reasonable grounds to believe the company would satisfy the solvency test.

¹⁰ Section 56 - A distribution to shareholders is defined in section 2(1) as:

(a) the direct or indirect transfer of money or property (other than the company's own shares) to or for the benefit of the shareholder; or

(b) the incurring of a debt to or for the benefit of the shareholder, in relation to shares held by that shareholder.

¹¹ Section 52 - A company satisfies the solvency test if:

(a) the company is able to pay its debts as they become due in the normal course of business; and
(b) the value of the company's assets is greater than the value of its liabilities including contingent liabilities (section 4).

2.5 Liability if proper accounting records are not kept¹²

- (a) The board of directors of a company has statutory duties to cause adequate accounting records to be kept that correctly record and explain the transactions of the company and that will at any time enable the financial position of the company to be determined with reasonable accuracy. The board also has obligations to ensure that financial statements of the company comply with provisions of the Financial Reporting Act 1993 and to keep sufficient accounting records to enable the financial statements of the company to be readily and properly audited (section 194).
- (b) (i) The liability in relation to the duty is both criminal and civil. If the board fails to comply every director commits an offence.
- (ii) If a company that is in liquidation is insolvent and there has been failure to comply with these duties, and the court considers that the failure to comply:
- contributed to the company's inability to pay all its debts; or
 - has resulted in substantial uncertainty as to the assets and liabilities of the company; or
 - has substantially impeded the orderly liquidation; or
 - for any other reason it is proper to make a declaration,
- the court on the application of a liquidator, may declare that any one or more of the directors or former directors are personally responsible for all or any part of the debts and other liabilities of the company.
- (iii) The liability may be joint or proportional.
- (iv) There is no specified period.
- (v) In relation to the civil liability, the director has a defence if he or she can satisfy the court that he or she:
- took all reasonable steps to secure compliance by the company with the provision; or
 - had reasonable grounds to believe and did believe that a competent and reliable person was charged with the duty, and was in a position to discharge the duty.
- In relation to criminal liability a director charged with an offence concerning a duty imposed on the board of a company has a defence if the director proves that:
- he or she took all reasonable and proper steps to ensure that the board complied with the duty; or ¹² Sections 194 and 300.

- the board took all reasonable and proper steps to ensure that the duty would be complied with; or
- in the circumstances he or she could not reasonably have been expected to take steps to ensure that the board complied with the duty (s.376).

2.6 Wrongdoing¹³

- (a) (i) This liability applies to directors, “de facto directors”, “shadow directors” and certain types of “deemed director”.
- (ii) A past or present director of the company who has misapplied or retained, or become liable or accountable for, any money or other property of the company, or has been guilty of negligence, default or breach of any duty or trust in relation to the company, will incur liability.
- (b) (i) The liability under the section (s.301) is civil.
- (ii) The court has a discretion to order the director to repay, restore or account for the money or the property or any part of it, with interest at such rate as the court sees fit, or to contribute such sum to the company’s assets by way of compensation in respect of the negligence, default or breach of duty, as the court thinks fit.
- (iii) The court has wide discretion with respect to the orders it may make under this provision. It is able to apportion the order made against individual directors in proportion to their involvement and culpability. It may also make some or all of the directors jointly and severally liable for the compensation – in this case directors will enjoy rights of contribution from other directors also found responsible for the same loss.
- (iv) Apart from Limitation Act 1950 considerations, there is no time period within which the impugned act must have occurred in order for liability to attach.
- (v) There are no specific statutory defences to an action against directors under these heads. The court however has considerable discretion as to quantum of any order against the director.

2.7 Liability in relation to other statutory duties under the Act

Liability to the company or to shareholders?

One of the aims of the Companies Act 1993 was to make the nature and scope of directors’ duties more generally accessible. The Act therefore contains in sections 131 – 149 a restatement of many of the duties previously found in the general law. Some of the statutory duties are duties of a fiduciary nature which accompany the office of director.

¹³ Section 301.

Duties owed to the company:¹⁴ include

- to act in good faith in the best interests of the company ¹⁵(s.131).
- to exercise powers for a proper purpose (s.133)
- not to trade recklessly (s.135) - see paragraph 2.2 above
- not to agree to certain obligations (s.136) – see paragraph 2.1 above
- to exercise care (s.137) – see below
- duties relating to disclosure of company information and the use of that information (s.145)

Duties owed to shareholders¹⁶ include:

- to disclose interests and dealings in the company's shares (ss.140 & 148)

Duties owed to both company and shareholders include the duty to comply with the Act and the company's constitution (s.134).

Directors also have many administrative duties under the Act, and additional duties may be imposed by the constitution of the company or by a specific contract with a director.

Liability to creditors?

Directors are not liable to creditors as fiduciaries, or for negligence in the management of the company. Creditors therefore are not entitled to interfere in the company's affairs while it remains solvent.

The Companies Act 1993 imposes on directors no express duty to creditors. The duties not to trade recklessly or while insolvent (ss.135 and 136) are duties owed to the company (in loose terms the shareholders as a whole), not creditors (s.169). However, where the company is insolvent or near insolvency, shareholders are unable to ratify breaches by directors of duties owed to the company such as the duty not to permit insolvent trading and not to trade recklessly¹⁷.

The duty to exercise care (section 137)

The standard of care that applies to a director when carrying out his or her duties is the care, diligence and skill that a reasonable director would exercise in the same circumstances taking into account, but without limitation:

- the nature of the company;
- the nature of the decision; and

¹⁴ Section 169.

¹⁵ In certain circumstances the constitution of a subsidiary may permit, the directors to act in the best interests of the holding company if the other shareholders consent, and if the constitution of a joint venture company permits, directors of joint ventures may act in the best interests of the shareholder that appointed them.

¹⁶ Section 169.

- the position of the director and the nature of the responsibilities undertaken by him or her.

2.8 Carrying on business fraudulently¹⁸

- (a) A director (or any other person) who is knowingly a party to a company carrying on business with intent to defraud creditors of the company or any other person or for a fraudulent purpose, commits an offence.

Also, every director commits an offence who:

- (i) by false pretences or other fraud induces a person to give credit to the company; or
 - (ii) with intent to defraud creditors of the company:
 - gives, transfers or causes a charge to be given on property of the company; or
 - causes property to be given or transferred to any person; or
 - caused or was a party to execution being levied against property of the company; or
 - (iii) with intent to defraud a creditor or creditors of the company, does anything that causes material loss to any creditor.
- (b) (i) Liability is criminal, but may also be civil (see paragraph 2.6).
- (ii) A person guilty of these offences is liable to imprisonment or a fine, and is automatically prohibited from being a director of or managing a company for 5 years without leave of the court (s.382).
- (iii) The gravity of the wrongdoing will be reflected in the length of imprisonment or the amount of the fine. In exercising its punitive jurisdiction under this section, the court is not seeking to compensate the company.
- (iv) There is no specified period.
- (v) Absence of intent to defraud a creditor or the creditors of the company (as applicable) amounts to a defence.

2.9 Avoidance or obstruction¹⁹

- (a) A director of a company (or any other person) commits an offence if he or she:
- (i) Leaves New Zealand with the intention of:
 - avoiding payment of money due to the company; or

¹⁸ Section 380.

¹⁹ Section 273.

- avoiding examination in relation to the affairs of the company; or
 - avoiding compliance with an order of the court, or some other statutory obligation in relation to the liquidation and affairs of the company
- (ii) conceals or removes property of the company with the intention of preventing or delaying the liquidator taking custody or control of it; or
 - (iii) destroys, conceals or removes records or other documents of the company.
- (b) (i) Liability is criminal (there may also be civil liability – refer paragraph 2.6) and the answers to 2.8 (b) (ii) and (iii) will apply – except that there is no automatic prohibition from being a director or manager.
 - (ii) The acts in question must have occurred either after the company has gone into liquidation or after an application has been made to the court for an order that the company be put into liquidation.

2.10 Failure to identify and deliver property to a liquidator²⁰

- (a) A present or former director of a company in liquidation commits an offence if he or she:
 - (i) fails to promptly give the liquidator details of property of the company in his or her possession or under his or her control; or
 - (ii) fails to, at the liquidators request, deliver property to the liquidator or as directed, or dispose of the property as directed.
- (b) (i) Liability is criminal (there may also be civil liability – refer paragraph 2.6) and the answers to 2.8 (b) (ii) and (iii) will apply – except that there is no automatic prohibition from being a director or manager.
- (ii) The specified period is during the liquidation of the company.

2.11 Other actions giving rise to liability for directors

- (a) (i) Directors can be held liable under the Act in a number of other situations. These include:
 - in respect of a document required by or for the purposes of the Act and in certain other circumstances, making false or misleading statements, or omitting from a document something which makes the document false or misleading in a material particular, or authorising this (s.377);
 - fraudulently taking or applying company property for a use or purpose other than the use or purpose of the company, or fraudulently concealing or destroying the property of the company (s.378);

²⁰ Section 274.

- destroying, mutilating, altering or falsifying any document belonging to or relating to the company, or making a false entry in any such document, or being a party to those acts (s.379);

- (b) (i) Liability of a director is criminal.
- (ii) The Act sets out maximum penalties for each type of offence – these are imprisonment or a fine. The director is also automatically prohibited from being a director of or managing a company for 5 years without leave of the court (s.382).
- (iii) There is no specified period before commencement of a subsequent insolvency procedure in which the relevant act (or omission) must have been done in order for liability to attach to a director. Further it is not necessary to show that the company was insolvent at the time.

2.12 Liability of directors under the Fair Trading Act 1986

- (a) Sometimes directors make untrue or misleading representations to creditors about the financial position of the company in an endeavour to induce those creditors to make further supply at a time when the company is insolvent. If those creditors subsequently suffer loss, the directors may be personally liable to creditors under the Fair Trading Act 1986.

The actions of the directors can constitute misleading or deceptive conduct in trade. A number of recent New Zealand court decisions have held that where the directors are the source of the information or misrepresentation and not a mere conduit of information, and were responsible for the manner in which the company's business was conducted with suppliers and other creditors, those directors can be held personally liable for the representations, irrespective of whether the representations were made on behalf of the company rather than in a personal capacity. Where a director is a mere conduit, they may still be personally liable if they intentionally aid or abet, or are directly or indirectly knowingly concerned in the deceptive conduct of the company²¹.

- (b) (i) The liability is civil;
- (ii) The director making the representation will be personally liable for the loss suffered by the particular creditor as a result of the misrepresentation;
- (iii) There is no specified period, but generally the company will need to be in financial difficulties.

2.13 Liability of directors to disqualification for acts done in the 'twilight zone'

- 2.13.1 The Registrar of Companies can prohibit any person who within the previous five years has been a director of, or concerned in or taken part in the management of, a company which becomes insolvent or which enters into a compromise or arrangement with its creditors, from being a director or promoter of a company (or being concerned in, or taking part, whether directly or indirectly in the management of, a company) for a period up to 5 years (s.385).

2.13.2 If a person becomes involved in the management of a company during the prohibition period, that person will automatically be personally liable to a liquidator of the company for every unpaid debt incurred by the company (and to a creditor of the company for a debt to that creditor incurred by the company), while the person was so acting. The person also commits an offence and on conviction is liable to a substantial fine or prison term (ss.385 & 386).

2.13.3 A person who has done any of the following things can be disqualified by the court from being a director or promoter of, or in any way, whether directly or indirectly, being concerned in or taking part in the management of, a company for a period of up to 10 years, without leave of the court:

(a) while a director of a company and whether convicted or not

- persistently failed to comply with the Act, the Securities Markets Act 1988, the Securities Act 1978 (dealing with the issue of securities to the public) or the Takeovers legislation or, where the company has failed to comply, persistently failed to take all reasonable steps to obtain such compliance; or
- been guilty of fraud in relation to the company or of a breach of duty to the company, or a shareholder; or
- acted in a reckless or incompetent manner in the performance of his or her duties; or
- committed an offence under the Act

(b) been convicted of an offence in connection with the promotion, formation or management of a company, or a crime involving dishonesty.

(c) been prohibited in another country from acting as a director, promoter or manager of a company.

Applications to the court for disqualifying a person can be made by the Registrar of Companies, the liquidator of the company or a creditor of the company (s.383).

2.13.4 Directors (and others) convicted of certain offences are automatically disqualified from being directors of companies for a period of 5 years unless they obtain the leave of the court (s.382).

The persons affected are those who:

- have been convicted on indictment of any offence in connection with the promotion, formation, or management of a company; or
- have been convicted of certain offences under the Act (those referred to in paragraphs 2.8 & 2.11 above), or any crime involving dishonesty.

- 2.13.5 Failure to seek leave of the court constitutes an offence and exposes a director to personal liability for unpaid debts incurred by the company while the person acted without leave (s.382 and 384).

QUESTION 3

3 Other persons involved with the company's affairs who may become liable in respect of their actions during the "twilight" period

- (a) In addition to the formally appointed directors of the company, can others be held liable in respect of the company's activities during the "twilight" period if the company were to become subject to a formal insolvency procedure?
- (b) In respect of which acts may other persons be held liable and to what extent does the liability of third parties differ from that for directors identified in question 2?
- (c) Will liability be limited to that resulting from involvement with a particular transaction or more generally in relation to the overall loss suffered by creditors?

3.1 Introduction

- 3.1.1 Subject to the particular act or offence in question, New Zealand law may impose liability on a potentially wide variety of persons who have been involved in the management of a company in some way during the twilight period.
- 3.1.2 Although the management of a company's affairs is primarily undertaken by its directors, New Zealand law has an extended definition of this term²² which is capable of including a variety of persons who, while not formally appointed as directors, may have played a role in the company's management during the twilight period and who may be held liable in respect of certain acts of the company during this time. In particular, New Zealand law will impose liability on "shadow", "de facto" and "deemed" directors in certain circumstances - these concepts are explained in Section 3.2 of this paper.
- 3.1.3 Also, other persons, even if not involved either directly or indirectly with the management of the company, may be liable to return assets to the company as a result of being a party to a transaction at undervalue, a preference or a transaction defrauding creditors. In addition, under general equitable principles of New Zealand law, a third party who had knowledge of a breach of duty of a director when entering into a transaction and either knowingly assisted in that breach and/or received property from the company with knowledge of that breach may be held liable as a "constructive" trustee of such property and liable to return it or to pay compensation to the company.

3.2 De facto directors, shadow directors and deemed directors

- 3.2.1 The Companies Act 1993 contains a wide but not exhaustive definition of “director”. Some categories of the definition apply only for the purposes of certain sections of the Act. Any person who is responsible for management decisions of the company could well fall within one or more legs of the definition. Receivers of companies (appointed by secured creditors or by the court) are excluded from the definition. A brief description of the categories of “director” follows.

De facto directors

- 3.2.2 A “de facto” director is one who acts as a director and is treated as such by the rest of the board, even though he or she may never have been formally appointed a director or there is a defect in the technicalities of his or her appointment (for example he or she was appointed at a board meeting at which a quorum was not present).
- 3.2.3 “Director” is defined in section 126(a) of the Act to include any person occupying the position of director, by whatever name called. Thus, if someone were to be called an “observer” on the board but in fact took director-type decisions, the court may be prepared to conclude that that person is a de facto director.
- 3.2.4 De facto directors owe the same duties to the company as directors who have been formally appointed.

Shadow directors

- 3.2.5 The term “shadow director” is generally used to describe a person in accordance with whose directions or instructions a director, or the board of directors, of a company may be required or are accustomed to act, and a person who exercises or who is entitled to exercise or who controls or is entitled to control the exercise of powers which, apart from the constitution of the company, would fall to be exercised by the board (s.126(1)(b)).
- 3.2.6 There are a number of elements to note in the definition:

Person	can mean an individual or a corporation
Directions or instructions	these are clearly more than mere suggestions but may include non-professional advice in certain circumstances
Accustomed to act	there must be a pattern to the directions or instructions and occasional directions will not make someone a shadow director. However, again, the point at which conduct becomes habitual will depend upon the facts of a particular case

In practice, what conduct makes someone a shadow director?

- 3.2.7 In each case regard must be had to the frequency of the advice or instructions (whether over the running of the business as a whole or merely on specific areas) and whether such advice was usually acted upon (whether or not the directors have expressly or impliedly surrendered their discretion), so that it may be said that the third party in question exerted a real influence over the affairs of the company.

Deemed directors

- 3.2.8 A person to whom a power or duty of directors has been directly delegated by the board with that person's consent or acquiescence, or who exercises the power or duty with the consent or acquiescence of the board, is treated as being a director for many purposes of the Act (s.126(1)(c)).
- 3.2.9 Any person in accordance with whose directions or instructions a shadow director, de facto director or the person referred to in the preceding paragraph may be required or is accustomed to act in respect of his or her duties and powers as a director, is also treated as a director. However this is only for the purposes of directors' duties relating to the use of company information and disclosure of and restrictions on share dealings by directors.

Shareholders as deemed directors

- 3.2.10 If the constitution of a company confers a power on the shareholders which would otherwise fall to be exercised by the board of directors, any shareholder who exercises that power or who takes part in deciding whether to exercise it is treated, in relation to the exercise of the power, as being a director for certain purposes. This also applies where shareholders are involved in decisions in situations where the constitution of a company requires a director or the board of the company to exercise or refrain from exercising a power in accordance with a decision or direction of shareholders (s.126(2) & (3)).

Professional advisers

- 3.2.11 Where a person advising a company acts purely in a professional capacity, that person is not included in the definition of director (unless occupying the position of director, by whatever name called, or unless the person is a shareholder exercising a power normally exercised by the board) (s.126(4)).

Disqualified persons

- 3.2.12 A person acting as a director or taking part in the management of a company while disqualified from doing so may become personally liable for the company's debts (ss. 384 & 386).

3.3 Actions for which liability may attach to de facto, shadow or deemed directors and other persons not formally appointed as directors

Offence/activity	Persons liable	Extent of liability
Insolvent and Reckless Trading and other statutory duties (ss.131 – 141)	Past director and past and present de facto, shadow and certain deemed directors, during the relevant period.	Same as for director
Fraudulent trading (s.380 and s.373(4)(f))	Any person who was knowingly a party to the carrying on of the business with intent to defraud creditors or others or for a fraudulent purpose (this will include persons dealing with the company who receive property with knowledge of the fraud)	Same as for director
Failure to keep proper accounting records (ss 194 and 300)	Past directors for the relevant period and past and present de facto directors	Same as for director
Leaving New Zealand or concealing destroying or removing property (ss.273 and s.373(3)(a))	Any person	Same as for director
Failure to identify or deliver company property (ss.274 & 373(3)(a))	Past director and past or present employee	Same as for director
Wrongdoing – negligence or default or breach of duty (s.301)	Any past director; past or present de facto, shadow and certain deemed directors; administrator; liquidator; manager; receiver; any person involved in the formation or promotion of the company	Same as for director
Acting as a director or taking part in management of the company when disqualified (s.384 and s.386)	Any person	All debts incurred by the company during that period.

3.4 Other third parties who may be held liable to the company or its liquidator

- 3.4.1 Liquidators, administrators and receivers may be found liable for negligence, default or breach of duty owed to the company (s.301).

- 3.4.2 Third parties who receive property as a result of a transaction at undervalue, a transaction having preferential effect or (if that party has the requisite knowledge or is a volunteer) as a result of a transaction defrauding creditors, will be liable to either return such property or provide such compensation as the court may order.
- 3.4.3 It is also possible for any third party who has knowingly assisted in a breach of duty by a director or other officer of a company or knowingly received property arising from such breach to be liable in respect of any loss arising. The legal rules relating to knowing assistance and/or receipt of property are applicable in any circumstance and not only in respect of actions taken during the twilight period. The power of the court to apply these rules arises under its general equitable jurisdiction.

Offence/activity	Persons liable	Extent of liability
Transactions at an undervalue (s.297)	Recipient of property.	Pay compensation to the company
Transactions having preferential effect (ss. 292 & 293)	Recipient of preference or charge	Return of property received or removal of specific benefit received or payment of an amount fairly representing benefit received
Transactions for inadequate or excessive consideration with connected parties. (s.298)	Other party to transaction	Pay compensation to the company
Voidable charges (s.293) and charges issued to connected parties (s.299)	Recipient of charge	Setting aside of charge
Transactions prejudicing creditors (Property Law Act 2007)	Recipient of property (if knowledge of fraud or volunteer)	Return of property received (or compensation)
Knowingly assisting or receiving property or assets in breach of duty	Any person with the requisite degree of "knowledge" who knowingly assists in a breach of duty owed by a person to a company or knowingly receives property from a breach of duty owed to the company	Where requisite knowledge and other applicable conditions are satisfied a person may be held to be a constructive trustee of the property and required to return such property or pay compensation equal to the loss caused. A director's liability arises directly as a result of the breach of duty. Knowledge or dishonesty not required

4 Counterparties dealing with the company during the twilight period

- (a) From the point of view of a counterparty dealing with the company during the twilight period, what are the potential heads of challenge which may lead to transactions with the company being set aside?
- (b) What defences, if any, to the areas of vulnerability identified above will be available to a counter party seeking to protect a transaction from being attacked?

4.1 Summary of heads of challenge

4.1.1 Brief details of those types of transaction entered into by a company before the commencement of formal insolvency proceedings which are vulnerable to attack are transactions:

- (a) which are at an undervalue;
- (b) which are insolvent transactions (that is, transactions which have preferential effect);
- (c) which constitute voidable charges;
- (d) for inadequate or excessive consideration with directors or other related parties;
- (e) which are securities or charges issued by the company in favour of directors or other related parties;
- (f) in breach of the directors' fiduciary duties;
- (g) defrauding the company;
- (h) which constitute onerous property.

We look briefly at each head of challenge in turn. We also consider the status of unregistered security interests.

4.2 Transactions at an undervalue (section 297)

4.2.1 A transaction is at undervalue if the value received by the company was less than the value provided by the company and, when the transaction was entered into, the company:

- (a) was unable to pay its due debts; or
- (c) became unable to pay its due debts as a result of the transaction.

- 4.2.2 If the company is put into liquidation, a liquidator can recover from the counterparty to the transaction the amount by which the value of the consideration or benefit provided by the company exceeded the value of the consideration or benefit received by the company. The liquidator can only do this in respect of transactions the company entered into within 2 years before liquidation (refer paragraphs 1.1.2 and 1.1.3 for a full explanation of this vulnerability period).
- 4.2.3 “Transaction” is defined in the section dealing with insolvent transactions (refer paragraph 4.3.4).
- 4.2.4 However, the term “transaction” does not include bilateral netting (set-off) agreements, or certain multilateral netting agreements which are subject to the rules of a recognised clearing house, entered into by the company – except to the extent that the effect of entering into the netting agreement is to reduce any amount that was owing by or to the company at the time the company entered into the agreement (s.310G).
- 4.2.5 A guarantee by a company to a bank of the liabilities of a parent or sister company might be a classic example of an undervalue transaction - if, say, the objective is simply to use the company to benefit its financially troubled parent or sister company. In relation to guarantees, there is no authority on the test to apply to ascertain the value provided by the guarantor and provided by the bank.

4.3 Insolvent transactions - transactions having preferential effect (section 292)

- 4.3.1 An insolvent transaction is a transaction entered into by the company at a time when it was unable to pay its due debts, and which enables another person to receive more towards satisfaction of a debt than the person would receive or would be likely to receive in the liquidation.
- 4.3.2 If the company is put into liquidation, a liquidator can recover from the counterparty to the transaction an amount which fairly represents the benefits received by the party (for example, if the transaction was the payment of a debt, an amount equivalent to the payment), or in some cases property which was transferred to that party as part of the transaction. The liquidator can only do this in respect of transactions the company entered into within two years before liquidation (refer paragraphs 1.1.2 and 1.1.3 for a full explanation of this vulnerability period).
- 4.3.3 If the transaction was entered into within six months before liquidation, there is a statutory presumption that the transaction was made at a time when the company was unable to pay its due debts. The onus of rebutting this presumption is on the counterparty to the transaction.
- 4.3.4 “Transaction” is widely defined. It includes the incurring of any obligation by the company, the giving of a security or charge over the property of the company, and the payment of money by the company under a judgment or order of the court. The transaction must be a transaction of the company. The courts have held that the transaction must be with a creditor of the company.

- 4.3.5 However, the term “transaction” does not include bilateral netting (set-off) agreements, or certain multilateral netting agreements which are subject to the rules of a recognised clearing house, entered into by the company – except to the extent that the effect of entering into the netting agreement is to reduce any amount that was owing by or to the company at the time the company entered into the agreement (s.310G).
- 4.3.6 Until legislative changes in November 2007, a transaction could not be an insolvent transaction if it had occurred in the ordinary course of business. The meaning of “ordinary course of business” has been the subject of a considerable amount of judicial interpretation. This “defence” has now been removed. However, the defences provision (see Section 4.7 of this paper) has been amended to give protection to parties who are unaware that the company is or was about to become insolvent at the time of the transaction.
- 4.3.7 Where a transaction is, for commercial purposes, an integral part of a continuing business relationship (for example, a running account) between a company and a creditor and in the course of that relationship the level of the company’s net indebtedness to the creditor is increased and reduced from time to time as a result of a series of transactions forming part of that relationship, for the purpose of establishing whether a transaction is an insolvent transaction, all the transactions forming part of the continuing business relationship are to be regarded as a single transaction (s.292(4B)). This provision, which came into force in November 2007, has yet to be judicially considered in New Zealand. However it is in all material respects identical to the equivalent provision in the Australian liquidation regime. The Australian courts have held that under that regime the liquidator is able to “cherry pick” the beginning of the period constituting the continuing business relationship (so long as it is within the 2 year period) – this will generally be the date of peak indebtedness - and establish whether the net effect of the series of transactions from that date until the continuing business relationship ends constitutes an insolvent transaction.
- 4.3.8 Generally speaking, where a liquidator has recovered any amount from a counterparty in relation to a transaction having preferential effect, the counterparty is able to prove as a creditor in the liquidation for an amount equivalent to the sum or value of the property the liquidator recovered.

4.4 Voidable charges (section 293)

- 4.4.1 Any charge given by the company is voidable against the liquidator of the company if given within 2 years before liquidation (see paragraphs 1.1.2 & 1.1.3) unless:
- (a) (and only to the extent that) the charge secures money actually advanced or paid, or the actual price or value of property sold or supplied to the company, or any other valuable consideration given in good faith by the recipient of the charge at the time of, or at any time after, the giving of the charge²³; or
 - (b) immediately after the charge was given the company was able to pay its due debts; or

²³ A charge given to secure the unpaid purchase price of property, whether or not the charge is given over that property, will be valid so long as it is executed not later than 30 days after the sale of the property.

- (c) the charge is in substitution for a charge given before the 2 year period (but only to the extent that the amount secured does not exceed the amount secured by the previous charge and the value of the property charged does not exceed the value of the property subject to the previous charge)
- 4.4.2 If the charge was given within six months before liquidation, there is a statutory presumption that immediately after the charge was given the company was unable to pay its due debts.
- 4.4.3 Section 293, which is in addition to the provisions dealing with transactions having preferential effect, is specifically aimed at preventing creditors from obtaining security for past debts. It is not designed to impugn security given for new credit. To further give effect to this objective, section 293 includes a provision that all payments received by the grantee of a charge after it was given will be treated as being appropriated as far as may be necessary towards repayment of money actually advanced or paid (or payment of the actual price or value of property sold) by the grantee to the company on or after the giving of the charge.
- 4.4.4 Case law has made it clear that simply forbearing to sue for past debts will not be valuable consideration given in good faith by the chargeholder for purposes of this section, unless the forbearance can be shown to have some reasonable value or worth to the debtor²⁴.
- 4.5 Transactions for inadequate or excessive consideration with directors or related parties (section 298)
 - 4.5.1 Where a company which subsequently goes into liquidation has acquired any business, property or services from a director or other specified related parties, the liquidator can recover from those parties the amount by which the value of the consideration given by the company exceeded the value of the business, property or services received. Also, where the company has disposed of a business or property or provided services or issued shares to directors or specified related parties, the liquidator can recover from those parties any amount by which the value of the items provided exceeded the consideration received by the company.
 - 4.5.2 The liquidator can only do this in respect of transactions the company entered into within a period of three years before liquidation (refer paragraphs 1.1.2 and 1.1.3 for a full explanation of this vulnerability period).
 - 4.5.3 There is no need to establish whether the company was insolvent before or as a result of the transaction.
 - 4.5.4 The categories of related parties from whom recovery is possible are extensive. They include a nominee or relative or a trustee for a director, a person or relative of a person who at the time had control of the company, related companies and companies controlled by a director of the company or by a nominee, relative or trustee of a director.

4.6 Securities and charges issued by the company in favour of directors or related parties (section 299)

- 4.6.1 Where a company goes into liquidation, a liquidator can apply to the court to have a security or charge created by the company in favour of a director or other specified related parties set aside. The categories of related parties under this section are the same as under section 298 (see paragraph 4.5.4).
- 4.6.2 The court can order a security or charge to be set aside if it considers it just and equitable to do so, having regard to the circumstances in which the security or charge was created, the conduct of the other party in relation to the affairs of the company, and any other relevant circumstances.
- 4.6.3 There is no need to establish whether the company was insolvent before the security or charge was issued. There is no specified time period.
- 4.6.4 If the security or charge is set aside, the related party will remain a creditor of the company for the amount owing under the security or charge.
- 4.6.5 This provision gives the liquidator, through the court, the ability to have securities in favour of related parties set aside which cannot be set aside under section 292 (insolvent transactions— see Section 4.3 of this paper) or section 293 (voidable charges – see Section 4.4 of this paper). Although there have been no reported New Zealand decisions on this section, it is thought that a court would be slow to set aside a security if it had been issued in respect of a bona fide commercial transaction with no intention of defeating creditors.

4.7 Defences available to a counter-party (ss.296(3) and 239ACB)

- 4.7.1 Under section 296(3), even though a transaction may be a transaction at an undervalue, an insolvent transaction or a type of transaction referred to in Sections 4.4 – 4.6 of this paper, the courts must deny recovery by the liquidator of property or its equivalent value from the counterparty if the person from whom recovery is sought proves that when they received the property:
 - (a) they acted in good faith; and
 - (b) a reasonable person in their position would not have suspected, and they did not have reasonable grounds for suspecting, that the company was, or would become, insolvent; and
 - (c) they gave value for the property or altered their position in the reasonably held belief that the transfer of the property to them was valid and would not be set aside.
- 4.7.2 The test of good faith appears to be one of simple honesty²⁵. An awareness of financial difficulty of the company is not in itself sufficient to give rise to a conclusion that any actions were not taken in good faith²⁶.

²⁵ Re Excel Freight Limited (In Liquidation) (1999) 8 NZCLC 261,827.

²⁶ Re Island Bay Masonry Limited (In Liquidation) (1998) 8 NZCLC 261,751.

- 4.7.3 To alter position, a counterparty must have deliberately taken or omitted some action in reliance on the apparent validity of the transaction. Examples of alteration of position would be to continue to supply goods or services and provide further credit.
- 4.7.4 The second limb of the defence under section 296(3) applies from November 2007 and in part has been included in the legislation as a result of the changes to the insolvent transaction provisions which came into effect at the same time (see paragraph 4.3.6). The provisions are now very similar to the equivalent Australian provisions, which should provide useful guidance to New Zealand practitioners and courts. However the Australian courts have grappled with the objective/subjective formulation of their equivalent to the second limb of the New Zealand provision.
- 4.7.5 Section 239ACB states that the insolvent transaction and voidable charge provisions do not apply to a transaction by a company in administration if the transaction is:
- (a) carried out by or with the authority of the administration or deed administrator; or
 - (b) specifically authorised by the deed of company arrangement and carried out by the deed administrator.²⁷

4.8 Breach by directors of general/common law duties

- 4.8.1 If the directors cause the company to contract with another party on terms disadvantageous to the company, they may be in breach of their general common law duty to put the company's interests first. Where the counterparty has knowledge of this, there may be circumstances where there are proprietary or restitutionary rights to recover the property. These are rights under the general law and whilst not dependent upon insolvency as such, they are more likely to be examined and/or exercised after a formal insolvency event.²⁸

4.9 Transactions with the intent to prejudice creditors²⁹

- 4.9.1 Where a company disposes of property with intent to prejudice creditors or by way of gift or at an undervalue, that transfer is challengeable at the instance of the persons prejudiced or the liquidator of the company.
- 4.9.2 The transaction can only be challenged if the company:
- (a) was insolvent at the time, or became insolvent as a result, of making the disposition; or
 - (b) was engaged, or was about to engage, in a business or transaction for which the remaining assets of the company were, given the nature of that business or transaction, unreasonably small; or ²⁷ See the Appendix for an explanation of the formal administration process.

²⁸ See generally discussion of directors duties in answer to question 2.

²⁹ Sections 344 to 350 Property Law Act 2007.

- (c) intended to incur, or believed, or reasonably should have believed, that the company would incur, debts beyond the company's ability to pay (section 346 Property Law Act 2007).

4.9.3 There is no statutory time limit.

4.9.4 If a court finds that the applicant has been prejudiced by the disposition of property, it can either vest the property in the company or require the recipient to pay reasonable compensation to the company (sections 348 and 350 Property Law Act 2007).

4.9.5 If the property is transferred to a person who acquires it for value in good faith without knowledge of the fact the disposition was caught by section 346, the property cannot be recovered, and the person cannot be required to pay compensation.

4.9.6 The court may decline to make a vesting or compensation order (or may make one with limited effect) against a person who received the property if that person proves that they received the property in good faith without knowledge of the fact the disposition was caught by section 346 and the person's circumstances have so changed since receipt of the property that it is unjust to order that the property be restored or reasonable compensation be paid – in either case in part or in full.

4.10 Disclaimer of onerous property (section 269)

4.10.1 When a company is in liquidation, the liquidator may disclaim any onerous property even though he or she has taken possession of it, tried to sell it, or otherwise exercised rights of ownership in respect of it. The liquidator must give prompt notice of disclaimer to every person whose rights are, to the knowledge of the liquidator, affected by the disclaimer.

4.10.2 Onerous property means (a) any unprofitable contract; or (b) other property of the company which is unsaleable or not readily saleable or is such that it may give rise to a liability to pay money or perform an onerous act; or (c) a litigation right that, in the opinion of the liquidator, has no reasonable prospect of success or cannot reasonably be funded from the assets of the company. It does not include certain netting agreements³⁰ or any contract of the company that constitutes a transaction under a netting agreement. An example of onerous property would be a lease under which the company was the tenant and where the rent was greater than a market rent.

4.10.3 Where the counterparty has a proprietary as opposed to a personal interest in the property, there can be no disclaimer: for example, where the company is selling land, contracts have been exchanged and the buyer tenders the purchase price, the buyer is likely to be able to obtain specific performance of such a contract.

³⁰ See paragraph 4.2.4 for an explanation of this expression.

- 4.10.4 The disclaimer does not affect rights and liabilities already accrued. It determines, as from its date, the future rights interests and liabilities of the company in or in respect of the property disclaimed. The disclaimer does not (except so far as necessary for the purpose of releasing the company from any liability) affect the rights or liabilities of any other person. Any person sustaining loss or damage as a consequence of the disclaimer is deemed to be a creditor of the company to the extent of such loss or damage and may prove as such.

A person whose rights would be affected by the disclaimer of onerous property may require a liquidator to elect whether to disclaim that property – if the liquidator does not do so within a stated period after receiving notice of the requirement, the liquidator will be unable to disclaim that property in the future.

4.11 Failure to register a security interest

- 4.11.1 The Personal Property Securities Act 1999 governs security interests in virtually all types of property other than ships longer than 24 metres and land. “Security interest”, is widely defined as an interest in personal property created or provided for by a transaction that in substance secures payment or performance of an obligation, without regard to either the form of the transaction or the identity of the person who has a title to the personal property. The definition therefore covers finance leases, retention of title rights and goods supplied on consignment.
- 4.11.2 The Act provides for the establishment of a Register of security interests in personal property and contains rules for the determination of priority between security interests in the same personal property. It also contains rules for the determination of priority between security interests and other types of interests in the same personal property, and a regime for the enforcement of security interests.
- 4.11.3 Generally speaking, if a security interest is not registered, the only consequence is that it will rank in priority after those security interests which have been registered and, in some circumstances, after certain creditors such as employees who are given a statutory preference. An unregistered security interest remains enforceable against a liquidator if the company goes into liquidation - the unregistered security interest will rank ahead of unsecured creditors.

QUESTION 5

5 Enforcement

By whom may action be brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3)?

5.1 Introduction

5.1.1 While not exclusively relevant to the “twilight” period, until liquidation the company is the appropriate claimant for any breach of the statutory duties of directors described in answer to question 3. The company is also the appropriate applicant for relief where the claim is in respect of a breach of the general law duty of directors of companies which are insolvent, near insolvent or of doubtful solvency to exercise their powers having regard to the interests of that company's creditors (see Section 2.7 of this paper).

5.1.2 If a company goes into liquidation, the authority and powers of the directors are at that time superseded by those of the liquidator. The liquidator is required to review the action taken by the directors and others during the twilight period and where relevant bring proceedings to obtain compensation for the benefit of creditors in respect of any loss caused to the company. Consequently, the general rule is that after liquidation only the liquidator is empowered to bring civil actions against directors and others where there has been a breach of either legal or fiduciary duties owed to the company. There are a few exceptions to this rule in respect of certain transactions for which action may be brought by creditors or others directly. These are detailed in the table in paragraph 5.3.2. A creditor may also have personal remedies against a director of an insolvent company – for example, in some circumstances the courts have held directors liable under the Fair trading Act 1986 for misrepresenting to a trade creditor the company's financial position as a result of which the creditor has continued to supply goods on credit.

5.1.3 The primary exception to this general rule is in respect of criminal proceedings brought against directors or others under the Companies legislation. These actions must be brought by the Registrar of Companies.

5.2 Criminal proceedings

5.2.1 A liquidator of a company who considers that an offence that is material to the liquidation has been committed by the company or any director of the company under the Crimes Act 1961, the Companies Act 1993 and other company-related legislation must report this to the Registrar of Companies. The following acts are the main offences under the Companies legislation relating to insolvency in respect of which the Registrar of Companies may bring an action against the directors and others involved. Those who may be liable in respect of the following offences in addition to the directors are listed in question 3.

Offences

- (a) Liability if proper accounting records not kept – section 194
- (b) Carrying on business fraudulently – section 380
- (c) Leaving New Zealand, concealing or removing company property or destroying, concealing or removing company records – section 273
- (d) Failure to identify and deliver property to a liquidator – section 274
- (e) Making false or misleading statements or omissions – section 377
- (f) Fraudulently taking or applying company property for a non authorised use (or fraudulently concealing or destroying property) – section 378
- (g) Destroying, mutilating, altering or falsifying any company document by making false entries – section 379
- (h) Disqualification as a director – sections 382 – 386

5.3 Civil proceedings

- 5.3.1 In relation to civil proceedings, after liquidation the ability to bring actions against directors and others lies primarily with the liquidator. However, in respect of certain actions which have caused loss to the company and its creditors, the law allows a wider range of persons to bring action to recover funds for the benefit of the company's creditors. Where an action for a contribution to the company's assets is successful, even if the person bringing the action is not the liquidator, generally any recoveries made will be for the benefit of all creditors of the company and will be distributed amongst the creditors in accordance with the normal rules relating to priority.
- 5.3.2 The table below, sets out those people who may bring an action against the directors and others after liquidation in connection with certain transactions which the company has entered into.

Activity/transaction	Person able to bring proceedings after liquidation
Wrongdoing (s.301)	Liquidator, a creditor or a shareholder
Insolvent trading (ss.136 & 301)	Liquidator, a creditor or a shareholder
Reckless trading (ss.135 & 301)	Liquidator, a creditor or a shareholder
Failure to keep proper accounting records (s.300)	Liquidator only
Liability to repay distributions made to shareholders (ss. 56 & 301)	Liquidator, a creditor or a shareholder
Breach of Fair Trading Act 1986	The affected creditors

QUESTION 6

6. Remedies: orders available to the domestic court

In respect of the offences identified in questions 2, 3 and 4, what remedies are available in the domestic court?

Offence	Remedy Available
Insolvent and reckless trading (ss.135-136)	The court may order a director to make such contribution to the company's assets by way of compensation as the court thinks fit. The trend of the cases is that the measure of compensation broadly equates with most of the losses (or, sometimes) debt) incurred by the company after a date on which the court considers the company was clearly insolvent and should have stopped trading. Where more than one director is involved each director may be held to be liable for different amounts, depending on the degree of involvement and culpability of the particular director and the duration of that director's involvement (s.301).
Distributions to shareholders when, or as a result of which, the company is insolvent (s.56)	The distributions may in certain circumstances be recovered from the shareholder. To the extent that a distribution is not able to be recovered from the shareholder (either because the shareholder has no obligation to repay it or because the shareholder has insufficient assets or for any other reason), any director who failed to take reasonable steps to ensure the correct procedures for authorising distributions were followed, or who signed the required solvency certificate when there were no reasonable grounds for believing at that time that the company would satisfy the solvency test, will be liable to the company to repay the distribution.
Failure to keep proper accounting records (ss.194 & 300)	Civil liability A court may order that the director is personally responsible for all or any part of the debts and other liabilities of the company. The court has a wide discretion and will apply similar principles to those referred to under the insolvent and reckless trading offences. Criminal liability A director convicted of this offence is liable to a fine not exceeding $10,000.

Wrongdoing (misappropriation, negligence, default, breach of duty or trust) (s.301)	This section provides a mechanism for court procedures against a director when a company is in liquidation and does not create any new category of liability. The court may order the director to repay, restore or account for the money or the property or any part of it, with interest at such rate as the court sees fit or to contribute such sum to the company's assets by way of compensation in respect of the negligence, default or breach of duty or trust as the court sees fit.
Breach of duties (statutory and others) (ss.131-134; 138-141)	The director may be ordered to compensate the company for any loss or damage caused by breach of his duty, to restore to the company any property appropriated or acquired in breach of his duty and to account to the company for any benefit obtained in breach of fiduciary duty (s.301).
Carrying on business fraudulently (s.380)	A director convicted of this offence is liable to imprisonment for a term up to five years or to a fine up to NZ$200,000. Automatic prohibition from being a director or in any way involved in the management of a company for five years, without leave of the court.
Leaving New Zealand, concealing or removing company property or destroying, concealing or removing company records (s.273)	A director convicted of this offence is liable to imprisonment for a term up to two years or to a fine up to NZ$50,000.
Failure to identify and deliver property to a liquidator (s.274)	A director convicted of this offence is liable to imprisonment for a term up to two years or to a fine up to NZ$50,000.
Making false or misleading statements or omissions (s.377)	A director convicted of this offence is liable to imprisonment for a term up to five years or to a fine up to NZ$200,000. Automatic prohibition from being a director or in any way involved in the management of a company for five years, without leave of the court.
Fraudulent use or destruction of property (s.378)	A director convicted of this offence is liable to imprisonment for a term up to five years or to a fine up to NZ$200,000. Automatic prohibition from being a director or in any way involved in the management of a company for five years, without leave of the court.
Destroying, altering or falsifying records (s.379)	A director convicted of this offence is liable to imprisonment for a term up to five years or to a fine up to NZ$200,000. Automatic prohibition from being a director or in any way involved in the management of a company for five years, without leave of the court.

Offence	Remedy Available
Conduct rendering a director unfit to be a director (ss.382 – 386)	The Registrar of Companies may order disqualification in certain circumstances for a period of up to five years; The court may order disqualification for a period up to 10 years. (This is in addition to the automatic disqualification which follows conviction for certain offences referred to above.)
Breaches of the Fair Trading Act 1986	The court may order a director to compensate the creditor for any loss suffered as a result of conduct towards that creditor which breached the Act.
Transactions at an undervalue (s.297)	The liquidator can recover from any other party to the transaction the amount by which the value of the consideration or benefit provided by the company exceeded the value of the consideration or benefit received by the company.
Insolvent transactions having preferential effect (s.292)	If a transaction is set aside as against the liquidator, the court may order one or more of the following: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> (a) that any property transferred as part of the impugned transaction be restored to the company; (b) that any property which represents the application of either the proceeds of sale of the property or money originally transferred be vested in the company; (c) repayment of money paid by the company; (d) the release or discharge of any security given by the company; (e) a person to pay the company such sums as represent the value of any benefits received by him from the company as a result of the transaction; (f) that security be provided for the discharge of any obligation imposed by or arising under the order; (g) the extent to which any person affected by the setting aside of a transaction or any order made as noted above may claim as a creditor in the liquidation (s.295). An order under these provisions cannot prejudice any interest in property acquired by a person from a person other than the company for value and without notice of the circumstances under which the property was acquired from the company (s.296).

Transactions for inadequate or excessive consideration with connected parties (s.298)	The liquidator may recover from the connected party the excessive value or the undervalue, as applicable.
Securities and charges issued in favour of connected parties (s.299)	The court can set aside the charge or security (in whole or in part). The court may make such other orders as it thinks proper for the purpose of giving effect to an order setting aside the security. The court cannot set aside a security which has subsequently been purchased by another person if the purchase was made in good faith and for valuable consideration, and if at the time of the purchase the purchaser was not a connected party.
Voidable charge (s.293)	The charge can be set aside in whole or in part. The setting aside of a charge or security can not prejudice the interest in property acquired by a person as a result of the exercise of a power of sale by the grantee of the charge and for valuable consideration and without knowledge of the circumstances relating to the giving of the charge, or acquired by an assignee of the charge for value and without notice (s.296).

7. Duty to co-operate

- (a) To what extent are directors (and others identified in question 3) obliged to co-operate with an investigation into the company's affairs following its insolvency?
- (b) Are any human rights laws applicable in the domestic jurisdiction in relation to any such obligations (e.g. in the UK and other European jurisdictions Article 6 of the European Convention of Human Rights may apply if domestic law compels a person to provide potentially self-incriminating information at the request of the office-holder appointed under the relevant insolvency procedure adopted)?

7.1 Extent to which directors are obliged to co-operate with an investigation into the company's affairs following its liquidation.

- 7.1.1 As soon as a company goes into liquidation, present and former directors of the company must give the liquidator details of the property of the company in their possession or under their control (s.274).

- 7.1.2 The liquidator can by notice require those persons to deliver that property to the liquidator or the liquidator's nominee, or to dispose of the property in the manner the liquidator directs (s.274).
- 7.1.3 The liquidator can require any person to deliver to the liquidator books, records or documents of the company in that person's possession or under that person's control. The liquidator can also require a director or former director of the company, a shareholder, an employee or former employee, and certain other persons having knowledge of the affairs of the company to do any of the following things:
- (i) to meet with the liquidator at a reasonable time or times;
 - (ii) to give the liquidator such information about the business, accounts or affairs of the company as the liquidator requests;
 - (iii) to be examined on oath or affirmation by the liquidator or the liquidator's solicitor on any matter relating to the affairs of the company;
 - (iv) to assist in the liquidation to the best of that person's ability (s.261)2.

Liquidators often use these powers to require a director to attend the first meeting of creditors in the liquidation, and to obtain information to enable the liquidator to prepare a statement of affairs for the company at the commencement of the liquidation. These powers are also used to assist the liquidator in investigating the company's affairs and the actions of directors.

- 7.1.4 Whilst the failure by a director to comply with obligations referred to in paragraphs 7.1.1 – 7.1.3 is punishable as an offence, as a matter of practice a liquidator wishing to obtain information will rely on the examination provisions of the Act. A court can require a person to comply with a requirement of a liquidator under section 261 and may itself summon a person for examination by the court about a company's affairs (s.266).
- 7.1.5 A person is not excused from answering a question in the course of being examined by the liquidator or by the court under these provisions, on the grounds that the answer may incriminate or tend to incriminate that person. The person's answers can be used as evidence in civil actions against the person for negligence, default or breach of duty or trust. However the answers are not admissible as evidence in criminal proceedings against that person except on a charge of perjury in relation to the testimony (s.267).

7.2 Applicable human rights laws

- 7.2.1 Much of New Zealand's human rights laws can be found in the Human Rights Act 1993 (which deals primarily with unlawful discrimination), the Privacy Act 1993 (which promotes and protects the privacy of natural persons— in particular the use of personal information held by other parties - in accordance with international guidelines) and the New Zealand Bill of Rights Act 1990 (which affirms, protects and promotes human rights and fundamental freedoms in New Zealand).

- 7.2.2 New Zealand is a signatory to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights 1966, and has acceded to the Optional Protocol. New Zealand's commitment to this Covenant is affirmed and reflected in the New Zealand Bill of Rights Act 1990.
- 7.2.3 Liquidators, in carrying out their functions and duties and exercising their powers, must have regard to the human rights laws in the same way as anyone else carrying out functions, powers or duties must do.
- 7.2.4 The New Zealand Bill of Rights Act 1990 expressly states that whenever an enactment can be given a meaning that is consistent with the rights and freedoms contained in the Bill of Rights, that meaning shall be preferred to any other meaning.

QUESTION 8

8. Appeals and limitation periods

- (a) What limitation period, if any, will apply to actions brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3) in connection with the offences identified in question 2?
- (b) Please indicate whether an appeal is available from the decision of the lower courts.

8.1 Limitation periods

Limitation period for criminal proceedings

- 8.1.1 The general rule is that no limitation period applies to criminal proceedings unless stipulated by statute. Except as stated in paragraph 8.1.2, no limitations apply to the offences attracting criminal liability which have been identified in the answers to questions 2 and 6.
- 8.1.2 Offences under section 273 (leaving New Zealand, concealing or removing company property or destroying, concealing or removing company records) and section 274 (failure to identify and deliver company property to a liquidator) are triable summarily. Informations to commence prosecution of directors (or other parties who may be liable) for these offences must be laid within 3 years after the date of the offence.

Limitation period for civil actions

- 8.1.3 In relation to most civil liabilities identified in question 2 and 6, the limitation period is generally 6 years from the date on which the cause of action accrued.³¹

³¹ Section 4 Limitation Act, 1950.

- 8.1.4 In relation to breaches of the director's statutory and other duties, the limitation period is generally 6 years from the date on which the cause of action accrued.³² No limitation period will apply if there has been a fraudulent breach of trust or to recover company property or the proceeds of company property which have been wrongfully retained by the director or received by him and converted to his own use.³³
- 8.1.5 Generally speaking proceedings against a director under the Fair Trading Act 1986 (refer Section 2.12 of this paper) must be commenced within 3 years after the date on which the loss or damage, or the likelihood of the loss or damage, was discovered or ought reasonably to have been discovered.³⁴

8.2 Appeals

- 8.2.1 Appeals are available from the decisions of the lower courts.

QUESTION 9

9. Foreign corporations

Do the legal provisions and procedures outlined above apply to both domestic and foreign corporations?

9.1 Introduction

- 9.1.1 An overseas company carrying on business in New Zealand (as that expression is defined in the Act) must apply for registration in New Zealand as an overseas company within 10 working days of commencing to carry on business (s.334)
- 9.1.2 Directors of overseas companies carrying on business in New Zealand do not have the statutory duties which directors of companies incorporated in New Zealand have, but it is thought that the courts will hold that those directors, at least so far as the New Zealand operations of the company are concerned, will have duties under the general law similar to the statutory duties (refer Sections 2.1, 2.2, 2.4 and 2.7 of this paper).

9.2 Liquidation in New Zealand of an overseas company

- 9.2.1 Irrespective of whether the overseas company is registered as such in New Zealand, a creditor, director or shareholder of that company, or the company itself or the New Zealand Registrar of Companies, can apply to the High Court of New Zealand for the liquidation of that company. An application can be made irrespective of whether the company has been placed in liquidation abroad, or has been dissolved or otherwise has ceased to exist as a company under the laws of any other country (s.342).

³² Section 4 Limitation Act 1950.

³⁴ Section 43 Fair Trading Act 1986.

- 9.2.2 The liquidation in New Zealand of an overseas company will be carried out in general terms in accordance with the standard liquidation regime for a New Zealand company. This means that the transactions entered into by an overseas company during the "twilight" period identified in question 4 as being vulnerable to attack will be vulnerable to attack under the provisions referred to in question 4.
- 9.2.3 The court's power to appoint a liquidator in New Zealand to an overseas company is discretionary. In addition to any other grounds on which the court might generally decline to appoint a liquidator, the court is unlikely to appoint a liquidator unless the following three core requirements are fulfilled:
- (a) there must be a sufficient connection with New Zealand which may, but does not necessarily have to, consist of assets within the jurisdiction;
 - (b) there must be a reasonable possibility, if a liquidation order is made, of benefit to those applying for the liquidation order; and
 - (c) one or more persons interested in the distribution of assets of the company must be persons over whom the court can exercise a jurisdiction.³⁵
- 9.2.4 Where the overseas company has no assets in New Zealand, and where it is continuing to trade in its country of incorporation and elsewhere in the world, there would need to be exceptional circumstances for the court to order that the overseas company be placed in liquidation in New Zealand.³⁶

9.3 UNCITRAL Model Law on Cross-Border Insolvency

- 9.3.1 In February 1999 the New Zealand Law Commission recommended that New Zealand adopt the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law's Model Law on Cross Border Insolvency³⁷, with minor amendments.³⁸
- 9.3.2 The Model Law seeks to provide uniformity of approach to the initiation of cross-border insolvency proceedings while allowing for flexibility of approach, on a case-by-case basis, to the finding of solutions.
- 9.3.3 The Insolvency (Cross-border) Act 2006 came into force on 24 July 2008. That Act implements the Model Law, with minor amendments. The Act empowers New Zealand courts to act in aid of or be auxiliary to foreign courts in relation to an insolvency proceeding in respect of which the foreign court has jurisdiction. In doing so, the New Zealand court may exercise the powers that it could exercise in respect of the matter had it arisen in its own jurisdiction.

QUESTION 10

10. Insurance

Is directors' and officers' insurance available in your jurisdiction? If so, to what extent will the availability of such insurance provide effective protection to directors against personal liability which may arise in connection with the issues raised in questions 1-9?

10.1 Directors' and employees' liability insurance is available in New Zealand. Policies offer cover for "wrongful acts", typically breach of duty while acting as a director or employee. The policies are often drafted broadly enough to cover directors and employees sued for failing to exercise diligent control over management and thus failing to safeguard against losses caused by reckless decisions and by embezzlement. Cover is also available to the company itself if it pays out under an indemnity it grants to the director or employee.

10.2 In general, these policies do not specifically deny indemnity to companies or directors for liabilities arising from insolvent trading. However, on the ground of public policy, the policies do not allow for insurance against liabilities arising from directors' or employees' deliberate fraudulent acts or omissions, willful breaches of duty or legislation and deliberate criminal acts. Arguably, in certain situations insolvent trading that involves the directors in personal liability could come within these general exclusions, so that directors are not insured.

10.3 A company may effect insurance cover for, or pay the premium for policies taken out to cover, directors and employees in respect of:

- (a) liability, other than criminal liability, for any act or omission in their capacity as a director or employee; or
- (b) costs incurred in defending or settling any claim relating to any such liability; or
- (c) costs incurred in defending any criminal proceedings brought against them in their capacity as director or employee, in which they are acquitted.

A company can only do this if expressly authorised by its constitution and with prior approval of the board of directors – the directors who vote in favour of effecting the insurance must sign a certificate stating that in their opinion the cost of effecting the insurance is fair to the company (s.162).

10.4 Directors may pay their own premiums to insure themselves against those liabilities against which the company is unable or unwilling to insure.

- 10.5 The company, if expressly authorised by its constitution, also has the power to indemnify a director or employee for:
- (a) costs incurred in any proceeding that relates to liability for any act or omission in their capacity as a director or employee, but only where judgment is given in their favour or in which they are acquitted, or which is discontinued;
 - (b) liability to any person other than the company or a related company for any act or omission in their capacity as a director or employee, or costs incurred by them in defending or settling any claim relating to that liability whether successful or not. However, this does not apply to criminal liability or liability in respect of a breach, in the case of a director, of their duty to act in good faith in what the director believes to be the best interests of the company or, in the case of an employee, of any fiduciary duty owed to the company or related company.

QUESTION 11

11. How safe is it for directors and others to incur further credit during the twilight period?

11.1 How safe is it for directors or others involved with the company's affairs to incur further credit?

11.1.1 Insolvent trading and reckless trading provisions apply to directors, (including "de facto directors", "shadow directors", and "deemed directors"³⁹).

11.1.2 In incurring further credit on behalf of the company during the "twilight" period, directors tread a very fine line. A director has a statutory duty not to agree to the company incurring an obligation, unless the director believes at that time on reasonable grounds that the company will be able to perform the obligation when it is required to do so (s.136). This assumes that the company can also meet its existing obligations when they fall due. Also, a director must not agree, or cause or allow the company's business, to be carried on in a manner likely to create a substantial risk of serious loss to the company's creditors (s.135). Directors therefore must regularly monitor their company's financial health and, in particular, complete cash flow forecasts before committing the company to any obligations. The situation should not be viewed like a hypothetical immediate liquidation – the reasonable possibility of generating future revenue and the ability to raise further credit are issues to be considered in this context.

³⁹ See paragraphs 3.2.1 - 3.2.12 for a full explanation of these terms. For current purposes a "de-facto" director is someone who may not have been formally appointed as a director but who acts in the same way as a director or is held out as such. A "shadow director" is someone in accordance with whose directions or instructions the directors of the company are accustomed to act. It will thus cover the "puppet master" who, for whatever reason, does not wish to appear on the face of the record as a director of the company but who in fact "pulls the strings" and tells the directors what to do. This would also include parent companies who in effect decide what their subsidiaries do.

11.1.3 In *Sandell v. Porter*⁴⁰ the High Court of Australia stated that in determining solvency, courts should take into account the debtor's ability to sell assets or borrow money within a relatively short time period. The question of what time period is acceptable will depend on the circumstances of the case. In determining cash flow insolvency the courts have also made a distinction between insolvency and a temporary lack of liquidity.⁴¹ Similar principles apply in New Zealand, where the courts have also, when considering whether directors have traded recklessly, drawn a distinction between the taking of legitimate and illegitimate business risks. When a company enters troubled financial waters the directors are required to make a "sober assessment" as to the company's likely future income and prospects, on an ongoing basis.⁴²

11.2 Can an unconnected third party rely on the validity of transactions entered into with a company (in particular guarantees and securities) during the "twilight" period?

11.2.1 The risk of dealing with a company which is or may become insolvent is that the New Zealand legal system, like many others, has a vulnerability period running back from the date the insolvency process begins. In New Zealand, that period is generally two years (refer paragraphs 1.1.2 and 1.1.3 for a full explanation of how the vulnerability period is calculated).

11.2.2 Generally speaking, a transaction which an unconnected third party enters into with a company for "market value" during the twilight period, where the party has no reasonable grounds to suspect the company's insolvency, will not be struck down when the company is subsequently the subject of the formal insolvency process (liquidation). For instance, if security for debt is given at the time of incurring the debt, the security cannot be challenged later, but if the security is given for an earlier debt, this can be challenged by the liquidator.

11.2.3 Full details of the types of transaction entered into by a company before the commencement of the formal insolvency process which are vulnerable to attack, and the defences available to the other party or parties to the transaction, are set out in question 4.

⁴¹ See Hymix Concrete Pty Limited v. Garrity (1977) 13 ALR 321 where it was held that a company's whole financial position must be considered and a temporary lack of liquidity does not necessarily mean insolvency.

APPENDIX

Summary of NEW ZEALAND insolvency procedures and commercial issues

1. Introduction – probable law reform

- 1.1 Unlike many jurisdictions, New Zealand has no licensing or registration system for insolvency practitioners. There are very few restrictions on who can be appointed to act as a liquidator, receiver or administrator of a company. Such restrictions as there are generally relate to those who have a direct connection with the company or have provided professional services or had a continuing business relationship with the company within the previous two years. Persons who have been prohibited from being a director or manager of a company are also disqualified.

In August 2008, the then Government announced a decision to introduce a new negative licensing system for the insolvency profession. Given the small size of the profession in New Zealand, the Government saw a negative licensing system as a cost effective method of dealing with incompetent and poorly skilled insolvency practitioners.

As part of the reform it is proposed that the existing disqualification criteria will be tightened and the court's powers to replace insolvency practitioners in relation to particular assignments will be widened - the Registrar of Companies, creditors and other interested parties would be able to apply to the court to replace an insolvency practitioner who is not independent or has a conflict of interest.

The negative licensing regime would empower the Registrar of Companies to prohibit or ban a person from acting as an insolvency practitioner where the person lacks the relevant skills or competencies or is shown to have failed to perform statutory duties under the relevant legislation. Persons who have been banned would have a right of appeal to the court.

- 1.2 Reform in this area is the final step of a legislative program of significant reform to corporate and personal insolvency laws, enacted in 2006 and 2007, which came into force in late 2007 (in the case of the Insolvency (Cross-border) Act 2006, in July 2008).

2. Summary of existing insolvency regime in New Zealand

- 2.1 The insolvency regime in New Zealand is contained mainly in the following legislation:
- (a) Insolvency Act 2006 - insolvency of natural persons
 - (b) Companies Act 1993 - insolvency of corporations

- (c) Receiverships Act 1993 – receivers appointed over the assets of natural persons or corporations
 - (d) Corporations (Investigation and Management) Act 1989 – can be used to regulate the affairs of corporations at risk, and associated persons (including natural persons) of those corporations.
 - (e) Insolvency (Cross-border) Act 2006 – implementing the UNCITRAL Model Law on Cross-Border Insolvency, with minor amendments.
- 2.2 Special provisions modifying the standard insolvency regime apply in the insolvency of corporations carrying on insurance or banking business. Entities which are not corporations are subject to modified versions of the standard insolvency regime for corporations, or a different regime altogether.
 - 2.3 The Companies Act sets out the duties and liabilities of directors. Significantly, if the company has traded whilst insolvent, directors can be personally liable for debts incurred by the company when the company had no reasonable likelihood of being able to pay those debts. In addition, taxation legislation imposes personal liability on directors in certain circumstances for some of their company's unpaid tax debts.
 - 2.4 Directors of failed companies can also be disqualified from becoming directors for a period of time which varies according to the circumstances. A common period is 2 - 5 years.

3 Summary of insolvency procedures for corporations

Compromises with creditors

- 3.1 The board of directors of a company, a receiver of all or most of the assets and undertaking of the company (see paragraph 3.9 below) or, with the leave of the court, any creditor or shareholder of the company, if they believe that the company is insolvent (unable to pay its debts) or is likely to become insolvent, can initiate a compromise proposal with creditors of the company.
- 3.2 The procedures and steps required to give effect to a compromise are set out in Part XIV of the Companies Act 1993. A compromise proposal becomes binding on a company and all creditors (or if there is more than one class, on all creditors of that class) to whom notice of the proposal is given if at least 50% in number and 75% in value of creditors or the relevant class of creditors who vote approve the compromise (with or without amendment).
- 3.3 It is not necessary for there to be a formal administrator of the compromise scheme, although often the terms of the compromise proposal provide for the appointment of an independent administrator or manager.

3.4 The courts are not involved except:

- at the request of the proponent or the company, to impose a short moratorium period while the proposed compromise is being considered by creditors (proceedings in relation to debts are prohibited, although this does not affect secured creditors rights to enforce their security); or
- to deal with disputes or irregularities on the application of a disaffected creditor.

Voluntary administration

3.5 The board of a company can appoint an administrator if in the opinion of the directors voting for the resolution the company is insolvent or may become insolvent (that is, unable to pay its debts). The court can appoint an administrator on the application of a creditor, the liquidator (if the company is in liquidation), or the Registrar of Companies if the court is satisfied that the company is or may become insolvent and that an administration is likely to result in a better return for the company's creditors and shareholders than would result from an immediate liquidation of the company; or that it is just and equitable to appoint an administrator. A creditor who holds a charge over the whole or substantially the whole of the company's property may also appoint an administrator if the charge has become enforceable (provided the company is not already in liquidation).

3.6 The administrator is required to investigate the affairs of the company and report to creditors within prescribed time limits (these limits can be extended by the court). While the company is in voluntary administration, there is a moratorium period during which no creditor (except in limited circumstances a secured creditor with a charge over all or substantially all of the company's assets) can take any enforcement action against the company. At a "watershed" meeting, creditors vote on three options:

- a deed of company arrangement should be entered into between the creditors and the company, which may allow the continued operation of the company or an orderly wind down of the company's affairs.
- the company should be put into liquidation (see paragraph 3.8).
- the company should be returned to the control of the directors (this is very rare).

The requisite majority is a majority in number and 75% in value of those voting.

3.7 The courts are involved in the following situations: the administrator or a creditor can apply to the court for a wide range of supervisory orders and any creditor prejudiced by the administration or who may be prejudiced by the deed of company arrangement can apply to the court for relief or for termination of the deed.

Liquidation of the company

- 3.8 This is also known as winding up. This can be a voluntary process instigated by the shareholders or an involuntary process by court order (almost always initiated by creditors). A liquidator is appointed whose role is to realise the assets of the company and distribute proceeds to creditors in accordance with statutory priorities. A liquidator has the right to avoid some transactions entered into before liquidation.

Receivership

- 3.9 Secured creditors stand outside liquidation, and often stand outside formal creditors compromises. The right of secured creditors to realise their security is not affected by a creditors compromise or deed of company arrangement (unless they agree, or in the case of a deed of company arrangement, the court orders otherwise) or, generally speaking, on liquidation of a debtor company. A secured creditor who holds a charge over all the assets of an insolvent company can generally appoint a receiver over those assets or an administrator under the voluntary administration regime (see paragraph 3.5 above). With certain statutory exceptions, the secured creditor has first rights over the secured assets until its debt is paid in full.
- 3.10 The court also has power, separately from a secured creditor, to appoint a receiver where the court considers it appropriate to do so. The legislation dealing with receiverships (including court appointed receivers) is the Receiverships Act 1993.

Statutory management

- 3.11 Statutory management is a legal regime that can apply to any corporation which is operating fraudulently or recklessly, or to which it is desirable that the Act should apply:
- for the purpose of preserving the interests of the corporations' members or creditors; or
 - for the purpose of protecting any beneficiary under any trust administered by the corporation; or
 - for any other reason in the public interest,
- if those members, creditors, or beneficiaries or the public interest cannot be adequately protected under the Companies Act 1993 or in any other lawful way.
- 3.12 Statutory Managers are appointed by the Government in accordance with a recommendation of the New Zealand Securities Commission which must be satisfied that certain statutory criteria are met before it makes a recommendation.

- 3.13 Historically statutory management has been applied to companies or groups of companies which have problems of such an extraordinary nature that the ordinary insolvency regime under the Companies Act cannot deal adequately with them (for example, because of the size, complexity, or importance of the corporations' activities).
- 3.14 Statutory management cuts across the rights of the corporations' creditors far more extensively than do ordinary insolvency regimes. The liquidation of the company is only one of the possible options for a statutory manager. The aim of statutory management is to freeze the position of the corporation so as to preserve the interests of members, creditors and the public, and to resolve the difficulties of the corporation. Extensive moratorium provisions apply which preclude creditors, including secured creditors, from exercising rights and powers against the corporation. The regime contains provisions allowing the statutory manager to suspend obligations and terminate certain contracts.
- 3.15 The statutory management regime is rarely used – it has been applied to only 8 groups of corporations since 1989.

4. Summary of commercial issues

- 4.1 Directors of companies in liquidation can be exposed to personal liability for insolvent or reckless trading and for breaches of duty and other defaults. Although actions for insolvent or reckless trading in theory can be taken before liquidation, in practical terms because directors are generally in control of the company up to liquidation these actions are only taken by the liquidator after the company goes into liquidation.
- 4.2 Relatively few actions are taken against directors for insolvent trading.
- 4.3 One reason why such actions are not commonplace is that they are expensive to run and can become complex, for example, because insolvency of the company at various times needs to be proved by expert evidence.
- 4.4 However, external litigation funding sources are becoming increasingly available to insolvency practitioners who have minimal or no funds in the administration. This can increase the threat to directors.
- 4.5 The courts have generally been realistic in the retrospective review of the conduct of directors. They understand that business involves risk, and they are prepared to give directors some latitude when determining at what point in time insolvent or reckless trading began.
- 4.6 At the same time, the courts have shown little tolerance for passive directors who leave the hard work to others and claim that they did not know what was happening.
- 4.7 There are recent examples of the Registrar of Companies (the Government body responsible for administering and enforcing the Companies Act) prosecuting high profile directors where companies have failed.

- 4.8 The Registrar of Companies can also take steps to disqualify directors, although this action usually takes place well after the liquidation has concluded.
- 4.9 As a result of a change in late 2007 to the procedure for setting aside insolvent transactions and voidable charges (the onus is now on the liquidator to commence proceedings to set aside a transaction if a creditor has objected to a setting aside notice – previously the creditor had to apply to court for an order that the transaction should not be set aside), it is thought that there will be fewer court applications. This is primarily because of current uncertainty as to whether, if the liquidator's application to set aside is unsuccessful, the court will order costs against the liquidator who may not have funds in the liquidation to meet that order.
- 4.10 After the liquidator's remuneration and secured creditors and priority creditors (for example employees) are paid, returns to unsecured creditors are often minimal or (if the company's assets have been completely depleted) non-existent.

POLAND

QUESTION 1

1. The start and duration of the “twilight” period

What is the length of the period ending with formal insolvency proceedings during which transactions entered into by a company are vulnerable to attack or are liable to give rise to personal liability on the part of directors and/or others involved in the management of the company?

1.1 Overview

1.1.1 According to the Polish Bankruptcy and Reorganization Law of 28 February 2003, as amended, (BARK), in the context of commencement of the “twilight” period, the crucial date is the day of presenting the bankruptcy petition in the court, as the subject period is measured back from this moment.

1.1.2 The bankruptcy is declared in relation to a debtor who has become insolvent. The insolvency of the debtor takes place if the debtor fails to perform its due liabilities. In addition, a corporate debtor is deemed insolvent when the sum of its liabilities exceeds the value of its assets, even though the debtor duly performs those liabilities. For more general description of the Polish bankruptcy law - please see the appendix to this analysis.

1.1.3 Under BARK, in order to be eligible for bankruptcy, one has to be a professional entrepreneur, defined as a natural person, legal person or unincorporated business entity granted legal capability by a separate law, conducting business or professional activity in its own name.

Due to subject of this analysis, its scope is limited to commercial companies with legal personality - limited liability company (spółka z ograniczoną odpowiedzialnością) and joint stock company (Spółka Akcyjna).

The word “company” shall hereinafter be used interchangeably with the words “bankrupt” and “debtor”.

Polish law follows the European continental law in terms of corporate bodies of the commercial companies. Corporate bodies of the Polish commercial companies (both limited liability and joint stock) are:

- shareholders' meeting (zgromadzenie wspólników or walne zgromadzenie),
- management board (zarząd),
- supervisory board (rada nadzorcza), and
- audit committee (komisja rewizyjna).

The function of an executive director - a person who manages the affairs of the company and represents the company, in Polish companies is referred to as the function of the member of the management board. Therefore, the word “director” shall hereinafter mean and be used as an equivalent to member of the management board.

In addition to the management board, Polish law recognizes the function of a commercial proxy (commercial plenipotentiary; prokura) a type of commercial unlimited power of attorney given by the entrepreneur registered with the entrepreneurial register, which encompasses an authorization to perform in-court and out-of-court acts connected with carrying on business activity. In practice it is quite common for Polish companies to appoint proxies having right to represent the company usually jointly with one of the directors of the company.

- 1.1.4 Currently, a draft of amendment to BARL is subject of legislative procedures in Sejm - the lower chamber of Polish parliament. According to the available information, amendments shall refer to bankruptcy eligibility, grounds for bankruptcy declaration, procedure leading to bankruptcy declaration and its effects, amendments of rulings regarding trustee, court supervisor and administrator of the bankruptcy estate and participants to the proceedings. It is hard to estimate when the proposed amendments will be adopted and become binding.

1.2 The “twilight” period in Polish law

Under Polish law, that is the BARL and the Civil Code of 23 April 1964, as amended, (CC) the “twilight” period may be defined as the period, preceding presentation of the bankruptcy petition in the court, during which the transactions entered into by a company are or may be held ineffective (bezskuteczne) in relation to the bankruptcy estate. The ineffectiveness in such circumstances has the form of relative ineffectiveness (bezskuteczność względna) meaning that transaction remains valid and produces desired legal effects but becomes ineffective in relation to certain person or persons. However, as BARL provides for ineffectiveness of subject transactions in relation to the bankruptcy estate (which is not a subject of law), such transactions in practical terms are ineffective in relation to all the bankrupt’s creditors.

Transactions determined in BARL’s articles 127 and 128 (please see points 1-6 of the table below) are ineffective ex lege. On the other hand, transactions determined in BARL’s articles 129 and 130 and CC’s Book III Title X need a court decision to be deemed ineffective.

The length of the “twilight” period varies, depending on the nature of the transaction entered into by a company. BARL provides for several types of transactions which, if performed during the “twilight period”, are or may be held to be ineffective. The table below shows the types of such transactions and lengths of the “twilight” period.

Acts which may give rise to personal - either criminal or civil - liability on part of directors do not have to occur within the “twilight” period in order for the liability to attach.

No.	Nature of bankrupt's transaction	Length of the "twilight" period	Legal basis
1*	disposal of assets in exchange for no consideration or if the value of the bankrupt's performance significantly exceeds the value of consideration received by the bankrupt or reserved for the bankrupt or for a third party		BARL's Art. 127 par. 1
2.*	in-court settlement, acknowledgement and waiver of claim done in circumstances described in 1. above	one year	BARL's Art. 127 par. 2
3.*	securing and paying undue debt, unless a party which received payment or was secured by establishment of security was unaware of the existence of basis for declaring bankruptcy	two months	BARL's Art. 127 par. 3
4.	transactions with bankrupt's partners, shareholders, representatives or their spouses	six months	BARL's Art. 128 par. 2
5.	transactions with bankrupt's affiliates, their shareholders, representatives or their spouses	six months	BARL's Art. 128 par. 2
6.	transactions between the bankrupt and other company if one of them is a dominant company	six months	BARL's Art. 128 par. 3
7.	remuneration of a person whose duties include managing the bankrupt's enterprise to the extent significantly exceeding the usual amount of such remuneration while it is not justified by the work input	prior to bankruptcy declaration	BARL's Art. 129 par. 1
8.	compensation payable in connection with the termination of employment or a service contract, related to the management of the bankrupt's enterprise in circumstances described in 7. above	prior to bankruptcy declaration	BARL's Art. 129 par. 3
9.	establishment of mortgage, pledge, registered pledge, tax pledge or other in rem encumbrance over bankrupt's assets in the event the bankrupt is not a personal debtor and the bankrupt received no consideration for establishment of such encumbrance or if value of such consideration is disproportionately lower than the value of the established encumbrance	one year	BARL's Art. 130 par. 1 and 2

No.	Nature of bankrupt's transaction	Length of the "twilight" period	Legal basis
10.	establishment of encumbrance to secure debts of persons described in points 4, 5 and 6 above	one year	BARL's Art. 130 par. 3
11.	Actio pauliana (for details please see 4.3.4 below)	unlimited	CC's Book III Title X

* Inapplicable in relation to securities established prior to the declaration of bankruptcy in connection with futures or securities buy back transactions.

 May be held ineffective by the bankruptcy judge, for details please see 4.3 below.

QUESTION 2

2. Actions potentially giving rise to liability for directors

- (a) In respect of which acts during the "twilight" period may a director be held personally liable or which may otherwise have adverse consequences for him?
- (b) In relation to each act identified in (a) above:
 - (i) is any resulting liability against a director civil, criminal or both?;
 - (ii) can a director be made personally liable in respect of the whole loss caused to the company or the deficit to creditors?
 - (iii) will liability attach to individual directors in proportion to their specific involvement?;
 - (iv) is there a specified period before commencement of a subsequent insolvency procedure within which the relevant act must have been undertaken in order for liability to attach to a director?; and
 - (v) what defenses, if any, will be available in relation to each offence?

2.1 General overview

The Polish law does not directly impose sanctions - either civil or criminal - on members of the corporate bodies for the making of transactions specifically during the "twilight" period. Instead, members of the corporate bodies may - in pursuance with the acts of general applicability, for instance Criminal Code or CC, but also BARL - be held liable for breach of their duties connected with their function within bankruptcy proceedings, for putting the company or its creditors at risk of incurring losses or for actually making the company or its creditors incur losses.

2.2 Bankruptcy and Reorganization Law (BARL)

2.2.1 Article 373 paragraph 1 point 1 and article 374 paragraph 1 specifies the following breaches of duties :

- a) Failure to present a bankruptcy petition in the court within two weeks from the moment when the basis for bankruptcy declaration commenced to exist (article 373 paragraph 1 point 1) and causing, by willful misconduct or gross negligence, insolvency of the company (article 374 paragraph 1).
- b) (i) In such circumstances the liability is theoretically civil (it is imposed by civil courts according to the rules of civil procedure), but in practical terms it is quasi criminal.
- (ii) Liability has a form of the prohibition - three to ten years in duration - to conduct business activity on the person's own account and to be a member of the supervisory board, representative or attorney-in-fact in the commercial company, state-owned enterprise, co-operative, foundation or association (stowarzyszenie).
- (iii) While imposing the prohibition the court should consider the degree of fault and results of the acts undertaken, including in particular decrease of the economic value of the bankrupt's enterprise and extent of the creditors' damages, as the duration of the prohibition depends on those factors.
- (iv) As mentioned above - under BARL's article 373 paragraph 1 point 1 - the liability attaches, subject to other provisions of BARL, in the event the bankruptcy petition was not presented in the court within two weeks from the moment when the grounds for bankruptcy declaration started to exist.

There is no specified timeframe for the undertaking of an act - described in BARL's article 374 paragraph 1 - for the liability to attach.

- (v) Defenses are:
 - degree of fault was low enough not to impose the prohibition, or impose the prohibition of the minimum length - three years, and/or
 - results of the failure to present the bankruptcy petition do not justify imposition of the penalty (for instance no creditor suffered damages).

2.2.2 BARL's Article 21

- a) Failure to present a bankruptcy petition in the court within two weeks from the moment when the grounds for bankruptcy declaration started to exist.
- b) (i) The liability is civil.

- (ii) A director can be made personally liable in respect of the whole loss caused to the company and to the company's creditors.
- (iii) In the event of failure of presentation of the bankruptcy petition is a result of negligence of more than one person, the liability is joint and several.
- (iv) Please see 2.2.1 b) (iv) above in relation to BARL's article 373 paragraph 1 point 1.
- (v) Please see 2.5.1 b) (v) below.

2.3 Criminal Code

There are several types of crimes which under the Polish Criminal Code of 6 June 1997 (CrimC) may be qualified as relating to duties of members of corporate bodies regarding the "twilight" zone's.

Under article 308, liable for the below crimes as the debtor or the creditor is a person who, on the basis of law, decision of the relevant authority, agreement or as a matter of fact, manages the financial matters of other legal person, natural person, group of persons or an entity without legal personality.

2.3.1 Article 300 paragraph 1

- a) Causing (by means of removal, concealment, disposal, gift, destruction, establishment of actual or apparent encumbrance or causing a damage to the company's assets) a frustration or limitation of the extent to which a company's creditor may satisfy its claims against the company, in the event the company is insolvent or is in danger of insolvency.
- b)
 - (i) The liability is criminal.
 - (ii) A person guilty of this misdemeanor is liable to imprisonment for up to three years. If as a result of the act many creditors of the company suffered damages, the penalty is imprisonment for up to eight years.
 - (iii) General terms of the Polish criminal law govern the extent of penalty - sentencing is within the court's discretion but the court needs to take into account degree of fault, social harmfulness and consideration of preventive and educational purposes of the penalty in relation to the perpetrator and a need of creating legal consciousness of the society. Also, when imposing a penalty, the court takes into account among other things the motivation and behavior of the perpetrator, nature and degree of infringement of the perpetrator's duties, personal features of the perpetrator and his or her behavior after commitment of the crime (especially attempts to repay the damages) and behavior of the aggrieved party.
 - (iv) CrimC determines no specified period before commencement of a subsequent insolvency procedure within which the relevant act must have been undertaken in order for liability to attach to a director.

- (v) According to article 307, in the event the perpetrator voluntarily covered all the damages, the court may extraordinarily commute a sentence or even not impose a penalty at all.

In the event the perpetrator voluntarily covered substantial part of the damages, the court may extraordinarily commute a sentence.

2.3.1.1 It is important to note that the general terms stated in 2.3.1 (b) apply to articles 296, and 300-303.

2.3.2 Article 300 paragraph 2

- a) Causing (by means of removal, concealment, disposal, gratuitous disposal, destruction, establishment of actual or apparent encumbrance or causing a damage to the company's assets levied or at risk of levy) a frustration or limitation of the extent to which a company's creditor may satisfy its claims against the company for the purpose of causing a frustration of execution of the decision of the court or other state organ.
- b) (i) The liability is criminal.
 - (ii) A person guilty of this misdemeanor is liable to imprisonment for up to five years.

2.3.3 Article 301 paragraph 1 and 2

- a) Causing (by establishing in accordance with law a new business entity and transferring there the company's property) a frustration or limitation of the extent to which several of the company's creditors may satisfy their claims against the company.
- b) (i) The liability is criminal.
 - (ii) A person guilty of this misdemeanor is liable to imprisonment for up to five years. Penalty is the same in the event the company caused several of its creditors become bankrupt or insolvent.

2.3.4 Article 301 paragraph 3

- a) Recklessly causing the company's bankruptcy or insolvency (in particular by wasting the components of the company's property, incurring liabilities or making transactions obviously in contradiction with principles of good management) while the company is in debt in relation to several creditors.
- b) (i) The liability is criminal.
 - (ii) A person guilty of this misdemeanor is liable to fine, restriction of freedom or imprisonment for up to two years.

2.3.5 Article 302 paragraph 1

- a) Performing or securing obligations in relation to only some of the company's creditors thus acting to the detriment of the remaining creditors while the company is in danger of insolvency or bankruptcy and is unable to satisfy its liabilities in relation to all of its creditors.
- b) (i) The liability is criminal.
 - (ii) A person guilty of this misdemeanor is liable to fine, restriction of freedom or imprisonment for up to two years.

2.3.6 Article 302 paragraph 2

- a) Delivering or promising to deliver a material benefit to a creditor of the company in consideration for acting to the detriment of other creditors in relation to bankruptcy proceedings or proceedings having its purpose to prevent bankruptcy.
- b) (i) The liability is criminal.
 - (ii) A person guilty of this misdemeanor is liable to imprisonment for up to three years.

2.3.7 Article 303

- a) Causing (by not keeping books of business activity or keeping the books negligently or inaccurately, especially by destructing, removing, concealing or forging such books) that a natural person, legal person or an entity with no legal personality suffers material damages.
- b) (i) The liability is criminal.
 - (ii) A person guilty of this misdemeanor is liable to imprisonment for up to three years.

If the amount of damages exceeds minimum monthly salary computed pursuant to relevant provisions of Polish labor law (currently PLN 1,126.00 - minimum salary) by two hundred times (thus constituting damages in substantial amount), a person guilty of this misdemeanor is liable to imprisonment for up to five years.

2.3.8 Article 296

- a) Causing, by abuse of power or failure to satisfy relevant obligations, that a company suffers damages in substantial amount, while being obliged pursuant to the law, decision of relevant organ or an agreement to manage financial affairs or business activities of such company.

- b) (i) The liability is criminal.
- (ii) A person guilty of this misdemeanor is liable to imprisonment for up to five years.

If a perpetrator was acting for the purpose of gaining a material benefit, he is liable to imprisonment for up to 8 years.

If the amount of damages exceeds minimum salary by one thousand times, a person guilty of this misdemeanor is liable to imprisonment for up to ten years.

If the perpetrator acted unintentionally, he is liable to imprisonment for up to three years.

2.4 Commercial Companies Code

The Commercial Companies Code of 15 September 2000, as amended, (CompC) provides two regimes governing liability of members of corporate bodies - one relating to limited liability companies (spółka z ograniczoną odpowiedzialnością) and the other relating to joint stock companies (Spółka Akcyjna). There are also provisions of criminal nature relating to both types of companies.

2.4.1 Provisions relating to limited liability companies

2.4.1.1 Article 293

- a) Causing damages by act or omission contrary to the law or the company's agreement, by members of the management board, supervisory board, audit committee or liquidator, unless such persons have no fault.
- b) (i) The liability is civil.
- (ii) A person is liable in respect of the whole loss caused to the company.
- (iii) The liability of persons listed in CompC's article 293 is joint and several.
- (iv) There is no specified period before commencement of a subsequent insolvency procedure within which this act must have been undertaken in order for liability to attach to a director. However, a statute of limitations for bringing this claim runs after three years from the day when the company had become aware about occurrence of damage and a person liable to redress it. In either case the statute of limitations lapses after ten years from the day when the damage occurred.
- (v) In order to avoid liability, a person must prove that there has been no fault on this person's side.

Under CompC's article 296, discharge of the persons liable for damages by resolution of the shareholders' meeting or waiver of rights by the company is not a defense if the company is insolvent or if the action for damages was brought by one of the company's shareholders.

2.4.1.2 Article 299

- a) Procuring a situation when execution against the company proves to be ineffective.
- b) (i) The liability is civil.
 - (ii) Members of the management board are liable for all obligations of the company.
 - (iii) The liability of members of the management board is joint and several.
 - (iv) Please see point (v) below.
 - (v) Member of the management board may release himself from the liability if he proves that:

bankruptcy motion was presented and the reorganization proceedings were commenced in the appropriate time,

- lack of presentation of the bankruptcy motion or lack of commencement of the reorganization proceedings were not due to his fault,
- although bankruptcy motion was not presented or the reorganization proceedings were not commenced, creditor of the company suffered no damages.

Under CompC's article 296, discharge of the persons liable for damages by resolution of the shareholders' meeting or waiver of rights by the company is not a defense if the company is insolvent or if the action for damages was brought by one of the company's shareholders or the person possessing different participation interest in profit or distribution of the assets of the company.

2.4.2 Provisions relating to joint stock companies - CompC's article 483

- a) Causing damages by act or omission contrary to the law or the company's articles of association, by members of the management board, supervisory board, review board or liquidator, unless such persons have no fault.
- b) (i) The liability is civil.

- (ii) A person is liable in respect of the whole loss caused to the company.
- (iii) The liability of persons listed in Companies Codes article 483 is joint and several.
- (iv) There is no specified period before commencement of a subsequent insolvency procedure within which this act must have been undertaken in order for liability to attach to a director. However, a statute of limitations for bringing this claim runs after three years from the day when the company had become aware about occurrence of damage and a person liable to redress it. In either case the statute of limitations lapses after five years from the day when the damage occurred.
- (v) In order to avoid liability, a person must prove that there has been no fault on that person's side.

2.4.3 Article 585

- a) Acting to the detriment of the company while participating in the company's establishment or while being member of the company's management board, supervisory board or audit committee.
- b)
 - (i) The liability is criminal.
 - (ii) A person guilty of this misdemeanor is liable to imprisonment for up to five years and fine.
 - (iii) Please see 2.3.1 b) (iii) above.
 - (iv) CompC determines no specified period before commencement of a subsequent insolvency procedure within which the relevant act must have been undertaken in order for liability to attach to a director.
 - (v) There are no special defenses available in respect of this misdemeanor under Companies Code.

2.4.4 Article 586

- a) Failure to present bankruptcy petition by the member of the management board or the liquidator of the company, despite the existence of the grounds for bankruptcy declaration.
- b)
 - (i) The liability is criminal.
 - (ii) A person guilty of this misdemeanor is liable to fine, restriction of freedom or imprisonment for up to one year.
 - (iii) Please see 2.3.1 b) (iii) above.
 - (iv) Please see 2.4.3 b) (iv) above.
 - (v) Please see 2.4.3 b) (v) above.

2.5 Tax Ordinance Act

The Tax Ordinance Act of 29 August 1997, as amended, (TOA) is an Act regulating, among other things, tax obligations. At several instances the TOA refers to insolvency procedure and proceedings. Due to the scope of this analysis, only the TOA's article 116 is addressed below. This article regulates administrative liability of the director for outstanding tax payments of the company or the company in organization (not yet registered in entrepreneurial register) in the event execution of tax payments against property of the company proved to be entirely or partly ineffective.

- a) 1) Failure to prove that:
 - a) bankruptcy petition was presented with the court or reorganization proceeding was commenced in applicable time or
 - b) failure to present bankruptcy petition or failure to commence reorganization proceeding was not a fault of the director;
- 2) Failure to indicate the company's property, which could serve to satisfy outstanding tax payments of the company to a material degree, if execution of tax payments against property of the company proved to be entirely or partly ineffective.
- b) (i) The liability is administrative. This is a special kind of liability, enforceable by public administrative authorities, through issuance of administrative decisions.
- (ii) The director can be made personally liable for the payment of those outstanding tax payments which arose while a person was performing duties of the director, irrespective of whether a person still holds a directorial position.
- (iii) The liability of the directors is joint and several. Also, the directors are jointly and severally liable with the company.
- (iv) There is a specified period in relation to acts described in point a) 1) above. The period is two weeks from the moment when grounds for bankruptcy declaration started to exist.
- (v) The defenses are, a contrario to the wording of TOA's article 116:
 - proving that bankruptcy petition was presented or reorganization proceeding was commenced in applicable time,
 - proving that failure to present bankruptcy petition or failure to commence reorganization proceeding was not a fault of the director,
 - indicating the company's property, which could serve to satisfy outstanding tax payments of the company to a material degree,

- proving that outstanding tax payments arose while a person was not performing duties of the director,
- proving that execution of tax payments against property of the company proved to be entirely effective.

QUESTION 3

3. Other persons involved with the company's affairs who may become liable in respect of their actions during the "twilight" period

- (a) In addition to the formally appointed directors of the company, can others be held liable in respect of the company's activities during the "twilight" period if the company were to become subject to a formal insolvency procedure?
- (b) In respect of which acts may other persons be held liable and to what extent does the liability of third parties differ from that for directors identified in question 2 above?
- (c) Will liability be limited to that resulting from involvement with a particular transaction or more generally in relation to the overall loss suffered by creditors?

3.1 General overview

Certain persons other than directors can be held liable like directors. The nature and character of the function of the person to be held liable like directors depends on the nature of transaction or acts undertaken by such persons, which are listed in question 2 above.

3.2 Liability under BARL

- a) Under BARL's article 373 paragraph 1 point 1 and article 374, persons, which may be held liable are all the persons who, while being obliged under the law to present a bankruptcy petition within two weeks from the moment when the grounds for bankruptcy declaration started to exist, did not do so, that is the persons authorized to represent the company solely or jointly with other persons. Therefore, the persons other than directors, liable under BARL's provisions indicated in question 2 above are, liquidators. According to the prevailing opinion of BARL commentaries, proxies (prokurenci) may not be held liable under articles 373 paragraph 1 point 1 and 374 as those whose duties do not include handling company's matters and who do not have access to relevant company's books, records and information.
- b) Liquidators may be held liable in respect of the same acts as directors and to the same extent.

- c) The extent of the liability of the persons other than directors is the same as that of directors.

3.3 Liability under the Criminal Code (CrimC)

- a) The crimes listed in question 2.3 above are stated chapter XXXVI Crimes against the market. Article 308 provides that for committing the crimes included in this chapter a debtor is liable like any person who on the basis of legal provision, decision of relevant authority, contract or by actual performance handles matters of the company's property.
- b) Persons other than directors may be held liable in respect of the same acts as director and to the same extent.
- c) The extent of the liability of the persons other than directors is the same as that of directors.

3.4 Civil liability under the Company Code (CompC)

- a) As noted above, under this code article 293 and 483 liable as directors are members of the company's supervisory board, audit committee and liquidator. According to article 299 only directors are liable.
- b) Persons other than directors may be held liable in respect of the same acts as director and to the same extent.
- c) The extent of the liability of the persons other than directors is the same as that of directors.

3.5 Criminal liability under the Company Code (CompC)

- a) Under Company Code article 585 liable next to directors are persons participating in establishing of the company, members of the supervisory board, members of the audit committee, liquidators and persons soliciting and facilitating commitment of this crime.

Under article 586, liable next to directors are only liquidators.

- b) Persons other than directors may be held liable in respect of the same acts as director and to the same extent.
- c) The extent of the liability of the persons other than directors is the same as that of directors.

3.6 Liability under Tax Ordinance Act (TOA)

- a) According to TOA's article 116 liable as directors are, in the event the company in organization does not yet have directors, the company's attorney-in-fact or shareholders, if the attorney-in-fact is not appointed.
- b) Persons other than directors may be held liable in respect of the same acts as director and to the same extent.

- c) The extent of the liability of the persons other than directors is the same as that of directors.

QUESTION 4

4. Counterparties dealing with the company during the twilight period

- (a) From the point of view of a counterparty dealing with the company during the twilight period, what are the potential heads of challenge which may lead to transactions with the company being set aside?
- (b) What defenses, if any, to the areas of vulnerability identified above will be available to a counter-party seeking to protect a transaction from being attacked?

4.1 Summary

As noted in question 1 above, the transactions entered into by the company during the "twilight" period either (i) are ineffective ex lege and thus any possible court order only "confirms" that such transactions are ineffective, or (ii) may be held ineffective by the court.

4.2 Ineffective transactions

The transactions that can be made ineffective ex lege are:

- (a) Where the company disposes of its property at an undervalue (including in-court settlements and acknowledgements and waivers of claim against);
- (b) securing and paying yet non-payable debts;
- (c) with the persons and entities having an interest in the company, power over the company or tied financially with the company;

4.2.1 Disposal of the property at an undervalue

Under BARL's article 127 paragraphs 1 and 2, such transactions are ineffective if the following conditions are met:

- (a) the transaction or the in-court settlement, acknowledgement or waiver of claims were done within a year preceding presentation of the bankruptcy petition with the court, and
- (b) on the basis of acts described in (a) above the company disposed of its property for no consideration or the value of the company's performance grossly exceeded the value of performance received by the company or reserved for the company or for the third party.

Lack of consideration takes place in the event the company (or a third party designated by the company) receives no or is to receive no material benefit in exchange for its own performance, for instance in the event the company makes a gift.

Gross disproportion between the value of the company's performance and consideration received is to be measured on the basis of average prices, rates, etc. commonly used in business in the same or similar transactions.

4.2.2 Securing and paying yet non-payable debts

Under BARL's article 127 paragraphs 3, such transactions are ineffective if the following conditions are met:

- (a) the transaction was done within two months preceding presentation of the bankruptcy petition with the court, and
- (b) the transaction related to non-payable debts at the time of payment or establishment of security.

However, the transaction is not ineffective if the creditor - at the time of payment or establishment of security by the company - was unaware that the grounds for declaring bankruptcy of the company existed.

4.2.3 Transactions with specially designated persons

Under BARL's article 128 paragraphs 2 and 3, such transactions are ineffective if the following conditions are met:

- (a) the transaction was done within six months preceding presentation of the bankruptcy petition with the court,
- (b) the transaction was a payable transaction, and
- (c) the transaction was done between the company and:
 - (i) the company's shareholders,
 - (ii) the company's shareholders' representatives or spouses,
 - (iii) the company's affiliates, their shareholders, representatives or spouses of those persons, or
 - (iv) other company, if one of those companies was a dominant company.

The transaction is payable if a performing party receives or is to receive in exchange a material benefit.

The company's representatives are members of the company's management bodies.

An affiliated company is a capital company in which another commercial company or a co-operative controls, directly or indirectly, at least 20% of the votes at the Shareholder's Meeting, also as pledge or usufructuary, or under agreements with other parties, or which directly holds at least 20% of the shares in another capital company (CompC's article 4 paragraph 1 point 5).

A dominant company is a commercial company in the event when:

- a) it controls, indirectly or directly, a majority of the votes at the shareholder's meeting, also as pledge or usufructuary, or in the Management Board of another capital company (a dependent company), also under agreements with other parties, or
- b) it is entitled to appoint or dismiss a majority of the Members of the Management Board of another capital company (a dependent company) or a co-operative (a dependent co-operative), also under agreements with other parties, or
- c) it is entitled to appoint or dismiss a majority of the Members of the Supervisory Board of another capital company (a dependent company) or a co-operative (a dependent co-operative) also under agreements with other parties, or
- d) more than half of the Members of the Management Board of the capital company are at the same time Members of the Management Board of the dependent company or the dependent cooperative, or
- e) it controls, indirectly or directly, a majority of the votes in the dependent partnership or at the Shareholders' Meeting of the dependent co-operative, also under agreements with other parties, or
- f) it exerts a decisive influence on the operations of the dependent capital company or dependent co-operative (CompC's article 5 paragraph 1 point 4).

4.3 Heads of challenge

The potential heads of challenge which may lead to transactions being held ineffective, pursuant to relevant BARL's and CC's provisions listed in the table in question 1 above, relate to transactions:

- (a) regarding labor related payments for persons managing the company;
- (b) encumbering the company's property in the event the company is not a personal debtor and receives no consideration for such encumbrance or the encumbrance was established in exchange for a consideration of a significantly lower value than the value of such encumbrance;
- (c) encumbering the company's property to secure debts of the persons and entities having an interest in the company, power over the company or tied financially with the company;
- (d) being detrimental to the company's creditors.

4.3.1 Labor related payments

Under BARL's article 129 paragraphs 1 and 3 such payments may be held ineffective in relation to the bankruptcy estate if the following conditions are met:

- (a) labor agreement or agreement for rendition of services was entered into before the bankruptcy declaration,
- (b) such agreement was entered into by the company and a person managing enterprise of the company, and
- (c) remuneration:
 - (i) was grossly excessive in comparison to remuneration for the same type of work or services, and
 - (ii) was not substantiated by amount of work, or
- (d) benefit paid to the person managing the enterprise of the company for termination of the agreement with such person was grossly excessive in comparison to benefits for the same type of work or services.

The bankruptcy judge, on the motion of trustee, court supervisor or administrator or ex officio may hold the specific part of remuneration ineffective in relation to the bankruptcy estate. The bankruptcy judge specifies the remuneration which is to be satisfied from the bankruptcy estate in an amount corresponding to the work or services performed by the person managing enterprise of the company or, in case of benefits for termination of the agreement, in an amount determined under the generally applicable rules.

It is not necessary that the persons whose remuneration or benefits are questioned are directors.

Excessiveness of remuneration or benefit must be gross and is measured according to average contractual rates used in the market, after taking into consideration size, industry and location of enterprise.

4.3.2 Encumbrance of the company's property - the company was not a personal debtor

Under BARL's article 130 paragraphs 1 and 2 encumbrance of the company's property in such circumstances may be held ineffective in relation to the bankruptcy estate if the following conditions are met:

- (a) the company's property was encumbered within one year preceding presentation of the bankruptcy petition with the court,
- (b) the encumbrance established on the company's property was in the form of:
 - (i) mortgage,
 - (ii) pledge,
 - (iii) registered pledge,
 - (iv) tax pledge, or
 - (v) other in rem encumbrance,

- (c) the company was not a personal debtor in relation to the secured debt, and
- (d) the company received no consideration for establishment of such security, or
- (e) the encumbrance was established in exchange for a consideration of a significantly lower value than the value of such encumbrance.

The bankruptcy judge, on the motion of trustee, court supervisor or administrator or ex officio may hold the subject encumbrance ineffective in relation to the bankruptcy estate.

It is irrelevant whether the debt secured this way was payable.

4.3.3 Encumbrance of the company's property - debts of specially designated persons

Under BARL's article 130 paragraph 3 encumbrance of the company's property in such circumstances may be held ineffective in relation to the bankruptcy estate if the following conditions are met:

- (a) the company's property was encumbered within one year preceding presentation of the bankruptcy petition with the court,
- (b) the encumbrance established on the company's property was in the form of:
 - (i) mortgage,
 - (ii) pledge,
 - (iii) registered pledge,
 - (iv) treasury pledge, or
 - (v) other in rem encumbrance,
- (c) the company was not a personal debtor in relation to the secured debt, and;
- (d) the encumbrance secures debts of:
 - (i) the company's shareholders,
 - (ii) the company's shareholders' representatives or spouses,
 - (iii) the company's affiliates, their shareholders, representatives or spouses of those persons, or
 - (iv) other company, if one of those companies was a dominant company.

The bankruptcy judge may hold ineffective encumbrances established to secure debts of persons specified above irrespective of the value of consideration received by the company for establishing such encumbrance.

4.3.4 Transactions detrimental to the company's creditors

BARL's article 131 provides that in all matters not regulated in articles 127-130, 132-134 and the CC's provisions regarding protection of the creditor in the event of a debtor's insolvency, apply accordingly to the actions brought against the transactions of the bankrupt detrimental to the creditors. At this point relevant CC's provisions constituting lex specialis to BARL (governing the so called action pauliana) shall be discussed.

4.3.4.1 Actio pauliana - general overview

In addition to the transactions described above, applicable under BARL in the context of the subject of this analysis, the Polish law recognizes legal institution known as actio pauliana. This institution is regulated by Title X of the CC - "Protection of creditor in the event of the debtor's insolvency".

CC provides that if as a result of a transaction made by the debtor to the detriment of the creditors and a third party gains a material benefit, each of such creditors may demand the said transaction to be held ineffective with respect to him if the debtor acted deliberately to the detriment of the creditors and the third party was aware of this or, acting in due care, could have become aware.

4.3.4.2 Required elements

Under CC's article 527, in order to hold a transaction ineffective in relation to a creditor, the following conditions have to be met:

- (a) debt has to exist,
- (b) transaction has to be done with a third party,
- (c) transaction is detrimental to creditors,
- (d) third party gains a material benefit,
- (e) debtor acts deliberately to the detriment of creditors,
- (f) third party acts in bad faith.

In the event all of the above conditions are met, transactions done by the debtor may be held ineffective in relation to the creditor (relative ineffectiveness) in an action brought against the third party with whom the debtor did transaction or in a way of bringing a charge (zarzut) against such a third party (CC's article 531 paragraph 1). If the third party disposed of the material benefit, the creditor may bring an action directly against the person to whose benefit the disposition was made as long as that person was aware of the circumstances substantiating the holding transaction of the debtor ineffective or if the disposition was gratuitous (CC's article 531 paragraph 2).

4.3.4.3 Statutory presumptions

In the context of actio pauliana it is presumed that:

- (1) the transaction was made to the detriment of creditors if - as a result of that transaction - the debtor became insolvent or became insolvent in a greater degree than before effecting that act (CC's article 527 paragraph 2).
- (2) if as a result of the transaction made by the debtor to the detriment of creditors a material benefit was gained by a person who was in a close relationship or in permanent economic relationship with the debtor, such person was aware that the debtor acted deliberately to the detriment of the creditors (CC's article 527 paragraph 3). Note that the range of such persons is broader than persons described in BARL's article 128.
- (3) if as a result of the transaction made by the debtor to the detriment of the creditors a third party gained a material benefit gratuitously, each creditor may demand the said transaction to be held ineffective even if that third party was not aware or, acting in due care, could have become aware, that the debtor acted deliberately to the detriment of the creditors (CC's article 528). Note that under this provision the fact that the third party acted in good faith is irrelevant.
- (4) if at the time of a donation the debtor was insolvent, it shall be presumed that he acted deliberately to the detriment of the creditors. The same shall apply where the debtor became insolvent by making the donation (CC's article 529).
- (5) the preceding provisions apply correspondingly where the debtor acted intentionally to the detriment of the future creditors. But if a third party gained a material benefit for a consideration, the creditor may demand that the relevant act in law be declared ineffective only if the third party knew the intention of the debtor (CC's article 530).

QUESTION 5

5. Enforcement

By whom may action be brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3 above)?

5.1 General overview

Legal eligibility to bring or commence legal proceedings against directors and other persons identified above depends on whether the action is civil, criminal or administrative in nature.

5.2 Civil proceedings

Activity	Person eligible to bring or commence legal proceedings
BARL's Art. 373 par. 1 pt. 1 and BARL's Art. 374 par. 2	creditor, trustee, court supervisor or administrator, the President of the Office for Competition and Consumer Protection (Prezes Urzędu Ochrony Konkurencji i Konsumentów) and the Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission (Przewodniczący Komisji Nadzoru Finansowego)
BARL's Art. 21	any person or entity which suffered a loss as a result of an activity
CompC's Art. 293	the company; each shareholder of the company - if the company does not bring an action within one year from the day on which the act resulting in damage was disclosed;
CompC's Art. 299	any creditor of the company
CompC's Art. 483	the company; each shareholder or person having different participation interest in profit or distribution of the assets of the company - if the company does not bring an action within one year from the day on which the act resulting in damage was disclosed

5.3 Criminal proceedings

As a general rule, criminal proceedings in Poland are commenced and carried on ex officio - by the specialized public authorities, especially the police and prosecutor's office. There are two exceptions to this general rule, which are specifically determined in criminal law provisions. The exception which needs to be addressed due to the scope of this analysis is that criminal proceedings relating to some crimes may be commenced only on the motion of the aggrieved party (in this event, however, the proceedings are carried on ex officio as well - only the motion to commence them is needed).

Additionally, every person or entity may submit to any public organ (usually specialized in prosecuting crimes) a notification regarding suspicion of commitment of the crime. This way such public organ is informed that a crime might have been committed and, after verification of the notification and circumstances around it, it may commence such proceedings.

Activity	Person eligible to bring or commence legal proceedings
CrimC's Art. 300 par. 1	ex officio , if the aggrieved party is State Treasury; otherwise the proceedings are commenced at the motion of the aggrieved party
CrimC's Art. 300 par. 2	ex officio
CrimC's Art. 301 par. 1 and 2	ex officio
CrimC's Art. 301 par. 3	ex officio
CrimC's Art. 302 par. 1	ex officio
CrimC's Art. 302 par. 2	ex officio
CrimC's Art. 303	ex officio , if the aggrieved party is State Treasury; otherwise the proceedings are commenced at the motion of the aggrieved party
CompC's Art. 585	ex officio
CompC's Art. 586	ex officio
CrimC's Art. 296	ex officio

5.4 Administrative proceedings under TOA's article 116

This type of proceedings may be commenced by any tax organ with relevant jurisdiction, in view of the company's registered seat.

According to TOA's article 13, the tax organ is (in cases interesting in the context of this analysis):

- 1) chief officer (naczelnik) of tax office, customs office, vojt (wójt), mayor (president of municipality), starost, marshal of the voivodship - as organ of the first instance;
- 2) director of tax chamber, director of customs chamber - as:
 - a) appellate organ from decisions of chief officer of tax office or customs office respectively,
 - b) organ of the first instance, in situations provided by separate rulings,
 - c) appellate organ from decisions issued by this organ in the first instance;
- 3) self-governmental committee of appeals (samorządowe kolegium odwoławcze) - as appellate organ from decisions of vojt, mayor (president of municipality), starost or marshal of the voivodship.

QUESTION 6

6. Remedies: orders available to the domestic court

In respect of the offences identified in questions 2, 3 and 4 above, what remedies are available in the domestic court?

Offence	Remedy available
All offences referred to in 2 above, resulting in criminal liability	In addition to penalties mentioned in 2 above next to each offence resulting in criminal liability, Polish criminal law allows the courts to impose for commitment of any crime several penal measures remedial in nature. Those penal measures (provided for by Article 39), applicable in the context of this analysis, include: 1) prohibition to serve at specific function, practice specific profession or carry on specific business activity for the period between on and ten years, 2) confiscation of property 3) duty to redress damages 4) award of compensatory damages to the aggrieved party (nawiązek) in the amount of up to PLN 100,000 5) award of cash payment to the aggrieved party (świadczenie pieniężne) in the amount of up to PLN 20,000 6) making the sentence publicly known
All offences referred to in 2 above, resulting in civil liability (except BARL's Art. 373 and 374)	Duty to redress damages caused
BARL's Art. 373 and 374	Please see question 2 above
BARL's Art. 127-130	Under BARL's Art. 134, in the event an act of the company is ineffective ex lege or is held ineffective by the court, everything that as a result of this act has been transferred out of the company's estate is to be returned to the bankruptcy estate; in the event an in-kind transfer is not possible, the cash equivalent shall be paid to the bankruptcy estate. In such events the reciprocal performance of a third party is returned to a third party if it is included in the bankruptcy estate separately from other assets or if the bankruptcy estate is enriched thereby. In the event the performance may not be returned, a third party may pursue its claim in the bankruptcy proceedings.
Actio pauliana	Under CC's Art. 532 the creditor with respect to whom the company's transaction was held ineffective may, with priority over the creditors of the third party, vindicate the rights in the assets which, as a result of the transaction which was held ineffective left the estate of the company or did not enter it. Under CC's Art. 533 the third party who gained a material benefit as a result of the transaction which was done to the detriment of the creditors may release itself from the duty to satisfy the claim of the creditor requesting the said transaction to be held ineffective, if it satisfies that creditor or indicates to such creditor the company's property sufficient to satisfy the creditor.
TOA's article 116	Duty to repay outstanding tax obligations

QUESTION 7

7. Duty to co-operate

- (a) To what extent are directors (and others identified in question 3 above) obliged to co-operate with an investigation into the company's affairs following its insolvency?
- (b) Are any human rights laws applicable in the domestic jurisdiction in relation to any such obligations (e.g. in the UK and other European jurisdictions Article 6 of the European Convention of Human Rights may apply if domestic law compels a person to provide potentially self-incriminating information at the request of the office-holder appointed under the relevant insolvency procedure adopted)?

7.1 Obligations under BARL's article 57

Under BARL's article 57, in the event the bankruptcy by liquidation of the company's assets has been declared (or if the bankruptcy with the possibility to make a composition arrangement has been declared when the company has been deprived of the right to administer its assets), the company indicates (through bodies authorized to represent the company) and releases all of its assets to the trustee, as well as surrenders all documents related to its activity, assets and accounts, including the book accounts, other records maintained for tax purposes and correspondence. The company confirms performance of this obligation by submitting a written declaration to the bankruptcy judge.

Also, the company is mandated to provide the bankruptcy judge and trustee with all necessary explanations regarding the company's assets.

The bankruptcy judge may decide that the members of the company's managing bodies cannot leave the territory of the Republic of Poland without its permission.

7.2 Sanctions for breach of BARL's article 57

Under BARL's article 58, in the event the company conceals its assets in circumstances described in question 7.1 above, the bankruptcy judge may impose on the company coercive measures to execute non-pecuniary performances.

The bankruptcy judge may impose coercive measures on the company if it breaches its duties or which, after the bankruptcy declaration, commits acts intended to conceal its assets or encumber the assets with ostensible obligations or which in any other manner obstructs the identification of the property of the bankruptcy estate.

7.3 Obligations under BARL's article 59

If bankruptcy with the possibility to make an arrangement has been declared, unless the court imposes on the company harsher measures, the company provides the bankruptcy judge and the court supervisor with all necessary explanations concerning the company's assets subject to the proceedings, as well as enable the court supervisor to examine the company's enterprise, in particular book accounts.

In the event the company does not perform the duties mentioned above, the bankruptcy judge imposes coercive measures for execution of non-pecuniary performances.

7.4 BARL's article 243

The company may also be requested by the trustee, court supervisor or administrator to provide explanations and to make a statement on whether the company acknowledges claims submitted by the creditors of the company.

7.5 BARL's article 373 paragraph 1 points 2-4

The prohibition provided for by BARL's article 373 may also be imposed against a person who by such person's fault:

- 1) following the bankruptcy declaration did not release or identify the assets, records, correspondence or other documents of the company, despite being obliged to do so under BARL.
- 2) following the bankruptcy declaration concealed, destroyed or encumbered the assets included in the bankruptcy estate, or
- 4) as a bankrupt in the course of the bankruptcy proceedings failed to fulfill other obligations imposed upon such person by BARL or by the decision of the court or the bankruptcy judge or has in any other manner impeded the proceedings.

7.6 Human rights

7.6.1 Constitution of the Republic of Poland

Although not directly relating to directors or other members of corporate bodies, Constitution of the Republic of Poland provides several guarantees of human rights (relating to court proceedings), which need to be observed in the law and acts of public authorities. Those guarantees include:

- 1) each person has personal inviolability and personal freedom from which a person may be deprived only on the basis and in pursuance with the law,
- 2) each person may be subjected to criminal liability only for committing an act punishable at the moment of its making,

- 3) each person is presumed innocent until such person is found guilty by the legally valid decision of the court,
- 4) each person has a right to a fair trial.

7.6.2 Code of Civil Procedure

In civil procedure (interesting in relation to the scope of this analysis) witness or person testifying as a party (for instance a person authorized to represent a company):

- 1) may refuse to testify if such a person is a spouse, ascendant, descendant or a sibling of a party or a person being an in-law of a party in the same line and degree, as well as person remaining with the party in an adoption relationship.
- 2) may refuse to answer a question if such answer would expose such person or such person's relatives (enumerated in point 1 above) to criminal liability, dishonor or severe and direct material loss or if testimony of such person would be connected with breach of material professional secret.

7.6.3 Code of Criminal Procedure

Under Polish Code of Criminal Procedure defendants and witnesses have several rights regarding their questioning. They are as follows:

- 1) Defendant has a right to testify. Defendant also has a right, without giving any reasons whatsoever, to refuse answering particular questions or refuse testifying at all. Defendant has to be informed about those rights.
- 2) Witnesses who are under duty to keep professional secret may refuse to testify about the circumstances relating to such secret, unless the court or prosecutor relieves such persons from obligation to keep such secret.
- 3) Defendant's closest person (spouse, ascendant, descendant, sibling, in-law of the same line or degree, person remaining with defendant in an adoption relationship or such person's spouse, and finally person living together with defendant) has a right to refuse testifying.
- 4) Witness, who is indicted for being an accomplice in different criminal proceedings regarding the same crime.
- 5) Witness may refuse to answer a questions if such answer would expose witness or witness' closest person to criminal liability.
- 6) Witness may request that the hearing on which such witness testifies is closed to public, if contents of witness' testimony would expose him or his closest person to dishonor.
- 7) In the event there is a substantiated danger in relation to life, health, freedom or property of significant value of witness or his closest person, an identity of a witness may be concealed by the court's or prosecutor's order.

- 8) Person remaining with the defendant in particularly with a close relationship may be released from the duty to testify or to answer questions, if such person brings a motion to be so released.

7.6.4 European Convention on Human Rights

Poland is a member state of Council of Europe and a signatory of European Convention on Human Rights.

QUESTION 8

8 Appeals and limitation periods

- (a) What limitation period, if any, will apply to actions brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3) in connection with the offences identified in question 2?
- (b) Please indicate whether an appeal is available from the decision of the lower courts.

8.1 Limitation periods

8.1.1 Criminal procedure

Under Article 101, limitation period for prosecution of misdemeanors listed in question 2 above is:

- (i) fifteen years - in the event the penalty provided by the law exceeds five years of imprisonment,
- (ii) ten years - in the event the penalty provided by the law exceeds ten years of imprisonment,
- (iii) five years - in all other misdemeanors where the penalty is three years of imprisonment or lower, from the moment of committing a crime.

8.1.2 Civil procedure

- 8.1.2.1 Under BARL's article 377, the prohibition referred to in BARL's article 373 and 374 shall not be imposed if the proceedings in this matter have not been commenced within one year of the discontinuance or closure of the bankruptcy proceedings or of the dismissal of the petition to declare bankruptcy and if the bankruptcy petition has not been presented - of the date when the company was obliged to file such petition.

8.1.2.2 Under CC's article 118, as a general rule limitation period for bringing civil claims is:

(a) in the event the action is brought in relation to business activity or for periodical performances - three years,

(b) in all other cases - ten years,

from the date on which the claim has become enforceable or, if the enforceability of the claim depends upon an act taken by the entitled person - from the date on which the claim would have become enforceable, if the entitled person had taken that act at the earliest possible time.

As for claims under CC's article 415, limitation period for bringing an action is three years from the date on which the aggrieved party became aware of the damages and a person liable to redress such damage. If the damage is a result of a felony or misdemeanor, limitation period for bringing an action is ten years from the date of committing a crime no matter when the aggrieved party became aware of the damage and a person liable to redress such damage.

8.1.2.3 Under CompC's article 297, limitation period for bringing an action under CompC's article 293 is three years from the date on which the company became aware of damage and a person liable for its redress. In every event, however, the limitation period is ten years from the date of an event causing damage.

8.1.2.4 Under CompC's article 488, limitation period for bringing an action under CompC's article 483 is three years from the date on which the company became aware of damage and a person liable for its redress. In every event, however, the limitation period is five years from the date of an event causing damage.

8.1.2.5 Under CC's article 534, limitation period for bringing actio pauliana is five years from the moment of transaction.

8.1.3 Procedure under TOA

According to TOA's article 118, it is forbidden to issue decision under article 116 in the event five years have lapsed from the end of the calendar year, when the outstanding tax obligation arose.

8.2 Appeals

Article 176 of the Constitution of the Republic of Poland provides for at least two instances in court proceedings.

Court's final decisions in Poland have the form of either postanowienie (which for the purposes of this analysis shall be referred to as ruling) or wyrok (which for the purposes of this analysis shall be referred to as judgment). The form of decision is regulated by the law, depending on, among other things, the type and nature of the proceedings in which such decision is issued.

8.3 Criminal procedure

In criminal procedure generally all final decisions of the court are in the form of judgments. Appeal from each judgment issued by the court of the first instance may be brought by the parties, entity which benefited from the crime and was ordered to return such benefit and the entity aggrieved by the crime (from the judgment conditionally discontinued).

An appeal in criminal procedure has to be brought within fourteen days from the moment of receipt of judgment with court's legal opinion.

An appeal may be brought in relation to the entire judgment or a part of it. It is possible to bring an appeal from the court's legal opinion only. However, the party appealing may base its appeal only on factual or legal findings violating its rights (to the exception of public prosecutor).

There is no right to appeal from the decisions of the court issued in the appellate procedure.

An appeal is brought in writing into the court which issued the decision in the first instance.

Polish law of criminal procedure also provides for an extraordinary means of appeal - cassation (kasacja) to the Supreme Court from legally valid judgments of the appellate courts ending the proceedings. Cassation may be brought once only in relation to each decision by the parties to the proceedings, Attorney General and Commissioner for Civil Rights Protection (Rzecznik Praw Obywatelskich).

Cassation has to be brought within 30 days from the moment of receipt of the decision with court's legal opinion.

Grounds for bringing a cassation are enumerated and include gross procedural errors and other gross infringements of the law having material influence on the court's decision.

8.4 Civil procedure

In civil procedure, in cases remaining within the scope of this analysis (question 2 above), some of the final court's decisions have the form of ruling resolving merit of the case, hence being of the same nature as judgment (as a general rule in proceedings under BARL) and some have the form of judgment.

As the case is with the criminal procedure, decisions in cases remaining within the scope of this analysis issued by the court of the first instance may be appealed against.

An appeal needs to be brought into the court which issued the decision within two weeks from the moment of receipt by the appealing party of the decision with court's legal opinion.

Also, as the case is with the criminal procedure, Polish law of civil procedure provides for an extraordinary means of appeal - the cassation claim (skarga kasacyjna) to the Supreme Court from legally valid judgments (in economic matters - if the value of the claim exceeds PLN 75,000) or holdings (regarding prohibition imposed under BARL's articles 373 and 374) may be brought by the party to the proceedings, Attorney General or Commissioner for Civil Rights Protection. The cassation claim needs to be based on either (i) infringement of the substantive law by its erroneous interpretation or inappropriate application, or (ii) infringement of the procedural law, if such infringement might have had material influence on the result of the proceedings. The cassation claim may not be based on claims relating to determination of facts or evaluation of evidence. The cassation claim needs to be brought by the party within two months from the moment of receipt of the decision with court's legal opinion to the by the party bringing the claim. The Supreme Court recognizes the cassation claim if: (i) material legal question exists in the case, (ii) there is a need to interpret legal provisions which are seriously doubtful or which are the cause of divergence in judicature of the courts, (iii) there is an invalidity of the proceedings, or (iv) the cassation claim is obviously substantiated.

8.5 Procedure under TOA

According to TOA's article 220, decision issued by tax office of the first instance may be appealed only to one higher instance. Appeal needs to be brought within 14 days from the moment of receipt of the decision to the office which issued such decision.

The final decision of the tax office of higher instance may be appealed to voivodship administrative court (wojewódzki sąd administracyjny). Final judgement of this court or a ruling ending the proceeding may be appealed by the cassation claim to the Principal Administrative Court (Naczelny Sąd Administracyjny). The cassation claim may be brought by the party, prosecutor or Commissioner for Civil Rights Protection within thirty days from receipt of the final decision of the voivodship administrative court. The cassation claim needs to be based on either (i) infringement of the substantive law by its erroneous interpretation or inappropriate application, or (ii) infringement of the procedural law, if such infringement might have had material influence on the result of the proceedings.

QUESTION 9

9. Foreign corporations

Do the legal provisions and procedures outlined above apply to both domestic and foreign corporations?

9.1 Criminal law

Pursuant to general rules of the Polish criminal law, each act committed on the territory of Poland and meeting criteria provided by the Polish law constitutes a crime. Polish criminal law is also applicable to Polish citizen who commits a crime outside Poland. Moreover, as a general rule, Polish criminal law is applicable in relation to a foreign person in the event such a person commits a crime (outside Poland) against the interests of Poland, Polish citizen, legal person or an entity without legal personality and the same crime is also recognized by the law of the country in which the act was committed.

9.2 Civil law

According to the Polish law, as a general rule, in the event civil liability results from a contractual relationship between the parties, unless the parties elected a specific law, their relationship is governed by the law of the country of their domicile. In the event civil liability arises under basis other than a contract, such liability is governed by the law of a country in which an event which is a basis for liability took place.

As for the jurisdiction of Polish courts in civil cases the general rule is that Polish courts have jurisdiction if:

- (a) the defendant is present or has a seat or domicile in Poland at the moment of being served with the statement of claim,
- (b) the defendant has its property in Poland,
- (c) the subject of the case is located in Poland or a contract executed (or is to be performed) in Poland.

9.3 Insolvency procedure

Under the Polish law there are two bases for treatment of foreign companies in relation to the bankruptcy law and procedure - one basis is provided by BARL and the other is provided by the EC Regulation on Insolvency Proceedings of 31 May, 2002 (which is applicable to Poland - a member state of the European Union) (ECReg).

ECReg is applicable to EU companies and relevant part of BARL is applicable to companies with their seats outside of the EU.

9.3.1 EC Regulations (ECReg)

According to ECReg's article 3 paragraph 1, the applicable jurisdiction for main insolvency proceedings (that is effective on all the debtor's assets and in relation to all creditors - no matter where located) is the court of the member state where the debtor's centre of main interests (COMI) is located - there is a rebuttable presumption that COMI of the debtor (being a company or an entity with legal personality) is where its registered office is located. Otherwise COMI is not defined by the ECReg, except for the reference contained in Paragraph 13 of the preamble saying that COMI should correspond to the place where the debtor conducts the administration of his interests on a regular basis and is therefore ascertainable by third parties.

ECReg's article 3 paragraph 2 provides for a different type of proceedings (other than main insolvency proceedings) - territorial/secondary proceedings, which may be initiated and conducted (in certain restricted circumstances) in the member state other than the member state where the debtor's COMI is located. The prerequisite for initiation of such procedure is that the debtor possesses an establishment (defined as any place of operations where the debtor carries out a non-transitory economic activity with human means and goods) on the territory of such other member state. The secondary insolvency proceedings are effective only in relation to the assets of the debtor located in that specific member state.

As a general rule, the law applicable to insolvency proceedings and their effects is that of the member state within the territory of which such proceedings are opened. Such applicable law determines, among other things, also the rules relating to voidness, voidability or unenforceability of legal acts detrimental to all the creditors, unless the person who benefited from an act detrimental to all the creditors provides proof that:

- the said act is subject to the law of a member state other than that of the state of the opening of proceedings, and
- that law does not allow any means of challenging that act in the relevant case.

ECReg provides the institution of recognition of insolvency proceedings. Under ECReg's article 16, any judgment opening insolvency proceedings handed down by a court of a member state which has jurisdiction pursuant to article 3 shall be recognized in all the other member states from the time that it becomes effective in the state of the opening of proceedings. Recognition of the proceedings referred to in article 3 paragraph 1 does not preclude the opening of the proceedings referred to in article 3 paragraph 2 by a court in another member state. As a general rule, the effect of the recognition is that the judgment opening the proceedings referred to in article 3 paragraph 1 produces the same effects in any other member state.

Finally, ECREg's Chapter III regulates the secondary insolvency proceedings. Under ECREg's article 27, the opening of the proceedings referred to in ECREg's article 3 paragraph 1 by a court of the member state and which is recognized in another member state (main proceedings) permits the opening in that other member state, a court of which has jurisdiction pursuant to ECREg's article 3 paragraph 2, of secondary insolvency proceedings without the debtor's insolvency being examined in that other member state. Their effects shall be restricted to the assets of the debtor situated within the territory of that other. In such circumstances, as a general rule, the law applicable to secondary proceedings is that of the member state within the territory of which the secondary proceedings are opened. The opening of secondary proceedings may be requested by:

- (a) the liquidator in the main proceedings;
- (b) any other person or authority empowered to request the opening of insolvency proceedings under the law of the member state within the territory of which the opening of secondary proceedings is requested.

9.3.2 BARL

BARL's Part II is applicable in relation to international bankruptcy proceedings, unless an international agreement to which Poland is a party or the law of an international organization of which Poland is a member provides otherwise.

As provided by BARL's article 382, the Polish courts have exclusive jurisdiction in bankruptcy cases if the debtor has the main centre of its business activities in Poland. Additionally, Polish courts have jurisdiction if the debtor conducts business activities or has its seat or assets located in Poland.

As a general rule, a creditor having a domicile or registered seat outside Poland has the same rights in the bankruptcy proceedings as a domestic creditor.

Just like ECREg, BARL regulates the institution of recognition of foreign bankruptcy proceedings. As a general rule BARL's provisions regulating commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings and bankruptcy declaration govern the proceeding for the recognition of foreign bankruptcy proceedings. Such foreign proceedings are recognized if:

- (1) the proceedings relate to a matter over which Polish courts have no exclusive jurisdiction;
- (2) the recognition is not contrary to the fundamental principles of the legal order in Poland.

On the day of recognition of foreign insolvency proceedings, by virtue of law:

- (3) the court proceedings relating to the bankrupt's assets and execution proceedings against the bankrupt's assets are stayed;

- (4) the bankrupt loses the right to manage and dispose of its assets, unless proceedings have been opened which include the possibility to make a composition arrangement and the bankrupt has retained administration.

After the foreign bankruptcy proceedings have been recognized, the foreign representative (that is a person or body appointed in the foreign bankruptcy proceedings, whose function is to administer, reorganize or liquidate the debtor's assets) may present the bankruptcy petition and to participate in the bankruptcy proceedings conducted by the Polish courts in the same way as the creditor.

If the foreign bankruptcy proceedings have been recognized, the effects of bankruptcy with regard to the bankrupt's assets situated in Poland and to the obligations which have arisen or which are to be performed in Poland, are determined pursuant to the Polish law. Ineffectiveness and challenging of the bankrupt's acts relating to assets located in Poland included in the bankruptcy estate is determined pursuant to Polish law.

Recognition of the foreign bankruptcy proceedings does not prevent a Polish court from opening bankruptcy proceedings. If, however, the main foreign bankruptcy proceedings (that is insolvency proceedings conducted in the state where the debtor has the main centre of its business activities, the rebuttable presumption being that debtor's main centre of business activities is located in the state of its registered seat) have been recognized, only proceedings relating to the assets located in Poland may be conducted in Poland (secondary bankruptcy proceedings).

BARL also recognizes ancillary foreign bankruptcy proceedings - foreign bankruptcy proceedings other than main foreign bankruptcy proceedings, conducted in the state where the debtor conducts its business activities. If ancillary foreign bankruptcy proceedings are recognized, the bankruptcy proceedings in Poland are conducted pursuant to general rules.

In the event the main foreign bankruptcy proceedings are recognized it is presumed that the debtor is insolvent.

QUESTION 10

10. Insurance

Is directors' and officers' insurance available in your jurisdictions? If so, to what extent will the availability of such insurance provide effective protection to directors against personal liability which may arise in connection with the issues raised in questions 1-9 above?

- 10.1 Although not directly regulated by the law, civil liability insurance policies designed for the members of corporate bodies are offered by major insurers on the Polish market. The premiums may be paid either by the company or by the natural person holding a position of director or other position which may be covered by an insurance policy.
- 10.2 Most often not all the persons which might be held liable in view of their position within the company may be protected by such insurance, according to the general terms of insurance of each insurer.
- 10.3 Insurance of this kind covers civil liability (generally including also costs of court representation) for damages caused to third parties and the company in the course of performing duties of member of the relevant corporate body. The insurance coverage may be extended, but it does not cover civil liability resulting from deliberate acts of the insured person.

QUESTION 11

- 11. How safe it is for directors and others to incur further credit during the twilight period?
- 11.1 As noted throughout this analysis, incurring credit on behalf of the company during the “twilight” period may bring various consequences.
- 11.2 First of all, some transactions (listed above) within this period made by the company are either ineffective ex lege or may be held ineffective by the court. Secondly, directors of the company (or other persons listed above) may be held liable, under either civil or criminal law, for the acts in their capacity of the company’s representatives.

As a result, representatives of the company have to remain extremely vigilant at all times they hold their position in the company and perform their obligations connected with their function. Obligations and duties of directors and other persons similarly liable for the well-being of the company are listed above. There are, however, some most important duties worth mentioning at this point. First of all, the directors need to react instantly in the event the grounds for bankruptcy declaration start to exist. Secondly, they have to be careful in incurring further credit and make any transactions during the period when the company is vulnerable to insolvency or when the grounds for declaring bankruptcy start to exist - each erroneous decision (in some instances even inadvertently taken) may result in the directors’ civil or criminal liability.

- 11.3 Although it is possible for the directors and others to insure themselves against civil liability connected with their function, Polish insurers generally do not provide cover from deliberate acts resulting in damages. Hence, the directors need to remember that in several instances there is no way to “take them off the hook” in relation to their liability towards the entities dealing with the company, or entities which suffered damages as a result of the company’s acts.
- 11.4 At all times directors need to keep in mind that professional and reliable legal and financial assistance rendered by specialized persons and offices is an alternative to a mere insurance policy. Specially qualified attorneys and financial advisors may not only be helpful during court and other proceedings subsequent to the company’s bankruptcy, but first and foremost they are best means of ensuring that no grounds for holding the directors liable - under either civil or criminal law - will exist.

APPENDIX

Summary of Polish bankruptcy and reorganization law and procedure

1. Introduction

- 1.1 The bankruptcy procedure applies to debtors who are entrepreneurs, where entrepreneur's status may accrue to a natural person as well as to a legal person or a business entity with legal capability, conducting business or professional activity on its own behalf.
- 1.2 Under BARL there is a single type of bankruptcy procedure which, however, may be conducted in one of two possible ways:
 - a) liquidation of the debtor's assets and pro rata distribution of bankruptcy estate funds according to statutory sequence of classes of claims, or
 - b) preservation of the debtor's business activity through a composition arrangement, which is subject to creditors' approval in a vote and final approval by the court.
- 1.3 Additionally, there is a separate reorganization procedure in the event there is a threat of insolvency. The goal of such procedure is to open the way for a composition arrangement between the debtor and his creditors.

2. Insolvency

- 2.1 Bankruptcy is declared in relation to a debtor who has become insolvent.
- 2.2 Insolvency of the debtor takes place if the debtor fails to perform its due liabilities, irrespective of their pecuniary or non-pecuniary character (insolvency test).
- 2.3 Moreover, a debtor being a legal person or a business entity with legal capability is also deemed insolvent when its liabilities exceed the value of its assets, even though the debtor duly performs those liabilities (balance sheet test).

3. Bankruptcy procedure

- 3.1 The bankruptcy procedure may be initiated (by presenting a bankruptcy petition) by a debtor, pursuant to his obligation to do so within two weeks from the date on which grounds for bankruptcy declaration started to exist, or voluntarily by any of his creditors. The bankruptcy petition indicates whether the petitioner applies for a bankruptcy with liquidation of bankruptcy estate or with a composition arrangement. Once the court accepts the bankruptcy petition, the bankruptcy is declared.

- 3.2 In the event it is determined that under a composition arrangement the creditors are likely to be satisfied to a higher degree than they would have been satisfied as a result of bankruptcy procedure comprising of the liquidation of the debtor's assets, the court declares bankruptcy with the possibility to make a composition arrangement. Such decision, however, may not be undertaken if, in view of the debtor's previous conduct, it is not certain that the arrangement will be performed. Moreover, if an initial creditors' meeting was convened and adopted a resolution concerning the method of conducting the procedure, the court should respect such resolution unless it is contrary to law.
- 3.3 The court may modify its decision as to the bankruptcy procedure's direction (that is liquidation or composition agreement), provided that grounds substantiating such modification were disclosed in the course of the procedure.
- 3.4 In case of composition arrangement, for the purpose of voting on composition arrangement, the bankruptcy judge prepares lists of creditors encompassing separate classes of creditors' interests:
- a) creditors entitled to receivables arising under employment relationship and farmers entitled to receivables arising under agreements for the supply of the products from their own farms,
 - b) creditors whose claims are secured by in rem rights,
 - c) creditors who are shareholders or stockholders of the bankrupt, and
 - d) other creditors.

Composition agreement is adopted if it is voted for by the majority of creditors from each of the above lists, who hold jointly at least two thirds of the aggregate value of claims. If the required majority of votes is not attained with respect to one of the lists of creditors, the composition arrangement is adopted if the majority of creditors from that list which voted against the composition arrangement will be satisfied under the composition arrangement to a degree not less beneficial than in the event of conducting bankruptcy procedure comprising of the liquidation of the bankrupt's assets.

Subsequently, composition arrangement is confirmed by the bankruptcy judge.

If the composition arrangement is not adopted, the court immediately converts the decision declaring bankruptcy with the possibility to make an arrangement into the decision declaring bankruptcy by liquidation of the bankrupt's assets and the court appoints the trustee of the bankruptcy estate. In such circumstances it is inadmissible to allow once again for the adoption of the composition arrangement.

The composition arrangement adopted by the meeting of creditors is approved by the court.

The composition arrangement is binding upon all creditors whose claims are, under BARL, included in the composition arrangement, even if not recorded on the list. However, the composition arrangement is not binding upon those creditors, whose existence the bankrupt intentionally concealed and who have not participated in the procedure.

4. Effects of bankruptcy declaration with respect to the bankrupt's obligations

On the day of issuance of bankruptcy declaration the bankrupt's property becomes the bankruptcy estate which is to satisfy the claims of the bankrupt's creditors.

4.1 Bankruptcy declaration - possibility of composition arrangement

Court supervisor (nadzorca sądowy) (in the event the bankrupt retained a right to manage its entire property) or administrator (zarządca) (in the event the bankrupt was deprived of a right to manage at least a part of its property) is appointed.

As a general principle, neither the bankrupt nor the administrator may render performances which are included in the composition agreement.

4.2. Bankruptcy declaration - liquidation of the bankrupt's assets

Trustee (syndyk) is appointed.

Pecuniary obligations of the bankrupt, not yet payable, become payable on the date of issuance of bankruptcy declaration. Non-pecuniary material obligations, on the date of issuance of bankruptcy declaration, are converted into pecuniary obligations and become payable even though their performance date has not yet come.

As a general rule, the set-off of the bankrupt's claim against the claim of the creditor is admissible if both claims existed on the date of issuance of the bankruptcy declaration, even if one of them was not yet payable. Creditor intending to exercise the set-off right needs to make a relevant declaration no later than at the time of filing the claim.

5. Ineffectiveness of and challenging the bankrupt's transactions

Please see answers to questions 1 and 4.

6. Order of satisfaction of unsecured claims - liquidation of the bankrupt's assets

6.1 Claims and amounts subject to satisfaction from the bankruptcy estate funds fall into four classes of priority (higher class having priority over lower class):

- a) class one - costs of bankruptcy procedure, retirement, pension and illness security contributions of the employees, amounts arising under employment relationship, farmers' receivables arising under agreements for the supply of products from their own farms for the recent two years, disease-related pensions, workers' compensation, disability or death benefits, alimonies payable by the bankrupt, amounts resulting from the acts of the trustee or administrator, amounts resulting from reciprocal agreements concluded by the bankrupt prior to issuance of the bankruptcy declaration, the performance of which has been requested by the trustee or administrator, amounts resulting from unjust enrichment of the bankruptcy estate, as well as amounts resulting from the acts of the bankrupt performed upon the consent of the court supervisor,
 - b) class two – taxes, other public payments, social security contributions due for the year preceding the date of declaration of bankruptcy, not subject to satisfaction within class one, together with due interest and execution cost,
 - c) class three – other claims if they are not subject to satisfaction within class four, together with the interest due for the year preceding the date of issuance of bankruptcy declaration, liquidated damages, costs of the procedure and execution,
 - d) class four - interest not included in the classes of higher priority, to be satisfied in the order in which the principal amount is to be satisfied, as well as court and administrative fines and amounts resulting from donations and legacies.
- 6.2. The claim acquired after the issuance of the bankruptcy declaration by way of an assignment or endorsement is subject to satisfaction within class three, provided that it is not subject to satisfaction within class four.
- 6.3. The trustee prepares and submits to the bankruptcy judge a plan which is a basis for the distribution of the bankruptcy estate funds. The bankruptcy judge may amend the plan or may order the trustee to amend the plan as instructed.

7. Claims secured by in rem rights

BARL introduces a separate distribution regime relating to proceeds obtained from sale of encumbered assets. As a general rule, claims secured by a mortgage, pledge, registered pledge, tax lien, maritime mortgage, as well as rights expiring under BARL and personal rights and claims encumbering the real property, are satisfied from the proceeds of the sale of encumbered asset, in an amount reduced by the costs connected with the sale. After covering the costs of sale, the proceeds are divided between secured creditors with respect to their priorities.

In the case of a sale of an encumbered real property or sea vessel registered with the register of vessels, three classes of claims will have priority over the claim of secured creditor:

- a) alimony claims,
- b) remuneration claims of the employees of the bankrupt working on a sold real property or sea vessel,
- c) disease-related pensions, workers' compensations and disability or death benefits.

8. Reorganization procedure

- 8.1 Reorganization procedure is initiated voluntarily by an entrepreneur threatened (but not yet insolvent) with insolvency.
- 8.2 The entrepreneur submits to the court a statement on opening reorganization procedure and a reorganization plan.
- 8.3 The main goal of the reorganization procedure is to restore to the entrepreneur an ability to compete on the market.
- 8.4 The obligations of the debtor are restructured by way of a composition arrangement adopted at the meeting of creditors which needs to be voted for by the majority of creditors. Thereafter, the arrangement is approved by the court

RUSSIA

QUESTION 1

1. The start and duration of the “twilight” period

What is the length of the period ending with formal insolvency proceedings during which transactions entered into by a company are vulnerable to attack or are liable to give rise to personal liability on the part of directors and/or others involved in the management of the company?

1.1 Introduction

The insolvency legislation in Russia consists of the Civil Code of the Russian Federation (the “Civil Code”) and three laws:

- (a) Federal Law No. 127-FZ on Insolvency (Bankruptcy) of 26 October 2002 (the “Insolvency Law”), which is the principal legislation on insolvency in Russia.
- (b) Federal Law No. 40-FZ on Insolvency (Bankruptcy) of Credit Organisations of 25 February 1999 (the “Bank Insolvency Law”).
- (c) Federal Law No. 122-FZ on Specifics of Insolvency (Bankruptcy) of Natural Monopolies of 24 June 1999 (repealed by the Insolvency Law with effect from 1 July 2009).

Provisions regarding some areas of insolvency procedures and liability of officers and third parties are also included in the Criminal Code of the Russian Federation (the “Criminal Code”); the Administrative Offences Code of the Russian Federation (the “Administrative Offences Code”); the Arbitrazh Procedure Code and in Federal Law of the Russian Federation No. 208-FZ on Joint Stock Companies of 26 December 1995 (the “JSC Law”) and Federal Law of the Russian Federation No. 14-FZ on Limited Liability Companies of 8 February 1998 (the “LLC Law”). The insolvency of, and bankruptcy proceedings applicable to, credit organisations are also regulated by the directives of the Russian Central Bank.

Bankruptcy cases in Russia are heard by “arbitrazh courts” which, for ease of reference, we refer to as “bankruptcy courts”. The High Arbitrazh Court, which is the supreme arbitrazh court in Russia, has issued a number of interpretations with respect to various aspects of insolvency legislation and procedure.

1.2 Brief description of insolvency procedures in Russia

According to the Insolvency Law, insolvency proceedings consist of one or more of the following stages:

- (a) supervision (nablyudeniye), a preliminary stage of insolvency proceedings intended to determine the debtor's solvency, secure its assets, draw up a register of creditors' claims and convene the first creditors' meeting;
- (b) financial rehabilitation (finansovoye ozdorovleniye), a stage designed to offer the debtor the chance to obtain an extension of time to meet its liabilities with the help of financial support by a third party;
- (c) external management (vneshneye upravleniye), a stage, in which the current ownership structure of the debtor is maintained pending its efforts to regain solvency;
- (d) liquidation (konkursnoye proizvodstvo), i.e. winding-up; and
- (e) entry into a voluntary arrangement (mirovoye soglasheniye), which does not, strictly speaking, constitute a separate stage of the insolvency proceedings, but rather the successful outcome of one of the other stages.

Russian bankruptcy laws focus primarily on various procedures to make the debtor solvent again. They contain very few provisions on the liability of directors and others involved in the management of the company, and very general provisions on challenges which may be brought against transactions entered into by a company which consequently becomes insolvent.

1.3 “Twilight” period

1.3.1 Determining the “twilight” period

Under Russian law the “twilight” period is deemed to begin when a company meets the insolvency criteria set out in the Insolvency Law. Such period ends with the filing of a bankruptcy petition. The “twilight period” entails certain duties of the chief executive officer of the debtor, which are discussed below.

The insolvency criteria envisaged by the Insolvency Law for legal entities consist in the (a) inability to satisfy a claim or claims in an aggregate amount of at least 100,000 Roubles (approx. US$ 3,000) (b) within three months of such claim or claims maturing.

Where a company meets these criteria:

- (i) the chief executive officer (or any other person acting in the name of the debtor without power of attorney) (the “CEO”) must inform the founders (shareholders/participants) of the company (or the owner in the case of a unitary enterprise¹) that the company faces bankruptcy (meets insolvency criteria);

¹ Unitary enterprise is a state or municipally owned entity that does not have a right of ownership over the assets that are provided to it by the owner. See Law on State and Municipal Unitary Enterprises No. 161-FZ dated 14 November 2002.

- (ii) the founders (shareholders/participants) of the company (or the owner in case of a unitary enterprises) are required by law to take measures to return the debtor to solvency;

These two procedures are referred to as “bankruptcy prevention” measures but they essentially aim to prevent the commencement of formal bankruptcy proceedings.

1.3.2 Duty of the CEO to inform the shareholders / participants

Although such a duty is envisaged by the Insolvency Law, there are no specific provisions relating to the liability of the CEO for failing to inform the shareholders/participants of the company that it meets the insolvency criteria. The means of communication are not established and it is unclear how this duty must be discharged in the event the company has a large number of shareholders/participants. The Insolvency Law contains a general provision that the debtor's CEO or founder, or the owner of property (in case of a unitary enterprise) are liable for damages arising as a result of the breach by such persons of the Insolvency Law.

1.3.3 Duty of the founders (shareholders / participants)

If the company encounters financial problems the founders (shareholders/participants) of the company are to take measures to make the debtor solvent again. The Insolvency Law does not specify which measures need to be undertaken and does not impose any liability for failure to act. However, the Insolvency Law provides that these measures can be undertaken by the creditors or third parties with the debtor's consent.

The only measure expressly envisaged by the Insolvency Law is rehabilitation prior to court proceedings (dosudebnaya sanatsiya). Rehabilitation is financial assistance to the debtor in an amount sufficient to satisfy monetary obligations, to make mandatory payments (e.g. taxes) and to restore the debtor's solvency. In the event financial assistance is provided, the debtor or other persons may assume obligations for the benefit of the persons providing such financial assistance.

1.4 Duty to file a bankruptcy petition

The Insolvency Law provides for the obligation of the CEO of the debtor (who may also be a member of the board of directors) to petition a bankruptcy court in the following instances:

- (a) the settlement of claims of one or more creditors will mean the debtor is unable to perform its payment obligations, including mandatory payments², to all creditors;
- (b) the shareholders or owners of property of a debtor that is a unitary enterprise (or those authorised by them) take a decision to file such a petition;

² Debts owed to the state budget or otherwise to the Russian Federation.

- (c) the enforcement of claims against the debtor will make it significantly difficult or impossible for the debtor to continue operations;
- (d) in the course of a solvent liquidation of the debtor, it emerges that the debtor has insufficient assets to satisfy its creditors' claims in full; or
- (e) in other cases provided by the Insolvency Law.

In certain cases such petition should be filed by the CEO of the debtor, the liquidator and the other members of the liquidation commission or by the CEO of the debtor and the founder (shareholder or participant) of the debtor (see Section 3).

The debtor's bankruptcy petition is to be filed within one month from the date any of the above events occurs. It must be filed with a bankruptcy court in writing and must be signed by the chief executive officer (director) of the debtor or by a person authorised under the debtor's foundation documents to file petitions requesting that the debtor be declared bankrupt.

The following information is to be indicated in the debtor's petition:

- (1) The name of the bankruptcy court with which the petition is being filed;
- (2) Total amount of creditors' claims arising from monetary obligations not disputed by the debtor;
- (3) Total of debts owed as compensation for harm to citizens' life and health, as wages/salaries and severance benefits payable to the debtor's employees, and the sum of royalties payable under copyright agreements;
- (4) Total of debts relating to mandatory payments;
- (5) An explanation of the inability to meet the creditors' claims in full or of significant aggravation of economic condition in the event of levy of execution;
- (6) Details of claims against the debtor, writs of execution and other documents filed for the purpose of direct debiting of funds from the debtor's accounts and accepted by courts of general jurisdiction, bankruptcy courts and arbitral tribunals;
- (7) Details of the property owned by the debtor, including amounts of money and accounts receivable;
- (8) The numbers of the debtor's accounts in banks and other credit organisations and the addresses of the banks and other credit organisations;
- (9) The name and address of the self-regulating organisation, which should be approved by the bankruptcy court as an interim administrator;

- (10) The amount of remuneration payable to the court-appointed administrator;
- (11) List of the documents attached.

Failure to file the petition results in secondary liability of persons in whom the duty is vested to file for bankruptcy. Such secondary liability covers the new debts arising after the expiration of the one-month period mentioned earlier and potentially all unsatisfied financial obligations of the debtor.

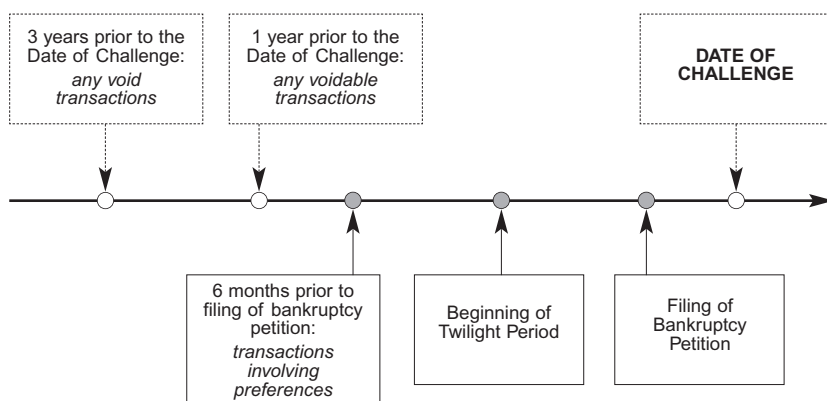

The bankruptcy petition can be also filed by a creditor and with respect to mandatory payments by certain authorised government agencies.

Before a creditor can commence insolvency proceedings, it must (1) obtain a court judgment against the debtor in an amount satisfying the relevant insolvency criteria and (2) demonstrate that it has sought and failed to achieve execution of that judgment for a period of 30 days after the date of such judgment. In the case of a bankruptcy petition by an authorised government agency, the 30-day period runs from the date on which such agency took a decision to seize the debtor's assets to satisfy the mandatory payments or the date that government agency delivered an enforcement order to the court of bailiffs.

1.5 Challenging transactions in bankruptcy

According to Russian law, transactions entered into by the debtor (i.e. insolvent entity) prior to the commencement of insolvency proceedings may be challenged on various grounds (see Section 4). It should be noted that certain preferential transactions may be challenged even if they were entered into before the "twilight period".

This may be illustrated by the following diagram:

QUESTION 2

2. Actions potentially giving rise to liability for directors

- (a) In respect of which acts during the “twilight” period may a director be held personally liable or which may otherwise have adverse consequences for him?
- (b) In relation to each act identified in (a) above:
 - (i) is any resulting liability against a director civil, criminal or both?;
 - (ii) can a director be made personally liable in respect of the whole loss caused to the company or the deficit to creditors?;
 - (iii) will liability attach to individual directors in proportion to their specific involvement?;
 - (iv) is there a specified period before commencement of a subsequent insolvency procedure within which the relevant act must have been undertaken in order for liability to attach to a director?; and
 - (v) what defences, if any, will be available in relation to each offence?

2.1 Overview

Russian law does not distinguish between executive and non-executive directors when providing for their obligations or liabilities. All members of the board of directors (supervisory board)³ are elected by the general shareholders' meeting, have the same responsibilities and are subject to the same scope of liability. The members of the board of directors elect the chairman of the board of directors by a majority vote. However, as a matter of Russian law the chairman of the board of directors is not subject to a higher level of liability than the other members of the board of directors.

The JSC Law introduced a concept of “independent” director for the purposes of approval of “interested party” transactions⁴ in a company with more than 1000 shareholders. No additional responsibilities are envisaged for “independent” directors.

³ Under Russian law the terms “board of directors” and “supervisory board” are synonymous.

As a matter of Russian law the management board is a collegiate executive body of the company responsible for the day-to-day activities of the company. Members of the management board may also serve on the board of directors. However, they may not comprise more than 25% of the board of directors. Russian law does not provide for any special or additional liability of members of the management board, regardless of whether they also serve on the board of directors.

2.2 Civil liability of members of the board of directors

2.2.1 General principles

A person who represents the entity by virtue of law or foundation documents must act in good faith and reasonably in the best interests of the company. Unless otherwise provided by the law or by specific agreement directors have an obligation to compensate the losses caused by them to the company⁵.

Members of a company's board of directors are jointly and severally liable to the company for damages incurred by the company due to their improper actions or inaction for which they are at fault (with the exception of those members of the board of directors who voted against the resolution that caused damages to the company)⁶.

For a member of the board of directors to be liable, damages must be incurred by the company as a result of the board member's failure to comply, due to his/her fault, with the requirement that he/she should act reasonably and in good faith when exercising his/her rights and fulfilling his/her obligations.

A person is deemed to be at fault if under that degree of care and circumspection which was required of that person according to the nature of the obligation and the conditions in the course of business, such a person did not take all possible measures for proper performance of the obligation⁷. The damages are to be compensated in full, including loss of profit.

At the same time, Russian law does not provide for direct liability of directors for undervalue transactions and preferences. However, certain transactions entailing preferences may be challenged (see 4.3.2 below).

The civil liability of the CEO, owners of the company and, potentially, its directors is further described in Section 3.

⁵ Article 53 of the Civil Code.

⁶ Article 71 of the JSC Law and Article 44 of the LLC Law.

⁷ Article 401 of the Civil Code.

2.2.2 Liability for insolvency (bankruptcy) of a company

(a) The Civil Code provisions (CC)

The Civil Code⁸ provides that, in the event of the bankruptcy of a company, resulting from the actions of a “persons who have the right to give instructions binding for such company” or by persons who “otherwise have the possibility to determine the actions of the company” (the “Controlling Person”), such persons can bear subsidiary liability for the obligations of that company in the event such company has insufficient assets.

While these provisions of the Civil Code are mainly focused on the founders, shareholders and principal (controlling) company of the insolvent company, the actions of members of the board of directors may also fall within such definition.

The liability of a Controlling Person is further described in Section 3.

(b) The Limited Liability Company Law provisions (LLC)

The LLC Law contains provisions very similar to those of the Civil Code. If the bankruptcy of a limited liability company is occasioned by its participants or other persons who have the right to give mandatory instructions binding for such company or otherwise determine the actions of that limited liability company such persons may bear subsidiary liability for the obligations of that company⁹.

(c) The Joint Stock Company Law provisions (JSC)

In contrast with the above laws, the JSC Law contains provisions that appear to restrict considerably the scope of potential liability borne by the members of the board of directors of joint stock companies. The JSC Law imposes a restricted standard of potential liability to those situations where such members “have used their controlling right with the purpose of the company's taking an action knowing in advance that such action would entail the company's insolvency (bankruptcy)”¹⁰. As a matter of constitutional law, in the event of inconsistency between the JSC Law and the Civil Code the latter should prevail, and the interaction of the relevant provisions of the Civil Code and the JSC Law could be the subject of dispute in the event of legal action with respect to their applicability.

⁸ Article 56 of the Civil Code.

⁹ Article 3 of the LLC Law.

¹⁰ Article 3 of the JSC Law.

2.3 General criminal liability of members of the board of directors

2.3.1 General principles

The provisions relating to criminal liability do not refer specifically to members of the board of directors. Given that violations prohibited by criminal legislation are most likely to occur in the context of day-to-day management of the company, the general director of the company (who is, by definition, the chief executive officer of the company) is the person most likely to incur liability.

Nevertheless, an ordinary member of the board of directors could also be subject to criminal liability as an individual performing management functions in a company. For example, this can occur if a member of the board of directors directly and knowingly decides on or takes any action which is prohibited under the applicable criminal legislation.

Below is a summary of the main provisions of Russian criminal law applicable to members of the board of directors of a company. These provisions apply during the “twilight” period as well.

2.3.2 General criminal liability applicable to members of the board of directors of a company

The Criminal Code¹¹ provides, inter alia, that a person performing management functions in a company who uses his position in violation of the law and counter to the interests of the company and causes damage to the company faces liability ranging from a fine to imprisonment. If the actions of such person damaged only the interests of the company (and the company is not a state or municipal enterprise), only the company may initiate prosecution of the person.

2.3.3 Criminal and administrative liability for money-laundering or other legalisation of unlawfully obtained property

The performance of financial operations and transactions with unlawfully obtained money and other property (money-laundering) is subject to a fine or, in certain cases, imprisonment. The same actions involving substantial amounts are punishable by imprisonment together with possible confiscation of personal property¹². A member of the board of directors of a company may be subject to this liability if he is adjudged guilty of such activities by a court.

2.3.4 Criminal liability for illegally obtaining and disclosing commercial, tax or banking secrets

The Criminal Code¹³ provides for criminal liability for illegal collection, disclosure or use of commercial, tax or banking secrets without the consent of the owner of such secrets by a person who is informed of such secrets or who becomes aware of such secrets while being employed with that company. A member of the board of directors may qualify for criminal liability under this article. The punishment includes, inter alia, a fine and imprisonment.

¹¹ Article 201 of the Criminal Code.

¹² Articles 174 and 174.1 of the Criminal Code.

¹³ Article 183 of the Criminal Code.

2.3.5 Criminal liability for illegal gains

A director performing management functions in a company (i.e. a director who is also a company's executive) may be subject to criminal liability for illegal receipt of money, securities, other assets or illegal use of services from a third party with the aim of performing actions (inaction) in favour of such third party¹⁴.

2.3.6 Criminal liability for unlawful business activity

A member of the board of directors of a company may be held liable if due to his fault the company engages in entrepreneurial activity without a licence or registration or in violation of the registration or licensing requirements¹⁵. Sanctions may include a fine, community service or imprisonment.

2.4 General administrative liability of members of the board of directors

2.4.1 Administrative liability for money-laundering

There is administrative liability for violation of the money-laundering legislation, in particular, for violation of the rules on recording, storage and disclosure of information about operations which are subject to mandatory control and the rules on internal control in a company¹⁶. A member of the board of directors may qualify for administrative liability under this article. The sanction for this offence is a fine or suspension of activities for up to 90 days.

2.4.2 Administrative liability for business activity without a license or registration

A member of the board of directors of a company may be held liable if the company engages in entrepreneurial activity without a licence or registration or in violation of the registration or licensing requirements¹⁷. The basic sanction for this offence is an administrative fine.

2.5 Criminal and administrative liability for illegal actions before and during the bankruptcy

2.5.1 Criminal liability

The Criminal Code imposes criminal liability for the actions in anticipation of bankruptcy as well as for the actions taken during bankruptcy of a company.

In particular, the Criminal Code imposes criminal liability for the following:

- (a) deliberate bankruptcy¹⁸, i.e. taking actions (or omission to act) by the CEO or a founder of the company knowingly entailing its inability to satisfy in full creditors' claims;
- (b) fraudulent bankruptcy,¹⁹ i.e. the CEO or a founder (owner) of the company knowingly makes fraudulent public declaration of bankruptcy of that company;

¹⁴ Article 204 of the Criminal Code.

¹⁵ Article 171 of the Criminal Code.

¹⁶ Article 15.27 of the Administrative Offences Code.

¹⁷ Article 14.1 of the Administrative Offences Code.

¹⁸ Article 196 of the Criminal Code.

¹⁹ Article 197 of the Criminal Code.

- (c) unlawful actions during bankruptcy proceedings that fall under three categories:
- (i) concealing property, property rights or liabilities; withholding information on property, its size, location or any other information on property, property rights or liabilities; transferring property to others, alienating or destroying property and concealing, destroying or falsifying accounting documents; if such actions have been taken in the presence of signs of the company's bankruptcy.
 - (ii) the unlawful satisfaction of claims of certain creditors out of the company's property done by the CEO or a founder (participant) of that company knowingly to the detriment of other creditors; if such actions have been taken in the presence of signs of the bankruptcy of that company.
 - (iii) the unlawful actions aimed at impeding the activity of a court-appointed administrator or a temporary administration of a credit organisation, including evading transfer of the documents necessary for performance of their duties or the debtor's property or refusal to do same, where the management power of the debtor's CEO is vested in a court administrator or a temporary administration of a credit organisation respectively.

For such actions to constitute a crime, substantial damage must be caused.

In relation to the category of criminal liability referred to in paragraph (c) (ii) above, the CEO or a founder (participant) of the company can be criminally liable if there is: (i) unlawful satisfaction of a claim; (ii) detriment to other creditors in the form of substantial damage and; (iii) presence of signs of the debtor's bankruptcy.

(a) "Unlawful satisfaction"

The meaning of "unlawful satisfaction" is not clear. One interpretation is the satisfaction of certain creditors in violation of the order of priorities established by the Insolvency Law. Another interpretation is a payment made in violation of the law (e.g. a payment made from an account under arrest, or a payment under an invalid transaction).

(b) "Substantial damage"

Arguably any payment reducing the amount of assets available for distribution to other creditors can result in "substantial damage". Such other creditors can argue that the difference between what they have received and what they would have received if a payment had not been made represents their losses (which could be considered by a court as substantial).

(c) "Signs of the debtor's bankruptcy"

The signs of bankruptcy are described in 1.3 above (i.e. a legal entity is unable to meet claims within three months of them becoming due.)

The category of actions mentioned in paragraph (c) (iii) will entail criminal liability only where the management power of the debtor's CEO is vested in a court administrator or a temporary administration of a credit organisation.

If committed during the "twilight" period such actions give rise to the liability of the CEO or owner of a company. The provisions of the Criminal Code are likely to apply to members of the board of directors as well.

The criminal offences mentioned above are subject to a fine; public or correctional works, retention or an imprisonment and fine.

2.5.2 Administrative liability

The Administrative Offences Code also imposes liability with respect to bankruptcy²⁰. This includes the following offences:

- (a) fraudulent bankruptcy, i.e. the CEO or a founder (owner) of the company knowingly makes a fraudulent public declaration of bankruptcy of that company;
- (b) deliberate bankruptcy, i.e. the CEO or owner of the company takes actions (or omits to take actions) wilfully causing or contributing to insolvency;
- (c) impeding the activity of a temporary administration of a credit organisation by the CEO or other directors of that credit organisation.
- (d) unlawful actions during bankruptcy, already mentioned above (see 2.5.1), provided that it does not involve criminally punishable acts;
- (e) the acceptance by a creditor of the unlawful satisfaction from an insolvent debtor knowing of its preference and its ability to prejudice other creditors; if such actions have been taken in the presence of the signs of the debtor's bankruptcy;
- (f) failure by a court-appointed administrator or a head of the temporary administration of a credit organisation to perform their obligations provided for in the Insolvency Law; provided that it does not involve criminally punishable acts; and
- (g) failure to file a debtor's bankruptcy petition by the debtor's CEO in the cases provided for in the Insolvency Law.

Liability for the above offences can take the form of an administrative fine or a disqualification.

²⁰ Articles 14.12 and 14.13 of the Administrative Offences Code.

Sanctions for civil, criminal and administrative offences connected with bankruptcy are further described in Section 6.

2.5.3 Summary

Although the general nature of administrative and criminal offences is similar these offences should be differentiated. The fundamental difference is the scope of the damage caused by an offence. While the Administrative Offences Code does not specify the amount or scope of the damages caused by an offence, it contains a provision that an offence qualifies as an administrative one if it does not involve a criminally punishable act. The Criminal Code provides that illegal actions during bankruptcy which caused substantial damage may result in criminal liability. The degree of damage is, therefore, the main distinctive criterion.

With respect to fraudulent and deliberate bankruptcy both the Administrative Offences and the Criminal Codes imply that there must be a direct intent in committing such offences.

2.6 Defences

2.6.1 Defences in civil proceedings

Under the JSC Law and the LLC Law members of the board of directors are to act in the interests of the company, exercise their rights and carry out their duties reasonably and in good faith. According to Russian legal doctrine, acting in good faith means acting without intent to cause damages to another person and without negligence with respect to potential damage that can be caused. Reasonable actions imply actions of a person with normal levels of judgment and intelligence in a specific situation.

Members of the board of directors that are able to prove to court that they were acting within a reasonable level of commercial risk for the benefit of the company are not likely to be held liable for damages caused to the company by their actions during the “twilight” period.

2.6.2 Defences in criminal proceedings

Russian criminal law does not provide for special defences related to bankruptcy proceedings and potential claims against the CEO, directors or creditors. However, the Criminal Code specifies a list of general defences (circumstances in which criminal liability may not be imposed). These are unlikely to apply to crimes in relation to bankruptcy.

2.6.3 Defences in administrative proceedings

The Administrative Offences Code provides that administrative liability may not be imposed under the following circumstances:

- (a) extreme necessity, where legally protected interests are harmed in order to remove a specific danger to the acting person or his/her rights, rights of other individuals or to protect the general public; and
- (b) insanity.

When an offence is insignificant, the body responsible for resolving the case relating to the offence has discretion to “relieve” the person of the administrative liability. As in the case with the criminal liability, this is unlikely to apply to the offences relating to bankruptcy.

QUESTION 3

3. Other persons involved with the company's affairs who may become liable in respect of their actions during the “twilight” period

- (a) In addition to the formally appointed directors of the company, can others be held liable in respect of the company's activities during the “twilight” period if the company were to become subject to a formal insolvency procedure?
- (b) In respect of which acts may other persons be held liable and to what extent does the liability of third parties differ from that for directors identified in question 2 above?
- (c) Will liability be limited to that resulting from involvement with a particular transaction or more generally in relation to the overall loss suffered by creditors?

3.1 Overview

Under Russian law there are three categories of persons which may be held liable for the debts of an insolvent entity:

- (a) Persons required to file for bankruptcy;
- (b) Controlling persons; and
- (c) Parent company.

3.2 Liability of persons required to file for bankruptcy

The law makes it compulsory for the following persons to file for bankruptcy in circumstances set out below:

- (1) the CEO of the debtor if (i) satisfaction of claims of one or more creditors results in the debtor's inability to perform in full its monetary obligations to other creditors, (ii) the shareholders/participants of the debtor decide to file for bankruptcy; or (iii) levy of execution against the debtor's property would impede significantly the conduct by the debtor of its business activity or could make it impossible;
- (2) the CEO of the debtor, the members of the liquidation commission of the debtor if, in the course of a solvent liquidation, it emerges that the debtor is not able to satisfy the claims of its creditors in full;
- (3) the liquidator, if the value of the debtor's assets is insufficient to satisfy the claims of its creditors in full; and
- (4) the CEO of the debtor, founder (shareholder or participant) and owner of the property (in case of a unitary enterprise debtor), in the course of a solvent liquidation, when the decision to liquidate the debtor has been taken, but the liquidation commission has not yet been established, and it emerges that the debtor has insufficient assets to satisfy in full the claims of its creditors.

The persons mentioned in (1) and (2) above must file for bankruptcy within one month of the relevant circumstances arising: No time period is specified for filing a bankruptcy petition under (3) and (4) above.

Should the persons mentioned above fail to file for bankruptcy, they can bear secondary liability for new debts arising after the date when the petition should have been filed and potentially for all unsatisfied financial obligations (i.e. (i) monetary obligations based on civil law, and (ii) the mandatory payments.

3.3 Liability of controlling persons

Under Russian law a controlling person can in certain circumstances be liable for the debts of the company controlled by such person. Controlling persons include founders (shareholders/participants), shareholders who are members of the management board or board of directors and the CEO.

While the principal focus of the Civil Code is on the founders and shareholders of the debtor, the actions of members of the board of directors (both executive and non-executive directors) and the CEO also fall within the wording of the relevant provisions of the Civil Code. The Insolvency Law expressly refers to the CEO as a Controlling Person.

The Civil Code and the Insolvency Law provide that, if bankruptcy (insolvency) of a legal entity was caused due to the fault of a controlling person of the company, the assets of which are insufficient to pay its debts, such person can bear secondary liability for the obligations of such legal entity. The same provision is envisaged by the LLC Law.

In contrast, the JSC Law contains provisions that appear to restrict considerably the scope of potential liability borne by the controlling person of a joint stock company by adding a requirement of knowledge that bankruptcy would result. The JSC Law imposes potential liability only in those situations where such persons “have used their [controlling] right with intent that the company takes an action, knowing in advance that such action would result in its bankruptcy”.

3.4 Liability of the parent company

Under Russian law²¹ a company able to determine the activities of another company (the “subsidiary”) is considered to be a parent company (“parent company”) of such subsidiary. This ability to control can derive from the parent company’s shareholding in the subsidiary, or a provision in the charter of the subsidiary or an agreement entered into between the parent company and its subsidiary. If the bankruptcy (insolvency) of the subsidiary has been caused by its parent company, the latter can bear secondarily liability for the debts of its subsidiary.

The JSC Law provides that if the bankruptcy of a subsidiary has been caused by its parent company, the latter bears secondary liability for the debts of its subsidiary only if the parent company has deliberately exercised its right (set out in the charter of the subsidiary or in the agreement with the subsidiary) or its ability to give mandatory instructions to the subsidiary knowing that its instruction will result in the bankruptcy of the subsidiary. This liability is limited to situations where the parent company has actual knowledge that bankruptcy of the subsidiary would follow.

The LLC Law contains a similar provision, that if the bankruptcy of a subsidiary was caused by its parent company, the latter bears secondary liability for the debts of the subsidiary if its assets are insufficient to pay its debts.

The Civil Code does not provide for reasons or the degree of fault sufficient to trigger the above rules. The inquiry is likely to be very fact-specific in each case.

A parent company would also qualify as the controlling person discussed above.

²¹ Article 105 of the Civil Code.

QUESTION 4

4. Counterparties dealing with the company during the twilight period

- (a) From the point of view of a counterparty dealing with the company during the twilight period, what are the potential heads of challenge which may lead to transactions with the company being set aside?
- (b) What defences, if any, to the areas of vulnerability identified above will be available to a counter-party seeking to protect a transaction from being attacked?

4.1 Overview

Russian law provides for a number of grounds on which transactions entered into by an entity facing insolvency may be challenged. However, the Insolvency Law contains provisions that allow invalidation of a debtor's transactions concluded not only during the "twilight" period (see Section 1), but before this period commences.

Under the Insolvency Law after commencement of bankruptcy proceedings a court-appointed bankruptcy administrator²² can challenge transactions and decisions of the debtor at any stage of bankruptcy proceedings. Since no limitation periods are envisaged with respect to these powers of the court-appointed administrators, the general principles of the Civil Code with respect to voidable transactions referred to below apply²³.

4.2 General principles in respect of void and voidable transactions

The Civil Code provides that a transaction can be invalid if it is either a "void" or "voidable" transaction. An invalid transaction does not create legal rights and obligations and requires reciprocal restitution. A void transaction is void from the moment of its inception irrespective of whether it is recognised as such by the court. In contrast, a voidable transaction can be declared invalid only by a court.

The Civil Code provides that, as a general rule, transactions inconsistent with law, entered into contrary to public policy etc, are void. Other transactions are voidable. They include transactions of legal entities made beyond their powers, fraudulent transactions, transactions entered into under duress etc.

The limitation period for void transactions is three years from the date of commencement or their performance. For voidable transactions, a claim seeking a declaration of an invalid transaction must be filed within one year from the date on which the claimant knew or should have known of the circumstances serving as grounds for invalidating the transaction. As the Insolvency Law does not provide for limitation periods, the general provisions of the Civil Code apply.

²² That is an Interim administrator, financial rehabilitation administrator, external administrator or liquidator.

²³ Article 181 of the Civil Code.

In addition to the grounds for challenging transactions described above, if the debtor is a credit organisation, transactions entered into in the three-year period prior to the appointment of a temporary administration, can be declared by the court as invalid if the terms or the price of the transaction are materially worse than the terms of analogous transactions.

4.3 Declaring transactions invalid under the Insolvency Law

4.3.1 Transactions entered into with “interested persons”

The bankruptcy court can declare invalid a transaction concluded by debtor with an “interested person” if, as a result of the performance of such transaction, the creditors of the debtor or the debtor itself suffered or can suffer losses²⁴.

An “interested person” is defined as a company which is a holding or subsidiary company of the insolvent debtor, any members of the board of directors, executive body or the chief accountant of the insolvent debtor. The time of entering into a transactions with an “interested person” is irrelevant, and therefore this clause can apply to transactions entered into outside the “twilight” period.

For a transaction to be successfully challenged on this ground it must:

- be a “transaction” under the Insolvency Law;
- be concluded with an “interested person”;
- have caused or have the ability to cause losses to the debtor or its creditors.

If obligations under a transaction with an “interested person” have been already performed a claim can be brought: (1) to declare a transaction void, and (2) to apply the legal consequences of nullity of transaction. In the event such action is successful, this is likely to result in reciprocal restitution and recovery of damages from the “interested person”.

4.3.2 Transactions entailing preferences

The Insolvency Law also provides that the court can declare invalid a transaction entered into or performed in the six-month period prior to the filing of a bankruptcy petition, if the transaction results in the preferential satisfaction of claims of one or more creditors over those of other creditors.

For a transaction to be successfully challenged as a preferential satisfaction it must:

- be a “transaction” under the Insolvency Law;
- have been entered into or performed by the debtor within the six-month period prior to the filing of a bankruptcy petition; and
- result in a preferential satisfaction.

²⁴ Article 103, clause 2 of the Insolvency Law.

4.3.3 Withdrawal from the company

A transaction of a limited liability company concluded up to six months prior to the filing of a bankruptcy petition against it and involving payment to one of its participants that is withdrawing from that company may be declared invalid by a court upon demand from the court-appointed bankruptcy administrator or a creditor if the performance of such transaction infringes the rights and legal interests of creditors²⁵. In the event that the company is declared bankrupt such participant becomes a creditor ranking in the last order of priority.

QUESTION 5

5. Enforcement

By whom may action be brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3 above)?

The company itself and any of its shareholders owning a total of at least one per cent of the company's common shares can file a claim against a member of the board of directors²⁶. When a claim seeking compensation of damages is filed against a member of the board of directors of a company, the burden of proof lies with the plaintiff. This applies to claims against the CEO, directors, members of the management board and managing company in case damages are caused by their actions (inactions).

The right to initiate administrative proceedings relating to fraudulent or deliberate bankruptcy or unlawful actions during the bankruptcy vests in the Ministry of Home Affairs and, in certain circumstances, in other authorised official bodies having the right to bring administrative actions.

If a person uses his/her position in violation of the law and contrary to the interests of the company and the actions of such person have resulted in substantial damages to the company (and that company is not a state or municipal enterprise), the criminal proceedings²⁷ may be initiated only by such company.

QUESTION 6

6. Remedies: orders available to the domestic court

In respect of the offences identified in questions 2, 3 and 4 above, what remedies are available in the domestic court?

²⁵ Article 103, clause 4 of the Insolvency Law.

²⁶ Article 71, clause 4 of the JSC Law.

²⁷ Article 201 of the Criminal Code.

6.1 Invalidation of transactions and restitution

The Insolvency Law provides that a court may declare transactions invalid if they were entered into up to six months prior to the filing of an insolvency petition. Invalidation of a transaction implies elimination of the consequences of the transaction and, among other things, can take the form of reciprocal restitution, and if restitution in kind is impossible, reimbursement of consideration in monetary form. Additionally, the court may award compensation of damages and payment of interest for use of funds by the other party.

6.2 Administrative fine and disqualification

The Administrative Offences Code envisages administrative fine of up to 10,000 RUR or disqualification for up to 3 years as the main measure of administrative liability of the CEO, and, potentially, members of the board of directors, members of the management board etc. for offences relating to insolvency (bankruptcy).

Disqualification entails depriving an individual of the right to occupy any management position in the executive body of a legal entity, to sit on the board of directors, management (supervisory) board and to engage in entrepreneurial activity involving management of a legal entity. This punishment may last from six months to three years. Information on all disqualified persons is entered in a special register. Legal entities are under an obligation, before offering a contract for a management position, to verify with the body responsible for keeping that register that the candidate has not been disqualified.

As mentioned above the administrative liability measures apply to the extent the offence does not involve criminally punishable acts.

6.3 Imprisonment and fine

The Criminal Code envisages the following remedies:

- (1) illegal actions during the bankruptcy - imprisonment for up to 3 years; main or public works for up to 240 hours; or correctional works for up to 2 years; or detention for up to 4-6 months; or imprisonment for up to 2 years plus a fine of up to 200,000 RUR or in the amount of the wage (or other income) for a period of up to 18 months or without a fine;
- (2) deliberate bankruptcy - either a fine of up to 500,000 RUR or in the amount of the wage (or other income) for a period of up to 3 years; or without a fine; or imprisonment for up to 6 years with a fine of up to 200,000 RUR.
- (3) fraudulent bankruptcy - either a fine of up to 300,000 RUR or in the amount of the wage (or other income) for a period of 2 years; or imprisonment for up to 6 years with a fine of up to 80,000 RUR or in the amount of the wage (or other income) for a period of up to 6 month or without a fine.

QUESTION 7

7. Duty to co-operate

To what extent are directors (and others identified in question 3 above) obliged to co-operate with an investigation into the company's affairs following its insolvency?

The Insolvency Law does not impose a general duty to disclose information to the bankruptcy administrators appointed by a bankruptcy court at various stages of insolvency proceedings. However, there are several provisions that entitle the bankruptcy administrators to obtain information in respect of its business activities from the debtor. The bankruptcy administrator is entitled to obtain any information and documents concerning the debtor's activity and the debtor's management bodies are to provide the bankruptcy administrator upon request with all information concerning the debtor's activity.

At the initial stages of bankruptcy, such as supervision and financial recovery, the appointment of the bankruptcy administrator does not constitute grounds for the CEO's dismissal or termination of the powers of other management bodies of the debtor. They continue to exercise their powers subject to the limitations established by the Insolvency Law. The duty to co-operate with the bankruptcy administrator may be inferred from a number of provisions of the Insolvency Law. At the stages of external management and liquidation, the bankruptcy administrator replaces all other governing bodies of the debtor. At this stage the issue of co-operation becomes to a considerable extent obsolete.

The requirement to provide the bankruptcy administrator with all necessary information and documents applies to confidential information as well, since the Insolvency Law requires that the court-appointed administrator ensures non-disclosure of information protected under the federal laws (including the classified information), that became available to the administrator in connection with the performance of his/her duties. When implementing bankruptcy procedures the court-appointed bankruptcy administrator is obliged to act in good faith, reasonably, and in the interests of the debtor, the creditors and the general public.

As mentioned earlier illegal actions during the bankruptcy (including non-disclosure of information about the property or reports on the activities of the company) are subject to either administrative or criminal liability.

QUESTION 8

8. Appeals and limitation periods

- (a) What limitation period, if any, will apply to actions brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3) in connection with the offences identified in question 2?
- (b) Please indicate whether an appeal is available from the decision of the lower courts.

8.1 Civil actions

The general limitation period under Russian civil law is three years²⁸. It starts running from the time when a party knew or should have known of the breach of its right. As it is not always possible to determine when a party should have known of the breach of its right it is possible that the limitation period does not start running before the commencement of the insolvency proceedings.

8.2 Administrative offences

The Administrative Offences Code contemplates a two-month limitation period for administrative offences. This period starts running from the date an offence was committed. Where the remedy for an administrative offence is disqualification, a one-year limitation period applies.

Under the Administrative Offences Code decisions rendered with respect to administrative offences can be appealed within 10 days after they were issued or a copy of the relevant decision has been received by the defendant. An appeal may be submitted to the judge, official body or an authorised person which issued the decision. Within 3 days these persons should direct such appeal together with the matter file to the competent court, higher official body or an authorised person²⁹ that occupies a higher position. Alternatively, the appeal may be submitted directly to the court, or official body or the authorised person. An appeal should be considered within 10 days from the date of submission.

8.3 Criminal offences

The Criminal Code envisages the following limitation periods³⁰:

- (1) two years after the commission of a petty crime;
- (2) six years after the commission of a moderately grave crime;
- (3) ten years after the commission of a grave crime;
- (4) fifteen years after the commission of an especially grave crime.

²⁸ Article 196 of the Civil Code.

²⁹ Article 30.2 of the Administrative Offences Code.

³⁰ Article 78 of the Criminal Code.

Under Russian criminal legislation illegal actions during the bankruptcy are considered petty crimes and therefore the limitation period in respect of such crimes is two years. Deliberate and fraudulent bankruptcy constitute grave crimes, and the limitation period for the commitment of such crimes is 10 years.

As a general rule, the limitation period is calculated from the day the crime is committed.

QUESTION 9

9. Foreign corporations

Do the legal provisions and procedures outlined above apply to both domestic and foreign corporations and companies?

The Insolvency Law applies to all legal entities and individuals with the exception of treasury enterprises ("kazenniye predpriyatiya"), institutions, political parties and religious organisations. Provisions of the Insolvency Law apply to the state corporation ("gosudarstvennaya korporatsiya") only if the federal law in accordance with which such state corporation was established allows that.

The Insolvency Law also states that the relations involving foreign creditors are subject to the provisions of the Insolvency Law, except as otherwise envisaged by international treaty to which the Russian Federation is a party. The Insolvency Law does not expressly provide that it applies to Russian legal entities, but as a practical matter the application of the procedures outlined above to foreign entities could be problematic, and Russian bankruptcy courts may decline to assert their jurisdiction over such entities in bankruptcy matters.

QUESTION 10

10. Insurance

Is directors' and officers' insurance available in your jurisdiction? If so, to what extent will the availability of such insurance provide effective protection to directors against personal liability which may arise in connection with the issues raised in questions 1-9 above?

Neither the Insolvency Law nor any other legislation provide for an obligation to insure the directors' liabilities in the case of bankruptcy. However the companies legislation and the Insolvency Law establishes the liability of the CEO, members of the board of directors and the management board for damages³¹. Therefore, the directors incur a legal liability risk and such risk can be insured.

The insurance contract can be concluded by the company itself or by an individual who is the CEO, member of the board of directors or member of the management board of the company. The director whose liability is insured by the company should be named in the insurance contract between such company and the insurer.

The following risks relating to insolvency may be insured:

- (1) any violation of management duties, negligence, failure to act, error or director's misrepresentation or inaccurate statements;
- (2) any actions of the director in the course of performance of his/her official duties;
- (3) violation of conditions relating to the powers of directors envisaged by law.

As a general rule, the insurance policy may provide for the following compensations:

- (a) compensation of damages awarded by a court decision;
- (b) compensation of damages agreed in an out-of-court settlement;
- (c) compensation of necessary and reasonable expenses to conduct the defence.

Losses caused to a company by the CEO, members of the board of directors or the management board are reimbursed by the insurance company within the limits specified in the insurance contract. If the insurance compensation is insufficient to cover all losses caused to a company, such a director shall compensate the shortfall³².

Programmes insuring the liability risk of management bodies of commercial entities are offered in Russia by a number of insurance companies.

It is not possible however to get insured against criminal prosecution or criminal liability in Russia.

³¹ Article 71 of the JSC Law and Article 44 of the LLC Law and Article 10 of the Insolvency Law.

³² Article 1072 of the Civil Code.

QUESTION 11

11. Incurring further credit and counter-party risks in dealing with a company during the twilight period

Two key issues continually arise when considering the question of the duties of directors and others during the twilight period. First, how safe is it for directors or others involved with the company's affairs to incur further credit and secondly, can an unconnected third party rely on the validity of transactions entered into with a company (in particular guarantees and security) in each case during the twilight period?

Russian bankruptcy laws do not contain any provisions with respect to incurring further credit by an insolvent company. An unconnected third party may rely on the validity of transactions entered into with an insolvent company subject to the general provisions discussed above.

SPAIN

OVERVIEW

On 9 July 2003, the Spanish Central Parliament approved a new insolvency Act (the Insolvency Act), which came into force on 1 September 2004 and applies to any insolvency proceedings initiated in Spain after that date. The Insolvency Act replaces the previously archaic and fragmented regulation¹ with a single consolidated insolvency law. Insolvency proceedings pending at the time the Insolvency Act became effective are still administered in accordance with the old insolvency legislation, subject to certain modifications. The Insolvency Act:

- (a) establishes a single insolvency procedure (concurso) pursuant to which a company may be declared insolvent if it cannot meet its payment obligations. This single procedure replaces the two corporate insolvency proceedings under the old insolvency legislation, namely:
 - (i) suspension of payments (suspension de pagos): based on the concept of provisional insolvency (that is, where a company's assets exceed its liabilities but the company anticipates liquidity problems in meeting its debts as they fall due). The aim of the suspension of payments proceedings was to achieve a binding settlement with creditors (enforceable on all, except secured creditors), as to when and to what extent creditors would receive payments; and
 - (ii) bankruptcy (quiebra): based on definitive insolvency (that is, when the company's liabilities exceed its assets). The company's assets are liquidated in order to pay off the creditors;
- (b) abolishes the retroactive bankruptcy rule, pursuant to which the court would establish a date prior to the declaration of insolvency on which the company effectively became insolvent. All acts and transactions completed in the period between the date of effective insolvency and the date of the declaration were void, even if entered into at arms' length and for good commercial reason or otherwise. Under the Insolvency Act, any transaction entered into during the two years prior to the declaration of insolvency that negatively affects the company's pool of assets may be rescinded (see 1.1 and 4.1 below for more detail);
- (c) provides for a single receiver (the Receiver) instead of the various categories of receiver under the old insolvency legislation;
- (d) creates special commercial courts (Juzgados de lo Mercantil) (the Commercial Courts) for dealing with insolvency and other commercial issues; and

- (a) the Spanish Commercial Code of 1885 (Código de Comercio) and by its predecessor which dates all the way back to 1829; and
- (b) the Suspension of Payments Act of 1922 (Ley de Suspensión de Pagos), (together the old insolvency legislation). There were also certain special insolvency rules applicable to, amongst others, insurance companies, credit entities and public work concessionaries. Finally, the Civil Procedure Act of 1881 (Ley de Enjuiciamiento Civil) governed procedural issues.

- (e) includes the rules on cross-border insolvency proceedings introduced by Regulation 1346/2000 of the Council of the European Union, dated 29 May 2000 (The EU Regulation).

Procedural issues not governed by the Insolvency Act are subject to the provisions of the Civil Procedure Act (Ley de Enjuiciamiento Civil) of 7 January 2000 (CPA). The CPA aims to speed up proceedings, make them less complex and more flexible, and to facilitate communication between the parties, and between the parties and the court. In particular, the CPA is designed to simplify the appeal procedure and enforcement requirements.

On 31 March 2009, the Spanish Insolvency Act was subject to further major reform under Royal Decree-Law 3/2009, of 27 March. The main changes are:

- (a) the protection from the Rescission Regime (see 1.1.1 below) of restructuring agreements entered into by the insolvent company prior to the filing for insolvency provided certain requirements are met.
- (b) the ability for an insolvent company to initiate a negotiation period in order to obtain agreement to an Advanced Settlement Proposal prior to an actual filing for insolvency and thereby delay the insolvency filing. (Refer to the Appendix for further information about the Spanish single insolvency procedure and, in particular, the Settlement phase and the procedure for obtaining approval of Settlements.)

The reform also includes the clarification of certain issues that were debated amongst scholars and the reform of articles of the Insolvency Act regarding notification of the events of the Insolvency.

QUESTION 1

1. The start and duration of the “twilight” period

What is the length of the period ending with formal insolvency proceedings during which transactions entered into by a company are vulnerable to attack or are liable to give rise to personal liability on the part of directors and/or others involved in the management of the company?

1.1 Length of the twilight period for setting aside transactions

1.1.1 Rescission regime under the Insolvency Act

One of the fundamental differences between the Insolvency Act and the old insolvency legislation is the abolition of the retroactive bankruptcy rule and its substitution with a system based not on the concept of breach of law, but economic harm (the Rescission Regime).

The retroactive bankruptcy rule provided that, if supporting evidence was submitted to the court, it could establish a date (prior to the filing for insolvency) on which the company effectively became insolvent (that is, when it ceased generally paying debts). All transactions completed during that period, even if at arms' length and for good commercial reason or otherwise, were null and void (as opposed to voidable).

The Rescission Regime is radically different. It represents a more pragmatic approach based on the concept of prejudice. Transactions that materially prejudice the value of the company's pool of assets may be rescinded, whether or not there has been intention to defraud, if completed within the two years immediately preceding the date of the declaration of insolvency provided they do not constitute a 'restructuring agreement' (as set out in the Royal Decree-Law 3/2009 – see further 4.1.2 below).

1.1.2 Rescission claim under the Civil Code

In addition to the Rescission Regime, any unsatisfied creditor may claim rescission of certain contractual or commercial operations on the basis of a fraud on creditors (accion rescisoria por fraude de acreedores). Insolvency proceedings under the Insolvency Act need not necessarily have been commenced; the claim must be made within four years of the date of the relevant contractual or commercial operation.

1.2 Personal liability

1.2.1 Liability under corporate law

(a) Directors

Under Spanish company law, directors of Spanish limited liability companies (that is, sociedades de responsabilidad limitada or SL companies and sociedades anonimas or SA companies) may be held jointly and severally liable to the company and its shareholders and creditors for any act or omission, which is:

- (i) contrary to the provisions of Spanish company law;
- (ii) contrary to the provisions of any other binding law;
- (iii) contrary to the company's bye-laws, or
- (iv) in breach of their duties to the company.

This liability is established by (Articles 133 of the Spanish Companies Act (Texto Refundido de la Ley de Sociedades Anonimas) (LSA) and 69 of the Spanish Limited Liability Companies Act (Ley de Sociedades de Responsabilidad Limitada) (LSRL)).

(b) De facto directors

Law 26/2003, of 17 July (the Law 26/2003) extended the duties and liabilities of directors established in the LSA to persons who, whilst not formally appointed as a director of an SA company, have acted de facto as if they were a director of an SA company.

Given that Article 69 of the LSRL refers to the rules of the LSA on directors' liability, it could also be argued that de facto directors of SL companies may also be held liable on the same basis.

In relation to de facto directors, the Spanish courts have ruled that a person cannot be considered a de facto director if the role carried out is merely administrative or counselling without actually taking on the role of governing (decision taking) the company (Sentence of the Commercial Court of Cantabria of 18 October 2006). Also, the courts have established that merely owning a high stake in the share capital of the company and working as a technician for the company does not imply de facto directorship (Sentence of the Commercial Court of Baleares of 5 December 2007).

(c) Actions under corporate law

Spanish company law provides for the following actions for a breach of director's duties:

(i) corporate action (accion social):

This is a contractual action that aims to protect and recover a company's assets damaged by the actions of the director(s). There is a limitation period of four years from the removal/dismissal of the director responsible.

(ii) individual action (accion individual):

This is an action in tort that aims to protect and recover the personal assets of the claimant to the extent that loss arises from the actions of the director(s). The limitation period is one year from the time the plaintiff had actual knowledge of the director's breach.

1.2.2 Liability under the Insolvency Act

The Commercial Court may declare directors and others liable as set out below during the qualification phase of the proceedings. An insolvency is deemed to "qualify" either: (i) upon the approval of a settlement agreement with creditors which proposes a reduction in excess of one-third of debts or a delay of payments in excess of three years, or (ii) when the liquidation phase is commenced. (For further information on the qualification and other phases in the insolvency proceedings process, refer to the Appendix to this chapter.)

(a) Liability under Article 172.2 of the Insolvency Act

The Commercial Court may declare the company's directors and liquidators (whether formally appointed or de facto), its legal representatives and other persons liable when:

- (i) the "qualification" of the insolvency has taken place; and
- (ii) the insolvency has been categorised as "guilty".

An insolvency is deemed "guilty" when, in the creation and worsening of the state of insolvency, there has been either dolus or gross negligence by the company, its legal representatives, directors or liquidators.

(b) Liability under Article 172.3 of the Insolvency Act

The Commercial Court may declare the company's directors and liquidators and its former directors and liquidators (in the two years prior to the declaration of insolvency), whether formally appointed or de facto, liable when:

- (i) the qualification of the insolvency has taken place as a result of the commencement of the liquidation phase (but not as a result of the approval of a settlement agreement); and
- (ii) the insolvency has been qualified as guilty.

QUESTION 2

2. Actions potentially giving rise to liability for directors

- (a) In respect of which acts during the "twilight" period may a director be held personally liable or which may otherwise have adverse consequences for him?
- (b) In relation to each act identified in (a) above: -
 - (i) is any resulting liability against a director civil, criminal or both?;
 - (ii) can a director be made personally liable in respect of the whole loss caused to the company or the deficit to creditors?;
 - (iii) will liability attach to individual directors in proportion to their specific involvement?;

- (iv) is there a specified period before commencement of a subsequent insolvency procedure within which the relevant act must have been undertaken in order for liability to attach to a director?; and
- (v) what defences, if any, will be available in relation to each offence?

2.1 Directors' liability under corporate law (civil liability)

2.1.1 Under Spanish company law, directors of both SA companies and SL companies may be held jointly and severally liable to the company and its shareholders and creditors for any act or omission which is:

- (a) contrary to the provisions of Spanish company law;
- (b) contrary to the provisions of any other binding law;
- (c) contrary to the company's by-laws; or
- (d) in breach of their duties to the company.

Directors' general duty

2.1.2 The principal general duty imposed on directors of Spanish limited liability companies is to act at all times in good faith, with the diligence of an "organised businessman and a loyal representative" (ordenado empresario y representante leal). This general duty applies to directors of both SA companies and SL companies (Articles 127 of the LSA and 61 of the LSRL, respectively).

2.1.3 As a consequence, directors must ensure that the company does not grant guarantees to secure the obligations of a third party (including a sister or parent company) when the guarantee is not for the corporate benefit of the company. If there is no corporate benefit or insufficient evidence of corporate benefit, the directors may incur personal liability to the company, the shareholders and even third party creditors. The existence of corporate benefit is a question of fact; no formal test exists. In the case of up-stream guarantees, the directors should ensure, at the very least, that:

- (a) a particular benefit to the guarantor can be evidenced. This may be a direct benefit (for example, participation in draw downs) or indirect (for example, the possibility of the guarantor borrowing, in turn, from the borrower or funding the guarantor, say, through a capital increase, etc); and
- (b) giving the guarantee will not immediately cause the guarantor to become insolvent, by checking that there is no immediate risk of the guarantee being called. For example, if it is clear that the principal debtor is not capable of timely compliance with the obligations guaranteed, there would be a high probability of the guarantee being called immediately and the guarantor becoming insolvent (assuming assets were insufficient to cover the guarantee obligations guaranteed).

Directors' liability specifically related to the company's insolvency

- 2.1.4 In specific circumstances (including when the company breaches certain "subscribed capital to net equity ratios",² which are not then re-established within a certain period), directors may be held jointly and severally liable for all of the company's debts (Article 262.5 of LSA and 105.5 of the LSRL). In particular, they will be held liable:
- (a) if they fail to call a general shareholders' meeting to pass a resolution to wind up the company within two months of the breach of the "subscribed capital to equity ratio"; or
 - (b) if they fail to file for a judicial winding up or, if applicable, for a declaration of the company's insolvency (i) within two months of the general shareholders' meeting if the shareholders voted against the winding up or insolvency; or (ii) within two months of the proposed date of the general shareholders' meeting, if it was not held.

The Spanish courts have established that complying with the requirement in article 262.5 of the LSA to convene a meeting to wind up the company does not relieve the directors of a possible liability under the Insolvency Act if the company was insolvent at the time of the winding-up. (Sentence of the Provincial Court (Audiencia Provincial) of Valencia of 10 March 2008.)

Additional duties of directors of SA companies

- 2.1.5 In addition and following the best practice guidelines already set out in the *Código de Olivencia*³ and the recommendations of the Aldama Committee⁴ Law 26/2003 has amended the duties of a director established in the LSA in order to increase the transparency of the SA companies.
- 2.1.6 The specific duties for directors of SA companies introduced by Law 26/2003 are as follows:
- (a) Duty of fidelity

Directors must fulfil the duties imposed on them by law and by the by-laws of the company according to "social interes", that is, in the interests of the company (rather than in the interests of individual shareholders) (fidelidad al interes social, entendido como interes de la sociedad).

If a director appointed to the board by a shareholder acts or votes at a board meeting guided by the shareholder's particular interests, and those interests are contrary to the company's "interes social", the director may be deemed to be acting in breach (that is, by breaching his obligation not to involve himself in a transaction in which he has conflicting interests and in breach of the duties inherent in his position, such as loyalty and fidelity to the company), if his actions were, in fact, harmful to the company, the other shareholders or the company's creditors.

² The subscribed capital to net equity ratio will be 2:1.

³ Non-binding Spanish Code on Fair Corporate Governance published on 26 February 1988.

⁴ A committee of experts commissioned by the government, which published on 8 January 2003 a report on best practice and corporate governance.

The Spanish Supreme Court has, on a number of occasions, interpreted “interés social” to mean the aggregate interests of all the shareholders. However, the new regulation seems to open up the possibility of a broader interpretation of “interés social”: a concept of the “corporation-institution”, extending to the interests of all persons relating to the company (for example, shareholders, employees, creditors, etc.).

(b) Duty of loyalty

Law 26/2003 introduced a duty of loyalty aimed at avoiding conflicts of interest between directors and the company and also at impeding directors from carrying out unauthorised competing activities. The internal governance code for the board of directors of SA companies, implementation of which is compulsory, should determine the appropriate mechanisms for ensuring compliance with these duties. The duty of loyalty requires that:

- (i) directors must not use the company's name nor their position as director to carry out transactions on their own account or through persons connected with them.
- (ii) a director must not, for his own benefit or for that of a connected person, invest in or carry out any transaction relating to the property of the company which he became aware of by virtue of his position as director and which was offered to the company or in which the company had an interest unless the company has, independently of any influence by the director, decided not to make the investment or enter into the transaction.
- (iii) directors must inform the board of directors of any direct or indirect conflict of interest which they may have with the company. In the event of conflict, the director shall cease his involvement in the transaction causing of the conflict. Information on conflicts of interest between the company and its directors should be included in the annual report on corporate governance.
- (iv) directors must notify the company of any shares that they hold in a company that has the same, analogous or complementary corporate objects (objeto social) of the company in which they are a director, and must also notify the company of any position held, or duties carried out, by him in that company.

(c) Duty of confidentiality

Even after their appointment has ceased, directors must not disclose confidential information. Information, figures, reports and records that they are aware of as a result of their position may not be disclosed to third parties or otherwise divulged if this could be detrimental to the company's interests. When the director is a legal entity, the duty of confidentiality rests with its representatives.

2.2 Director's liability under the Insolvency Act (civil liability)

Liability under Article 172.2 of the Insolvency Act

- 2.2.1 As mentioned in 1.2.2 above, the Commercial Court may declare the directors of a company liable when the "qualification" of the insolvency has taken place and the insolvency has been categorised as "guilty".
- 2.2.2 An insolvency would be deemed "guilty" when, in the creation and worsening of the state of insolvency, there was either dolus or gross negligence by the company or its legal representatives, directors or liquidators (whether formally appointed or de facto).
- 2.2.3 An insolvency would be classified as guilty if:
- (a) the company has substantially failed in its obligation to maintain proper accounts, or has committed any irregularity relevant to a person's understanding of the company's financial situation or assets;
 - (b) the company has filed false or misleading documents in support of the application for the declaration of insolvency or during the course of insolvency proceedings⁵.
 - (c) the liquidation phase is opened following a breach of the settlement agreement by the company;
 - (d) the company has concealed its assets to the detriment of its creditors or has carried out any act that delays, obstructs or impairs the effectiveness of a seizure (embargo) or of an enforcement proceeding initiated or likely to be initiated;
 - (e) during the two years prior to the declaration of insolvency, assets or rights of the company were fraudulently misappropriated; or
 - (f) before the declaration of insolvency, the company took legal action intended to present a misleading picture of its financial situation.
- 2.2.4 The existence of dolus or gross negligence is presumed (absent proof to the contrary) if the company or its legal representatives, directors or liquidators:
- (a) have failed in their duty to apply for the insolvency. A company must apply for insolvency within two months of the date on which it knew, or should have known, that it had become insolvent. Alternatively, within this two month period, the company has the option of notifying the court that it is initiating negotiations for obtaining sufficient⁶ agreement to an Advanced Settlement Proposal. In this case, the company will be given three months to obtain agreement. After the three months, the company will have one month to file for insolvency;⁷

⁵ The Spanish courts have established that the misleading or false document or fact must be relevant to the comprehension of the situation of the company. (Sentence of the Commercial Court of Asturias of 29 October 2007).

⁷ As established by the Royal Decree-Law 3/2009.

- (b) have failed in their duty to co-operate with the Commercial Court and the Receivers, have failed to provide the court with the necessary or relevant information in the general interests of the insolvency proceedings or have failed to attend the creditors' general meeting either in person or by proxy; or
- (c) have failed to produce annual accounts, have failed duly to submit them for auditing or, once approved, have failed to file them with the Commercial Registry (Registro Mercantil) in any of the three financial years leading up to the declaration of insolvency.

Liability under Article 172.3 of the Insolvency Act

2.2.5 The Commercial Court may declare the directors of a company liable when:

- (a) the "qualification" of the insolvency has taken place as a result of the commencement of the liquidation phase.

The liquidation phase is commenced:

- (i) at the request of the company, when the company itself applied for liquidation as part of its application for a declaration of insolvency and no settlement proposals have been approved;
- (ii) when the company becomes aware that it is no longer able to comply with any settlement agreement;
- (iii) when the Commercial Court so decides, based on any of the following circumstances:
 - (a) where no settlement proposal is filed or, if filed, is not admitted;
 - (b) rejection by the Commercial Court of any settlement proposal accepted at a creditors' general meeting;
 - (c) the settlement agreement being void; or
 - (d) breach of the settlement agreement; and
 - (b) the insolvency is categorised as "guilty".

2.3 Criminal liability

Under Spanish law, companies themselves cannot be criminally liable. Directors, as the natural persons representing a company, may be considered criminally liable for any criminal offence committed by the company.

Insolvency criminal offences

2.3.1 A director may be held responsible for the following criminal offences under the Spanish Criminal Code:

(a) Concealment of assets (alzamiento de bienes)⁸

Any person who, to the detriment of creditors, conceals or disposes of assets or enters into any obligation that delays, obstructs or impairs the effectiveness of a seizure (embargo) or the commencement of any actual or foreseeable executive (procedimiento ejecutivo o de apremio), judicial, extra-judicial or administrative proceedings.

(b) Post-insolvency concealment and favouring creditors⁹

This offence arises where an insolvent company or person, which (or in respect of which someone) has successfully applied for insolvency, unlawfully disposes of assets or assumes further obligations with a view to favouring one or more creditors (whether preferred or otherwise) to the detriment of other creditors, if such action was taken without authorisation from the court or the insolvency administrators.

(c) Guilty insolvency¹⁰

This offence arises when the insolvency of the company was caused or aggravated with dolus by the company or persons acting on behalf of the company.

(d) Inaccuracy of accounting documents¹¹

This offence arises if any person files documents in the insolvency proceedings, which, to their knowledge, provide inaccurate data on the company's financial situation with the aim of improperly obtaining a declaration of insolvency.

Corporate criminal offences

2.3.2 The Spanish Criminal Code also imposes criminal liability on a director in respect of corporate criminal offences (that is, those committed against the interests of the company and/or its shareholders). These are as follows:

(a) Forging corporate documents¹²

Any director (whether formally appointed or de facto) who forges the company's annual accounts or other corporate documents evidencing the legal or financial status of the company in a manner that is capable of causing economic loss to any person.

⁸ Article 257 of the Spanish Criminal Code.

⁹ Article 259 of the Spanish Criminal Code.

¹⁰ Article 260 of the Spanish Criminal Code.

¹¹ Article 261 of the Spanish Criminal Code.

¹² Article 290 of the Spanish Criminal Code.

(b) Abusive resolutions¹³

Any person who, by exploiting his or her majority on the board or in general shareholders' meetings, passes a resolution with the intention of making a profit (either for himself or herself or for third parties), to the detriment of the other shareholders and which does not otherwise benefit the company.

(c) Harmful resolutions¹⁴

Any person who harms the company or any of its shareholders by imposing a resolution that has been adopted by fraudulent means (for example, not giving voting rights to shareholders entitled to vote etc.) and makes a profit out of such act (either for himself or herself or for third parties).

(d) Breach of shareholders' rights¹⁵

Any director (whether formally appointed or de facto) who prevents shareholders from exercising their political rights (for example, right to information, right to take part in the running of the company etc.).

(e) Breach of obligation to co-operate with any relevant authority¹⁶

Any director (whether formally appointed or de facto) of a company which is supervised by a regulatory authority, who impedes the supervision by the authority, or fails to provide relevant documentation.

(f) Illegal disposition or illegal contracting¹⁷

Any director (whether formally appointed or de facto) or any shareholder who, in abuse of his or her powers, illegally disposes of assets of the company or enters into any kind of obligation that results in an economic loss to the company or to the shareholders with the intention of making a profit (either for himself or herself or for third parties).

Civil or criminal liability?

2.4 Civil liability

2.4.1 Liability under Spanish company law and the Insolvency Act is civil.

2.4.2 The general view is that directors may be declared liable under both Spanish company law and the Insolvency Act in one set of insolvency proceedings. The aim under Spanish company law is to indemnify against loss caused by the directors to the company or third parties, whereas liability under Article 172.3 of the Insolvency Act (the Insolvency Liability) is to indemnify creditors whose debts have not been paid from the liquidation of the company.

¹³ Article 291 of the Spanish Criminal Code.

¹⁴ Article 292 of the Spanish Criminal Code.

¹⁵ Article 293 of the Spanish Criminal Code.

¹⁶ Article 294 of the Spanish Criminal Code.

¹⁷ Article 295 of the Spanish Criminal Code.

- 2.4.3 Whilst there is no legal basis for saying that the Insolvency Liability should prevail over the directors' liability under the Spanish company law, it is generally understood that the Insolvency Liability rules prevail. This is because, under the Insolvency Act, directors are liable to all creditors whereas, under Spanish company law, directors are liable only to creditors whose claims have been affected by the loss suffered by the company or to creditors who have directly suffered by the company or to creditors who have directly suffered loss themselves. Nevertheless, it must be noted that the Provincial Court of Madrid ruled on 13 November 2007, that there is full compatibility between the exercise of the directors' liability and the existence of an insolvency proceeding.
- 2.4.4 In most cases, creditors will wish to bring any claim as soon as possible and not wait for Insolvency Liability on the court's "qualification" of the insolvency. In addition, there are certain situations where the Insolvency Liability cannot be declared (for example, if the insolvency proceeding concludes with a settlement agreement).
- 2.4.5 The general opinion is that the approval of a settlement agreement does not affect the liability of the directors. Therefore, creditors will be entitled to claim for any loss caused by the directors, even if a settlement is approved and regardless of how creditors voted. However, creditors can only claim for loss to the extent they are not compensated by the settlement agreement.

2.5 Criminal liability

- 2.5.1 The qualification of the insolvency as "guilty" does not bind the criminal courts. Consequently, the criminal court may decide independently whether a director has committed a particular criminal offence, punishable in accordance with the Spanish Criminal Code.
- 2.5.2 In relation to the criminal offences described in 2.4 above, the Spanish Criminal Code expressly states the following:
- (a) concealment of assets: this criminal offence must be prosecuted even if insolvency proceedings are initiated after the offence was committed.
 - (b) guilty insolvency: under no circumstances does the qualification of the insolvency in the insolvency proceedings bind the criminal courts.
- 2.5.3 Finally, it should be noted that a further criminal offence is committed if a person responsible for any criminal act carries out certain disposals or assumes additional obligations that decrease his/her assets so that that person becomes totally or partially insolvent, with the aim of avoiding any civil liability that might arise in connection with the original criminal act.¹⁸

¹⁸ Article 258 of the Spanish Criminal Code.

Liability for the whole loss caused to the company or the deficit to creditors?

2.6 Liability under corporate law

2.6.1 A fundamental distinction must be drawn under Spanish company law between:

- (a) a corporate action (accion social): an action brought by the company or its shareholders, creditors and Receivers to protect and recover company assets damaged by the actions of director(s). Therefore, liability under this action is restricted to the damage caused to the company by the director(s);
- (b) an individual action (accion individual): an action brought by the company's shareholders or creditors or other injured third parties to protect and recover the personal assets of the claimant to the extent damaged by the actions of the director(s). Therefore, liability under this action is restricted to the damage directly caused to the relevant claimant (that is, the shareholder, creditor or third party) by the director(s).

2.6.2 Liability under Article 262.5 of LSA and 105.5 of the LSRL is joint and several vis-a-vis any creditor for all of the company's debts.

2.7 Liability under the Insolvency Act

Liability under Article 172.2 of the Insolvency Act

2.7.1 The judicial decision declaring the insolvency as "guilty" would order:

- (a) the disqualification of those persons affected by the ruling from managing third party assets or representing or managing any person/company for a period of between two and fifteen years, depending on the seriousness of both the infractions and the injury.

The disqualification of a director from managing third party assets can be requested by the parties, or can be declared ex officio (as the Commercial Court of Alicante established in the ruling of 21 November 2007);

- (b) the removal of the rights of any persons affected by the qualification (including any persons found to have contributed towards the insolvency) as creditors of the company;
- (c) that any rights or assets of such persons that may have been unduly obtained from the assets of the company or received from the pool of assets be returned; and
- (d) that any loss or damage caused, be indemnified.

Liability under Article 172.3 of the Insolvency Act

- 2.7.2 Directors may be held liable for any deficit in the amount available to pay to creditors (that is, all or part of the debts that remain unpaid after the liquidation of the assets of the company). Once the insolvency has been declared, the Commercial Court may order the seizure of rights or assets of the directors if, from the information available at the insolvency proceedings, it appears that: (i) the insolvency may be qualified as "guilty"; and (ii) the pool of assets of the company is insufficient to meet all of the debts.

2.8 Criminal offences

The penalties established in the Spanish Criminal Code for the criminal offences described in 2.3 above include the following terms of imprisonment and/or fines:

- (a) concealment of assets: imprisonment for one to four years and a fine based on a period of 12 to 24 months;
- (b) post-insolvency concealment and favouring creditors: imprisonment for one to four years and a fine based on a period of 12 to 24 months;
- (c) guilty insolvency: imprisonment for two to six years and a fine based on a period of eight to 24 months. The following would be considered in determining the severity of the sentence: (i) the detriment caused to creditors; (ii) the number of creditors; and (iii) the financial condition of the creditors;
- (d) inaccuracy of accounting documents: imprisonment for one to two years and a fine based on a period of six to 12 months;
- (e) forging corporate documents: imprisonment for one to three years and a fine based on a period of six to 12 months;
- (f) abusive resolutions: imprisonment for between six months and three years or a fine of up to three times the profit obtained;
- (g) harmful resolutions: imprisonment for between six months and three years or a fine of up to three times the profit obtained;
- (h) breach of shareholders' rights: a fine based on a period of six to 12 months;
- (i) breach of obligation to co-operate with any relevant authority: imprisonment for between six months and three years or a fine based on a period of 12 to 24 months;
- (j) illegal disposal or illegal contracting: imprisonment for between six months and four years and a fine of up to three times the profit obtained.

Does liability attach to the directors in proportion to their specific involvement?

2.9 Liability under corporate law

- 2.9.1 The liability is joint and several where the directors act together. Directors are not protected from liability, even if the relevant action or decision of the board or individual director was adopted, authorised or ratified by a general shareholders' meeting shareholders of the company.
- 2.9.2 Likewise, directors' legal liability cannot be contractually modified, unless a more strict liability is agreed, and any corporate document or corporate arrangement aimed at limiting the director's liability is invalid.
- 2.9.3 However, a director will not be liable for the acts of other directors where the relevant director can demonstrate that:
 - (a) he was unaware of the act, decision or omission of the other director(s) for a reason other than his/her absence from a board meeting; or
 - (b) he was aware of the relevant act, decision or omission, but took all reasonable measures to prevent it from taking place, or (at least) expressly opposed the relevant board resolution.

2.10 Liability under the Insolvency Act

- 2.10.1 The general rule is that, if the company has committed any infringement under the Insolvency Act, all the directors will be liable. Accordingly, directors may be liable only when the insolvency has been qualified as "guilty" (see 2.2.2 above).
- 2.10.2 Pursuant to Article 172.2, the judicial decision would contain an order to indemnify for any loss or damage caused, which implies that the Commercial Court may draw a link between the individual's involvement and the loss or damage caused.
- 2.10.3 The Insolvency Act does not include any provision that directly relates the Insolvency Liability (that is, directors' liability under Article 172.3) to their specific involvement.

2.11 Liability under the Spanish Criminal Code

- 2.11.1 The general rule is that if the company has committed an infringement, all the directors (constituting the management of the company) may be criminally liable. Notwithstanding this, the general rule on criminal liability is that the court must have evidence of the degree of participation by the individual in question in the criminal offence (that is, whether they were the perpetrator, an accomplice or were otherwise profiting from the crime). Consequently, the specific involvement of a director would be relevant to the sanction imposed.

Defences

2.12 Under corporate law

The principal general duty imposed on directors of Spanish companies is to act at all times in good faith, fulfilling their position as a director of the company with the diligence of an "organised businessman and a loyal representative". This broad rule allows each director's behaviour to be assessed on a case-by-case basis. Spanish courts judge directors' diligence by demanding a high standard of behaviour.

2.12.1 The general defences available to directors are:

- (a) that the director's behaviour was not negligent or did not breach his or her duties as a director of the company; and
- (b) that the director did not take part in the damaging event and was either:
 - (i) not aware of the existence of the damaging event; or
 - (ii) took the necessary steps to avoid such a damaging event.

2.13 Under the Insolvency Act

2.13.1 The Insolvency Act does not provide for any specific defences. However, it may be possible for directors to rely upon the defences provided for in Spanish company law, including the defence that the director did not take part in the damaging event, and was either: (i) not aware of the damaging event; or (ii) took the necessary steps to avoid such a damaging event.

2.14 Under the Spanish Criminal Code

2.14.1 The general rule on criminal liability is that the criminal court must have evidence of:

- (a) the individual having committed a specific criminal offence;
- (b) the degree of participation by the individual in the criminal offence (that is, whether they were the perpetrator, an accomplice or otherwise profited from the crime); and
- (c) the existence of dolus or negligence in the commission of the offence.

2.14.2 Thus, any defence would be based on the absence of any of the above requirements.

QUESTION 3

3. Other persons involved with the company's affairs who may become liable in respect of their actions during the "twilight" period

- (a) In addition to the formally appointed directors of the company, can others be held liable in respect of the company's activities during the "twilight" period if the company were to become subject to a formal insolvency procedure?
- (b) In respect of which acts may other persons be held liable and to what extent does the liability of third parties differ from that for directors identified in question 2 above?
- (c) Will liability be limited to that resulting from involvement with a particular transaction or more generally in relation to the overall loss suffered by creditors?

Others which may be held liable

3.1 Liability under corporate law

- 3.1.1 Law 26/2003 extended the directors' duties and liabilities established in the LSA to those who, though not formally appointed as directors, act as de facto directors of a SA company.
- 3.1.2 The courts have not yet had an opportunity to construe this provision and, therefore, it is not possible to assess to what extent directors' liability could be imposed. However, it is possible that liability could extend to: (i) those who were not directors but had management responsibilities in the company; (ii) directors of a parent company for acts carried out by directors of its subsidiaries in accordance with instructions from the directors of the parent company; and even (iii) a company which appoints a director later found to be liable.
- 3.1.3 Given that Article 69 of the LSRL refers to the rules of the LSA on directors' liability, it could be argued that de facto directors of SL companies may also be held liable.

3.2 Liability under the Insolvency Act

Liability under Article 172.2 of the Insolvency Act

- 3.2.1 Any person who, either through their dolus or gross negligence, co-operated with the company or its directors, legal representatives and their administrators or liquidators (whether in law or in fact) or their respective attorneys in carrying out any act that contributed to the qualification of the insolvency as "guilty" shall be deemed an accomplice.

- 3.2.2 When the insolvency is classified as “guilty”, the judicial decision containing the classification will also determine the persons affected by the qualification (including any accomplices). If any of the persons stated to be affected by the qualification are, in fact but not in law, the administrator or liquidator of the company, the ruling should justify why they, without legally being a director or liquidator of the company, in the court’s opinion acted de facto as if they were a director or liquidator.

Liability under Article 172.3 of the Insolvency Act

- 3.2.3 The Commercial Court may declare the company’s directors and liquidators and its former directors and liquidators (in the two years prior to the declaration for insolvency, whether formally appointed or de facto and whether in law or in fact) liable when:

- (a) the classification of the insolvency has taken place as a result of the commencement of the liquidation phase; and
- (b) the insolvency has been classified as guilty.

3.3 Liability under the Spanish Criminal Code

Directors (whether formally appointed or de facto) and legal or voluntary representatives of a company can be held liable for any criminal offence committed by the company.

3.4 Managers’ liability

- 3.4.1 Managers are not personally liable to third parties for acts and obligations undertaken on behalf of the company (even when they exceed the scope of their powers), provided they act within the scope of the company’s activities. Accordingly, managers can be held personally liable to third parties for any acts and obligations falling outside the company’s corporate objects/main activity. In any event, the company itself may claim damages from a manager that acts negligently or in breach of his or her duties to the company.
- 3.4.2 As a general principle, managers are also subject to the general duty to act at all times in good faith and honestly. The duties of a general manager (director general) (that is, a non-executive director who is effectively in charge of running the company) and all other managers of Spanish companies are customarily set out in their employment agreements, with specific guidelines being given by the company’s management body and by market/sector general practice.
- 3.4.3 According to the Spanish Civil Code (Codigo Civil), the owners, directors or managers of a company (dueños o directores de un establecimiento o empresa) may be liable to third parties for activities carried out by the company’s employees (vicarious liability). However, the owner, director or manager may, in turn, bring a claim against the relevant employee(s) to recover any loss and/or expenses incurred as a result of the imposition of vicarious liability.

3.5 Regulated sectors

Directors and managers of companies operating in regulated sectors (such as banking, financial services, insurance, telecommunications, electricity and others) are subject to specific regulations, breach of which may give rise to directors' and managers' liabilities.

In respect for which acts may another be held liable and what is the extent of their liability?

3.6 Liability under corporate law

- 3.6.1 According to Article 133 of the LSA, de facto directors may be held personally liable to the company, its shareholders and creditors for any act that is:
- (a) contrary to the provisions of the LSA;
 - (b) contrary to the provisions of any other binding law;
 - (c) contrary to the relevant company's by-laws; or
 - (d) in breach of the duties that directors duly appointed have to the company.
- 3.6.2 The liability of appointed directors is joint and several and extends to acts and omissions, whilst the liability of de facto directors is personal and extends only to their acts.

3.7 Liability under the Insolvency Act

Please see 2.7 above.

3.8 Criminal liability

- 3.8.1 De facto directors and legal or voluntary representatives of a company can be held liable for any criminal offence committed by the company.
- 3.8.2 De facto directors can be held criminally responsible in the scope of insolvency proceedings.
- 3.8.3 Furthermore, the Spanish Criminal Code sets out three corporate criminal offences that may be specifically committed by the shareholders (namely, abusive resolutions, harmful resolutions and illegal disposal/contracting).
- 3.8.4 Please see 2.3 above for a description of both corporate and insolvency criminal offences.

Is liability limited to their involvement in a particular transaction or more generally to the overall loss suffered by creditors?

3.9 Liability under corporate law

- 3.9.1 According to Article 133 of the LSA, the liability of de facto directors is limited to the loss caused by the director.

3.10 Liability under the Insolvency Act

Liability is under Article 172.2 of the Insolvency Act.

- 3.10.1 Please see 2.7 above.

Liability under Article 172.3 of the Insolvency Act.

- 3.10.2 Directors and liquidators (whether formally appointed or de facto), and those who were directors and liquidators (whether formally appointed or de facto) during the two years prior to the declaration of insolvency, may be held liable for any deficit in the amount available to pay to creditors (that is, all or part of the debts that remain unpaid after the liquidation of the assets of the company). Once the insolvency has been declared, the Commercial Court may order the seizure of the rights or assets of such persons if, from the information available at the insolvency proceedings, it appears that: (i) the insolvency may be qualified as "guilty"; and (ii) the pool of assets of the company is insufficient to meet all its debts.

3.11 Criminal liability

Penalties under the Spanish Criminal Code for criminal offences include imprisonment and fines. Please see 2.8 above.

QUESTION 4

4. Counterparties dealing with the company during the twilight period

- (a) From the point of view of a counterparty dealing with the company during the twilight period, what are the potential heads of challenge which may lead to transactions with the company being set aside?
- (b) What defences, if any, to the areas of vulnerability identified above will be available to a counterparty seeking to protect a transaction from being attacked?

4.1 Rescission regime

4.1.1 Transactions that prejudice the pool of assets of the company, whether or not there was an intention to defraud, are rescindable if completed within the two years immediately preceding the date of the declaration of insolvency. The Rescission Regime includes the following general rules:

- (a) generally speaking, gratuitous transactions (that is, transactions for no consideration or no material consideration) are irrebutably presumed to be prejudicial;
- (b) the same irrebutable presumption of prejudice applies to debts maturing after the insolvency is declared but which are discharged prior to then;
- (c) a rebuttable presumption of prejudice is established in respect of:
 - (i) transactions for consideration entered into with persons or entities connected with the company; and
 - (ii) security created in respect of pre-existing obligations or new obligations assumed in substitution for pre-existing obligations;
- (d) evidence of prejudice must be adduced in respect of other transactions; and
- (e) transactions within the ordinary course of business of the company and completed on the company's normal terms and conditions are not rescindable. Equally, payments effected through clearing and settlement systems for securities and derivative instruments are not rescindable.

4.1.2 The new Royal Decree-law 3/2009 has established that 'restructuring' agreements may not be rescinded¹⁹ provided they are part of a viability plan which warrants the continuation of the company in the short to medium term and which provides for either a substantial increase in the disposable credit/loans available to the company or which modifies the payment obligations of the company (or other similar modification) and provided they meet the following requirements:

- (a) the restructuring agreement is signed by creditors that amount to, at least, three-fifths (60%) of the total debts of the company at the time of the restructuring;
- (b) the restructuring agreement has been analysed by an independent expert appointed by the Commercial Registry; and,
- (c) the restructuring agreement is documented in a Spanish notarial deed.

4.1.3 Each party to a rescinded transaction must return the asset received by it to the other party. For the purpose of this rule:

- (a) if the asset to be returned is cash, this will give rise to a claim against the company which will qualify as a Debt of the Pool of Assets (see below) except where the rescinded transaction was entered into in bad faith, in which case it will rank as a subordinated claim (as a Debt of the Company, as defined below).

The Insolvency Act establishes a fundamental distinction between two basic types of debts of the company. Claims are deemed either to be liabilities of the pool of assets of the company (a Debt of the Pool of Assets) or (for the vast majority) remain liabilities of the company (Debts of the Company).

Debts of the pool of assets either originate in the insolvency proceedings (that is, following the declaration of insolvency) or relate specifically to the insolvency proceedings and must be expressed as such by statute. Debts of the Pool of Assets are payable out of the available assets of the company on their respective maturity date (except salary claims in respect of the last thirty days of work which, up to a maximum of two times the statutory minimum wage, are payable immediately) in preference to all other claims (other than secured claims to the extent they are covered by the secured asset); and

Debts of the Company are any other claims not qualifying as a Debt of the Pool of Assets;

According to the ruling of the Commercial Court of Madrid nº 1 of 21 May 2007, the fact that both companies knew, at the time of signing the rescinded transaction, that the company was in an insolvency situation can be sufficient evidence of bad faith in the negotiation of the transaction, therefore giving rise only to a subordinated claim in the event of rescission.

- (b) if an asset to be returned has been disposed of, the party obliged to deliver it shall, provided the asset was disposed of in good faith, satisfy its obligation by paying the value of the asset (as at the date of disposal plus interest accruing since then). Failing this, the party obliged to return the asset shall be liable for all loss (direct, consequential or otherwise) caused to the value of the pool of assets of the company as a result of the rescinded transaction.

4.2 Rescission claim under the Civil Code

According to the Spanish Civil Code (Codigo Civil), any unsatisfied creditor may claim rescission of certain contractual or commercial operations on the basis of a fraud on creditors (accion rescisoria por fraude de acreedores) and this remedy does not necessarily require the existence of insolvency proceedings under the Insolvency Act.

4.3 Defences

4.3.1 The rescission regime is based on the concept of prejudice.

4.3.2 The Insolvency Act provides for an irrebuttable presumption of prejudice in the case of:

- (a) gratuitous transactions. To avoid this presumption, the counterparty should ensure that the company obtains some benefit from the transaction; and
- (b) payment obligations maturing after the date insolvency is declared but which are discharged prior to that date. To avoid this presumption, a counterparty should include termination rights based on pre-insolvency situations. For example, in the context of a financing agreement, lenders could impose further and more sophisticated financial ratios which would be triggered before the borrower became insolvent.

4.3.3 The Insolvency Act provides for a rebuttable presumption of prejudice in respect of:

- (a) transactions entered into with persons or entities related to the company. In order to avoid this presumption, the counterparty should ensure that it is not a related entity for the purposes of the Insolvency Act, namely:
 - (i) a shareholder holding at least 10% of the share capital of the company (or 5% in the case of a listed company) and a shareholder with unlimited liability in respect of the company's debts;
 - (ii) a director (whether in law or in fact), liquidator or attorney of the company and or any person who was a director, liquidator or attorney of the company in the two years prior to the declaration of insolvency;
 - (iii) a company that forms part of the company's group or and a shareholder of such a company; and
 - (iv) a rebuttable presumption of related entity is established in respect of any assignee of a financing agreement granted in favour of any of the above persons/entities, if the assignment took place in the two years prior to the declaration of insolvency;
- (b) security granted in respect of pre-existing obligations or in respect of new obligations assumed in substitution for pre-existing obligation²⁰. In the context of a debt restructuring, this presumption may mean lenders are required to ensure sufficient funds are available to the company so that it remains solvent for two years following completion of the restructuring.

4.3.4 Otherwise (and with the exception of transactions that are not rescindable at all), proof of prejudice is needed to rescind any other type of transaction. Consequently, it is a defence to show that no prejudice has been caused.

²⁰ Save for security granted in the context of a restructuring agreement discussed in 4.1.2 above.

- 4.3.5 Finally, specific actions (acciones de reintegración) that are aimed at rescinding transactions negatively affecting the company's pool of assets, cannot be brought by Receivers to set aside a transaction that is subject to the law of another state unless the transaction could be set aside not only under Spanish law, but also under the law of the other state.

QUESTION 5

5. Enforcement

By whom may action be brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3 above)?

5.1 Actions under corporate law

(a) The corporate action (acción social)

As a general rule, a corporate action must first be approved in a general shareholders' meeting. However, shareholders holding in aggregate at least 5% of the voting rights are entitled to commence a corporate action, even where the general body of shareholders is opposed to it.

Creditors may also be entitled to bring a corporate action if the assets of the company are insufficient to pay its debts.

The Insolvency Act entitles Receivers to bring this action without the approval of the general shareholders' meeting.

(b) The individual action (acción individual)

This is an action which may be brought by the company's shareholders, creditors and injured third parties to protect and recover personal assets of the claimant to the extent damaged by the actions of the director(s).

An individual action does not require shareholder approval.

5.2 Actions under the Spanish Criminal Code

(a) Criminal denounce (denuncia)

A criminal denounce may be filed by any individual.

(b) Complaint (querrela)

Shareholders of the company and injured third parties.

QUESTION 6

6. Remedies: orders available to the domestic court

In respect of the offences identified in questions 2, 3 and 4 above, what remedies are available in the domestic court?

6.1 Civil infringements

Any individual who considers that he/she has suffered damage as a consequence of the directors' behaviour can file a civil claim in the Spanish civil courts.

The Insolvency Act provides a specific remedy to obtain an order condemning the directors and others, which is dealt by the judge in charge of the insolvency during the qualification phase of the proceedings.

6.2 Criminal offences

The filing of criminal offences may take place by either:

- (a) filing a criminal denounce (denuncia) before the police, the public prosecutor or the criminal courts which thereby gives notice that a criminal offence may have been committed but does not actually invoke the exercise of any remedy in court.
- (b) filing a criminal complaint (querella) before the criminal courts which notifies the court of the potential criminal offence and effectively exercises such criminal remedy.

QUESTION 7

7. Duty to co-operate

- (a) To what extent are directors (and others identified in question 3 above) obliged to co-operate with an investigation into the company's affairs following its insolvency?
- (b) Are any human rights laws applicable in the domestic jurisdiction in relation to any such obligations (for example in the UK and other European jurisdictions Article 6 of the European Convention of Human Rights may apply if domestic law compels a person to provide potentially self-incriminating information at the request of the office-holder appointed under the relevant insolvency procedure adopted)?

7.1 General obligation to co-operate under the Insolvency Act

- 7.1.1 The Insolvency Act imposes the following obligations on an insolvent person/company:
- (a) a general obligation to appear before the judge and the Receivers whenever requested and to co-operate and provide information where necessary or convenient in the interests of the insolvency proceedings; and
 - (b) a specific obligation to provide the Receivers with all documentation relating to the financial aspects of its business.
- 7.1.2 All the directors, liquidators and attorneys of the insolvent company (and any former directors, liquidators and attorneys of the company in the two years immediately preceding the declaration of insolvency) are required to comply with this obligation.
- 7.1.3 Although in the context of the general obligation to co-operate, the Insolvency Act does not impose any specific co-operation provisions, it does state expressly that co-operation and the provision of information may be requested wherever necessary or convenient in the interests of the insolvency proceedings. This is a question of fact, dealt with on a case-by-case basis.
- 7.1.4 A breach of the obligation to co-operate and/or provide information gives rise automatically to a rebuttable presumption of guilty insolvency which may result in disciplinary or economic sanctions for the persons affected by the court decision that qualifies the insolvency as “guilty”.
- 7.1.5 Any director of a company (whether formally appointed or de facto) who is subject to the supervision of a regulatory authority may commit a criminal offence if he impedes the supervision of the regulatory authority or neglects to provide any document.

7.2 Obligation to co-operate under the Spanish Constitution

- 7.2.1 The Spanish Constitution (the Spanish Constitution) imposes an obligation to co-operate and provides that, during the course of trials and the execution of judgments, it is compulsory to assist judges and the courts alike.

7.3 Human rights

- 7.3.1 The Spanish Constitution provides that the principles relating to fundamental rights and liberties recognised by the Spanish Constitution shall be interpreted in accordance with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and international treaties and agreements ratified by Spain. Once a treaty is officially published in Spain, it forms part of the Spanish legal framework and its provisions may only be repealed, amended or suspended pursuant to the provisions of the treaty or the general rules of international law.

- 7.3.2 On 16 September 1979 Spain ratified and became a party to the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms of 4 November 1950. Therefore, this Convention forms part of the Spanish legal framework and the principles relating to fundamental rights and liberties recognised by the Spanish Constitution are to be interpreted in accordance with this convention.
- 7.3.3 Moreover, provisions of the Spanish Constitution governing fundamental rights significantly reinforce the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms of 4 November 1950. The following fundamental rights protected by the Spanish Constitution may be relevant in the context of insolvency proceedings:
- (a) Safeguarding and inviolability of domicile

No entry or search may be performed without consent except with a court order or where a flagrant criminal offence is taking place.
 - (b) Safeguarding and inviolability of the secrecy of communications

The secrecy of communications is guaranteed, in particular all postal, telegraphic and telephonic communications. No infringement of secrecy may take place without a court order.
 - (c) Freedom to set the state of residence and to relocate within the boundaries of the national territory and to enter and leave the national territory.
- 7.3.4 The Insolvency Act was enacted together with the Organic Law 8/2003, of 9 July²¹ (the Organic Insolvency Act) and provides the rules governing the impact of insolvency proceedings on fundamental rights. In light of the Organic Insolvency Act, the Commercial Court may make an order:
- (a) to enter and search the domicile of the company;
 - (b) to monitor the communications of the company (that is tapping communications), although the secrecy of the communications that do not relate to the insolvency proceedings must be preserved; and
 - (c) to require the company to stay in its place of residence, thereby restricting its freedom of movement.
- 7.3.5 These orders may be made in respect of the directors, liquidators and attorneys of the company and/or former directors, liquidators and attorneys who acted during the two years immediately preceding the declaration of insolvency.

7.3.6 In criminal proceedings, a number of fundamental rights are provided for by the Spanish Constitution. In particular every person has the right:

- (a) to a fair trial which shall be safeguarded by judges and courts;
- (b) to be tried by the judges and courts determined by the law;
- (c) to a trial without undue delay and with full procedural guarantees;
- (d) to the defence and assistance of a lawyer;
- (e) to be informed of the charges;
- (f) to use all evidence pertinent to the defence;
- (g) not to make self-incriminating statements; and
- (h) to the presumption of innocence.

QUESTION 8

8. Appeals and limitation periods

- (a) What limitation period, if any, will apply to actions brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3) in connection with the offences identified in question 2?
- (b) Please indicate whether an appeal is available from the decision of the lower courts.

8.1 Limitation periods

8.1.1 Actions under corporate law

- (a) The corporate action (accion social)

A limitation period of four years applies from the removal/dismissal of the director responsible.

- (b) The individual action (accion individual)

A limitation period of one year applies from the time the plaintiff had actual knowledge of the director's breach.

8.1.2 Actions under the Insolvency Act

These are dealt with by the Commercial Court in charge of the insolvency itself during the qualification phase of the proceedings.

8.2 Appeals

- 8.2.1 Judgments rendered by Spanish First Instance Courts can always be challenged before the relevant Provincial Court by filing an appeal.
- 8.2.2 Judgments rendered by the Spanish Provincial Courts can be appealed (recurso de casacion) before the Spanish Supreme Court if certain requirements are met such as the amount of the claim is over 150,000.00 euros and the appeal has a "cassational" interest (interes casacional).

QUESTION 9

9. Foreign vorporations

Do the legal provisions and procedures outlined above apply to both domestic and foreign corporations?

9.1 Spanish companies law

Both the LSA and LSRL govern companies incorporated as SA companies or SL companies in Spain. Therefore, foreign companies are not subject to the provisions of the Spanish Companies companies law.

9.2 The Insolvency Act

- 9.2.1 Under the Insolvency Act, two types of insolvency proceedings may be opened in Spain: main proceedings of universal scope (the Main Insolvency Proceedings) and the secondary proceedings of territorial scope (the Secondary Insolvency Proceedings).

Main insolvency proceedings

- 9.2.2 Main Insolvency Proceedings may be opened in Spain if the company's centre of main interest is located in Spain. "Centre of main interest" (the COMI) is defined as the place where the company conducts the administration of its interests on a regular basis, as ascertainable by third parties. A company's COMI is presumed to be the place of its registered office.
- 9.2.3 Despite the definition, it is not always clear what factors determine a company's COMI for the purposes of the Insolvency Act. The Insolvency Act does not include a list of points to be considered by the courts.

- 9.2.4 The European Court of Justice's (ECJ) decision in Eurofood contains some guidance as to how a company's COMI is to be assessed. The ECJ held that the location of a company's registered office is key to determining its COMI. The presumption that the company's COMI is the location of its registered office can only be rebutted if factors which are both objective and ascertainable by third parties enable it to be established that an actual situation exists which is different from the conclusion to which the registered office presumption would lead. Where a company carries on its business in the territory of the Member State where its registered office is situated, the mere fact that its economic choices are or can be controlled by a parent company in another Member State is not enough to rebut the registered office presumption. However, notwithstanding the Eurofood decision, guidance is still needed on what "interests" encompasses and which "interests" have greatest weight when seeking to rebut the registered office presumption.
- 9.2.5 To discourage companies from forum shopping, the Insolvency Act states that a change in the registered office of the company carried out within the six months prior to the request of the insolvency will be disregarded for the purpose of the COMI presumption.
- 9.2.6 Main Insolvency Proceedings will encompass all of the company's assets and will affect all creditors, wherever located, except where Secondary Insolvency Proceedings are opened, in which case the assets in that jurisdiction will be administered in those proceedings.
- 9.2.7 When Main Insolvency Proceedings are opened in Spain, the court involved will be the Commercial Court located where the company's COMI is, and Spanish law shall govern (subject to some exceptions) all aspects of the proceedings. The exceptions to the application of Spanish law include:
- (a) rights in rem (mortgages, pledges) of creditors and third parties in respect of assets and rights of the company located within the territory of another state;
 - (b) retention of title rights in respect of assets sold to the company and located within the territory of another state;
 - (c) rights of the company in real estate assets, ships and aircraft subject to registration in a public register under the authority of another state, as well as the validity of acts of disposal for consideration over these assets;
 - (d) rights under contracts in respect of real estate assets located in another state;
 - (e) rights under employment contracts governed by the law of another state;
 - (f) rights over securities represented by book-entries registered in another state;
 - (g) rights and obligations of the parties to a payment or settlement system or to a financial market regulated by the law of another state;

- (h) declarative judicial proceedings (juicios declarativos) pending in another state and concerning an asset or a right of which the company has been divested;
- (i) set-off rights where the set-off is governed (and permitted) by the non Spanish law applicable to the company's credit counterclaim²²; and
- (j) rights to set aside transactions. The specific actions (acciones de reintegración)²³ that are aimed at rescinding transactions negatively affecting the company's assets cannot be brought by the Receivers of Spanish insolvency proceedings to set aside a transaction that is subject to the law of another State unless the transaction could be set aside not only under Spanish law but also under the law of the other State.

Secondary insolvency proceedings

- 9.2.8 To the extent that a company's COMI is not located in Spain, Secondary Insolvency Proceedings may be opened if the company has an establishment in Spain. "Establishment" is defined as any place of operation where the company carries out a non-interim activity with human means and goods.
- 9.2.9 Secondary Insolvency Proceedings are governed by the same rules as Main Insolvency Proceedings; however, they will apply solely to the assets of the company located in Spain. Accordingly, any restriction on creditors' rights deriving from a settlement agreement approved within the Spanish proceedings, such as a stay in payment or discharge of debt, may not apply to those of the company's assets not covered by the Spanish insolvency proceedings, except with the consent of all creditors interested.
- 9.2.10 If Main Insolvency Proceedings are opened, rules on the co-ordination of proceedings will be applicable. Where the request to open Secondary Insolvency Proceedings is made after the recognition of Main Insolvency Proceedings, there will be no need to re-examine the question of solvency. The competent Commercial Court will be that of the location of the establishment.
- 9.2.11 The EU Regulation establishes common rules for cross-border insolvencies throughout the European Union and is directly applicable in all European member states (with the exception of Denmark). Accordingly, the Insolvency Act will be directly applicable except in those cases that fall outside the scope of the EU Regulation (that is, where the company is one of the corporate entities excluded from its application²⁴ or has its "centre of main interest" outside the territory of the European Union).

²² Under Spanish law, once the insolvency has been declared, no set-off is allowed between the credits and debts of the company; however any right of set-off that has been perfected prior to the declaration of the situation of insolvency will be enforceable.

²⁴ Insurance undertakings, credit institutions, collective investment undertakings and investment undertakings holding funds or securities for third parties are specifically excluded from the scope of the EU Regulation.

- 9.2.12 The aim of the Insolvency Act is to impose a framework for the efficient administration of cross-border insolvencies. In order for the framework to be successful and to reduce the scope for conflict between the parties involved so as to maximize the return for creditors, there needs to be co-operation between the relevant courts and co-ordination of the proceedings. The Insolvency Act attempts to address these issues in various ways. For example it sets out a regime, based on principles of mutual recognition and cooperation, for (i) the recognition and enforcement of foreign insolvency proceedings carried on outside the territory of the European Union; and (ii) the co-ordination of parallel insolvency proceedings. In addition, it states that the authority of the Commercial Courts is restricted, in international scope, to the issues that are closely related to those proceedings.
- 9.2.13 Whether the Insolvency Act, together with the EU Regulation, will create a streamlined insolvency regime applicable to cross-border insolvency proceedings remains to be seen. Principally, it will depend on the way the Commercial Courts interpret and apply its provisions.

9.3 Spanish Criminal Code

As a general rule, only criminal offences carried out in the Spanish territory are subject to the provisions of the Spanish Criminal Code.

QUESTION 10

10. Insurance

Is directors' and officers' insurance available in your jurisdiction? If so, to what extent will the availability of such insurance provide effective protection to directors against personal liability which may arise in connection with the issues raised in questions 1-9 above?

- 10.1 The strict legal regime on directors' liabilities introduced by Spanish company law caused a significant concern among directors of Spanish limited liability companies. As a consequence, a significant number of Spanish companies entered into directors' and managers' liability insurance policies.
- 10.2 In theory, directors and managers can protect themselves by including an indemnity clause in their contract of service (directors) or contract of employment (managers). Nonetheless, this protection is invariably backed up by an insurance contract entered into by the company. Premiums payable under the insurance policies are paid by the companies.
- 10.3 Most of the largest Spanish companies (especially listed companies) have directors' and managers' liability insurance policies. The larger the company, the more likely that it will offer insurance cover. Insurance policies tend to include standard provisions and are not usually subject to negotiation between the directors or the managers and the insurance company.

A standard directors' and managers' liability insurance policy would generally have the following features:

- (a) Parties: all senior executives and members of the board.
- (b) Coverage: any act carried out by the directors/managers producing economic loss to either the company, its shareholders or creditors and not expressly excluded in the policy, specifically:
 - (i) directors' civil liability;
 - (ii) defence and court expenses; and
 - (iii) deposits/bonds required by the courts.
- (c) Exclusions: these policies often exclude:
 - (i) acts of bad faith or wilful misconduct;
 - (ii) losses suffered by individuals or assets;
 - (iii) administrative fines;
 - (iv) actions taken by the majority shareholders; and
 - (v) liabilities based on facts or infringements actually known by the directors/managers.
- (d) Duration: an agreed contractual term. The insured director/manager will, therefore, be insured against any risk covered that is claimed within the contractual term.

QUESTION 11

11. How safe is it for directors and others to incur further credit during the twilight period?

- 11.1 When a company is in financial distress, no additional funding will normally be available unless it can ensure the future solvency of the company. This is because, pursuant to the Rescission Regime, transactions completed within the two years immediately preceding the date of the declaration of insolvency may be rescinded, whether or not there was intention to commit fraud.

- 11.2 Formally appointed directors may be held liable for any act or omission in breach of their duties to the company. De facto directors may be held liable for any act (but not omission) in breach of the duties that the directors duly appointed have to the company. All directors should ensure that any further credit incurred is, directly or indirectly, for the corporate benefit of the company and should be sufficiently comfortable that the transaction will not immediately cause the company to become insolvent (for example, because the company is incapable of timely compliance with its payment obligations).
- 11.3 In line with the above, it should be noted that:
- (a) directors and others may be held liable if the Commercial Court considers that in the creation or worsening of the state of insolvency, there was either dolus or gross negligence by the company or its legal representatives, directors or liquidators (whether in law or in fact); and
 - (b) directors (formally appointed or de facto) may be held criminally liable if the insolvency of the company was caused or aggravated with dolus by the company or by the directors.
- 11.4 Finally, directors and others may be held liable if they do not provide the lender with accurate and true information about the financial situation of the company. In this regard it should be noted that:
- (a) the Insolvency Act provides an irrebutable presumption of dolus or gross negligence if, before the declaration of insolvency, the company took legal action in order to mislead persons as to its financial situation; and
 - (b) the Spanish Criminal Code also makes it a criminal liability for any director (formally appointed or de facto) to forge the company's annual accounts or any other corporate document showing the legal or financial status of the company in a way that is capable of producing economic loss to any person.

Can an unconnected third party rely on the validity of transactions entered into by the company (in particular guarantees and securities) during the twilight period?

- 11.5 Under Spanish law, a distinction is made between a personal guarantee (payment undertakings) and a "real" guarantee (that is, security over assets).

Personal guarantees

- 11.6 In an insolvency scenario, the position of the guaranteed creditor will vary depending on whether or not the granting of the guarantee is or is not rescinded by the Commercial Court pursuant to the Rescission Regime (as set out in 4.1 above):

- (a) Where a guarantee has been granted within the two years prior to the declaration of insolvency and negatively affects the guarantor's assets, the guarantee may be rescinded by the Commercial Court. There is an irrebuttable presumption of damage in cases of disposals for no consideration; an upstream guarantee may be included in this category. If the Commercial Court declares the transaction rescinded, the transaction will be reversed. It is important to highlight, however, that any loss suffered by the beneficiary of the guarantee as a result of the reversal will be paid upon the reversal of the transaction as it will qualify as a Debt of the Pool of Assets (as opposed to a Debt of the Company), except where the Commercial Court declares the beneficiary acted in bad faith, in which case the claim of that beneficiary will be subordinated to the claims of other creditors.

Also, it must be noted that where the grant of new securities or guarantees forms part of a restructuring agreement with the requisites established in 4.1.2 such guarantees or securities will not be rescindable.

- (b) Where the guarantee has not been granted within the two-year period or is not considered to have caused economic damage to the guarantor's pool of assets, the guaranteed creditor shall be considered to be an ordinary creditor (that is, Debts of the Company). In this case, the effect that insolvency proceedings may have on guaranteed creditors varies depending on the manner in which the insolvency proceedings are brought to an end. If there is:
- (i) a settlement agreement, guarantee claims will be subject to the settlement agreement; or
 - (ii) a liquidation, guarantee claims will be subject to the general rules on the ranking of creditors.

- 11.7 Upon the declaration of insolvency, a creditor cannot initiate judicial or non-judicial enforcement procedures (with certain exceptions such as labour debts) and outstanding enforcement proceedings shall be suspended.

Security

- 11.8 The effect that insolvency proceedings may have on secured creditors (provided that the security is not rescinded under the Rescission Regime) varies depending on how the insolvency proceedings are brought to an end.

- (a) Where the proceedings end with a settlement agreement, secured creditors will not be subject to the settlement agreement unless they voted in favour of the settlement agreement that is finally approved, in which case they will lose their preferred status and be bound by the settlement agreement.

- (b) Where the proceedings end with liquidation, secured creditors must be paid out of the proceeds of sale from assets subject to their security (usually by means of public auction). If secured creditors are not paid in full from the secured assets, they are treated as ordinary creditors (that is, Debts of the Company) for the unsecured element of their claim and subject to the usual rules on priority and ranking of creditors. However, please note that:
 - (i) the judicial administrators may choose to pay secured amounts outstanding out of assets other than the secured assets. Any non matured secured claims are payable as a Debt of the Pool of Assets ranking ahead of the Debts of the Company; and
 - (ii) the court may authorise the sale of a secured asset with the security attached, the transferee assuming (as assignee) liability for the secured obligation (so that the payment obligation of the purchaser is not limited to the value of the secured asset).
- 11.9 Upon the declaration of insolvency, creditors cannot generally initiate judicial or non-judicial enforcement procedures, and outstanding enforcement proceedings are suspended.
- 11.10 In relation to security over an asset that is necessary for the performance of the company's business, the judicial declaration of insolvency:
- (a) prevents the enforcement of the security until the earlier of either (i) the approval of a settlement agreement which does not affect the right to enforce the relevant security; or (ii) the expiration of one year from the declaration of insolvency (if liquidation has not been initiated) (the Suspension Period); and
 - (b) suspends any ongoing enforcement proceedings for the duration of the Suspension Period unless (i) the announcement of an auction has been made prior to the declaration of insolvency; and (ii) the asset concerned is not necessary for the continuation of the business of the company.

APPENDIX: SUMMARY OF THE INSOLVENCY PROCEEDINGS

1. The insolvency declaration

Requirement to obtain the insolvency declaration

Under the New Insolvency Act a debtor is considered legally insolvent when it can not comply regularly with its due obligations." However, questions arise as to the legal meaning of:

(a) "inability to comply"

Under Spanish law, economic insolvency is not the same as legal insolvency; not every cessation of payments will be a symptom of insolvency. A debtor is not incapable of paying when it can organise payment (that is through the funding of the parent company, etc). The mere cessation of, or delay in, payments does not provide grounds to initiate insolvency proceedings;

(b) "regularly"

Regularity is not defined. It is undoubtedly broader than a breach of a single obligation. Regular implies a general and repeated cessation of payments; and

(c) "due"

Under Spanish law, obligations are due when fulfilment can be claimed in court.

1.2 Voluntary and necessary insolvency

There are two types of insolvency depending on who applies. Insolvency may be applied for by the debtor (Voluntary Insolvency) or by its creditors (Necessary Insolvency):

(a) Voluntary insolvency

The debtor is entitled to initiate Voluntary Insolvency proceedings in the event of imminent, and not actual, insolvency.

(b) Necessary insolvency

In order to file for Necessary Insolvency, a creditor must provide evidence of:

(i) actual, and not potential or imminent, insolvency;

(ii) the concurrence of, at least, one of the following:

(a) general cessation of payments by the debtor;

(b) the assets of the debtor having been generally seized or that there are insufficient free assets to be seized;

- (c) a concealment of assets or an accelerated or defeated liquidation of assets; or
- (d) a general breach during the three months preceding the filing of the insolvency application of either tax obligations, Social Security contributions and salaries, compensation or other amounts due to employees, provided, however, that the debt upon which the petition is founded must not have been acquired by the creditor, after becoming due and payable, during the six months period prior to the filing for insolvency.

1.3 Application period

The debtor is obliged to apply for insolvency within two months following the date on which it knows, or should have known, that it became insolvent. It is presumed that the debtor was aware of its insolvency if any of the circumstances that justify the filing for a Necessary Insolvency apply.

There is now also the option for the insolvent debtor to notify the court that it is entering into negotiations in order to obtain agreement to an Advanced (anticipated) Settlement Proposal (refer to paragraph 1.4 below) within the two month period for filing for insolvency. In this event, the court will grant the insolvent debtor a three month period to obtain sufficient agreement, following which the debtor company will have a month to file for insolvency. The initiation of this negotiation period prevents creditors of the insolvent debtor from filing for necessary insolvency.

1.4 Insolvency proceedings

1.4.1 Background

The New Insolvency Act unifies and simplifies the insolvency procedures by establishing a unique procedure divided into the following phases:

- (a) the filing of the insolvency application (the Application);
- (b) the common phase (the Common Phase);
- (c) the settlement and/or liquidation phase; and
- (d) the qualification of the insolvency.

1.5 The Application

- (a) The Application for insolvency must be in writing and must state whether the insolvency is actual or imminent and attach a number of documents including, among others:
 - (i) a report containing the financial and legal history of the debtor and the causes of the current financial situation; and
 - (ii) the books of accounts.

- (b) The Application is filed;
 - (i) with the Commercial Court in the place where the debtor has its centre of main interests, presumed to be the city where the company has its registered address; or
 - (ii) in the event that insolvency affects a number of companies forming part of the same group, the application is filed with the Commercial Court in the location where the parent company has its registered address.
- (c) In the event of a Necessary Insolvency, the debtor may agree or oppose the Application. If the Debtor opposes the application, it is obliged to deposit in court the amount of the outstanding debts which gave ground to the filing.
- (d) If the application is founded, the Commercial Court will make an insolvency order which, among other matters, will decide:
 - (i) the effect of the insolvency declaration on the powers to manage the business and/or dispose of its assets;
 - (ii) the interim measures necessary to secure the integrity of the debtor's estate;
 - (iii) the identity and powers of the Receivers.
- (A) Under the New Insolvency Act, there will generally be three Receivers:
 - a lawyer with, at least, 5 years effective experience;
 - a chartered accountant with, at least, 5 years effective experience; and
 - a creditor with an ordinary or preferential claim (but not a secured claim).

In the event of summary insolvency proceedings (generally reserved for debtors with aggregate liabilities below €1 million), only one Receiver will be appointed.

- (B) The appointment of Receivers for certain types of debtors is subject to special rules. Where the debtor is:
 - a listed company, the chartered accountant will be replaced by a representative of the Spanish Securities Market Commission;
 - a credit institution, the chartered accountant will be replaced by a representative of the Spanish Guarantee of Deposits Fund; and

- an insurance company, the chartered accountant will be replaced by a representative of the Spanish Insurance Compensation Consortium.

1.6 Common phase

Once the court has declared the debtor insolvent, the Common Phase of the procedure commences. The Common Phase comprises:

- (a) the preparation of a report by the Receivers (the Report of the Receivers) containing, at least:
 - (i) an analysis of the contents of the debtor's report;
 - (ii) the status of the debtor's accounts;
 - (iii) a summary of the decisions taken and acts performed by the Receivers;
 - (iv) the following documents:
 - (A) a list of the debtor's assets and rights;
 - (B) a list of the debtor's creditors; and
 - (C) an evaluation of the settlement proposals (if any) that have been submitted; and
 - (v) an analysis of the situation of the debtor's estate;
- (b) the publication of the Report of the Receivers; and
- (c) the granting of a certain time period so that the list of assets or the list of the creditors can be challenged:
 - (i) within the 10 days following receipt of the Report of the Receivers;
 - (ii) with the aim of:
 - (A) including/excluding any right or asset;
 - (B) increasing/decreasing the value of any asset or right; and
 - (C) including/excluding any claim or changing the classification of the claim; and
 - (iii) by commencing a parallel procedure known as an insolvency incident (an Insolvency Incident). An Insolvency Incident is a summary proceeding, the object of which is to discuss particular claims before the Commercial Court. The Insolvency Incident comprises the following phases:

- (A) the filing of a claim, subject to the same requirements as any other claim;
- (B) the filing of a writ of defence within the 10 days following notice of the decision admitting the claim;
- (C) the trial, during which the parties place all evidence that they deem appropriate and pertinent before the Commercial Court; and
- (D) the handing down of a judgment which, generally, cannot be appealed.

1.7 Settlement phase

(a) General considerations

One of the objects of the insolvency proceedings is to bring about the possibility of a settlement (the Settlement) either in terms of a reduction in the amount of the company's debts and/or the delay in the payment of the debts. The Settlement phase only takes place if:

- (i) the debtor has not requested liquidation; or
- (ii) if a proposal for a Settlement has not been approved during the Common Phase.

(b) Content of the Settlement

The Settlement is limited in its scope, given that it:

- (i) may include a reduction (quita) in the amount of the debts and/or the delay (espera) in the payment of the amounts due. However, common ordinary debts cannot be reduced by in excess of 50% of the amount of each debt, and/or subject to a delay in excess of 5 years;
- (ii) may propose different alternatives for different creditors or debts, including the conversion of debts into equity;
- (iii) may propose the sale of assets or rights devoted to the business activities or of certain business units to specific individuals; and
- (iv) must include a payment plan or feasibility plan, the latter only where fulfilment of the Settlement is subject to the income obtained from the continuation of the business.

However, the Settlement cannot consist of:

- (v) the assignment of assets or rights to creditors;

- (vi) the liquidation of the entire estate of the debtor; or
- (vii) the modification of the classification of claims.

(c) Consequences of the Settlement

The approval of any Settlement:

- (i) is fully effective from the date on which the Settlement is approved by the Commercial Court;
- (ii) triggers the cessation of the consequences of the insolvency, which are substituted by the specific measures approved by the Commercial Court;
- (iii) generally terminates the appointment of the Receivers, unless and to the extent otherwise provided for in the Settlement; and
- (iv) the Settlement,
 - (A) binds the debtor and the common ordinary and subordinated creditors;
 - (B) does not bind secured creditors unless they voted in favour of the Settlement or otherwise ratified, or adhered to, the Settlement; and
 - (C) does not affect or impair rights of creditors who voted against the Settlement in respect of third parties jointly liable with, or guarantors of, the debtor.

(d) Settlement proceedings

Settlement proposals can be filed with the Commercial Court:

- (i) any time between the final date for creditors to give notice of their claims and the final date for challenging the Report of the Receivers; or
- (ii) between the opening of the Settlement Phase (which takes place after the approval by the court of the Report of the Receivers) and 40 days prior to the date appointed for the creditors' meeting. The Receivers are obliged to prepare a report on the various Settlement proposal(s) filed.

Once filed, the proposals are analysed at a creditors' general meeting. Only one Settlement proposal can be approved by a majority of votes of, at least, half of the ordinary claims of the creditors.

However, if the Settlement proposes that full payment of the debts is to be completed within three years or, alternatively, that immediate payment of due ordinary debts are to be reduced by no more than a 20%, a simple majority of ordinary debts will be sufficient to approve the Settlement. Notwithstanding approval, the debtor, its shareholders or even the creditors are entitled to challenge the Settlement by initiating an Insolvency Incident, at which the Commercial Court will definitively approve or reject the Settlement.

It is important to note that,

- (iii) once the Settlement has been complied with by the debtor, the debtor is entitled to request the Commercial Court to issue a judicial declaration of compliance with the Settlement; and
- (iv) conversely, any creditor may request the Commercial Court to declare that the debtor has breached the Settlement. If the request is successful, the Commercial Court will order the rescission (that is termination) of the Settlement.

(d) Advanced Settlement proposal

In addition, the debtor is entitled to file advanced/anticipated Settlement proposals (each one, an Advanced Settlement Proposal) at any time until the expiry of the period in which creditors can give notice of their claims. An Advanced Settlement Proposal can only be filed if the debtor has not:

- (i) been found guilty by definitive ruling of an economic crime; and
- (ii) breached its obligation to deposit its annual accounts during the last three financial years.

Advanced Settlement Proposals are also subject to the Report of the Receivers, and can be approved any time before the end of the period for challenging the list of assets. If approved, the Commercial Court will not need to initiate the Settlement phase.

An Advanced Settlement Proposal needs only the agreement of 10% of the creditors in order to be admitted if it is filed at the same time as the filing for insolvency.

1.8 Liquidation phase

Liquidation only takes place:

- (a) at the debtor's request, in the context of a Voluntary Insolvency, if:
 - (i) the debtor applies for liquidation as part of its Application; and
 - (ii) no Settlement proposals have been approved;

- (b) when the debtor becomes aware that it is unable to comply with the terms of an approved Settlement; or
- (c) if the Commercial Court decides, based on:
 - (i) failure to file a Settlement proposal or failure to admit any of those filed;
 - (ii) rejection by the Commercial Court of any Settlement proposal accepted at a creditors' general meeting;
 - (iii) the Settlement being void; or
 - (iv) a breach of the Settlement.

Liquidation triggers the suspension of the debtor's powers to administer the business and/or to dispose of its assets, as well as the winding up of the debtor and the maturity of any debt.

Moreover, liquidation provides for the possibility of establishing a liquidation plan subject to the Commercial Court authorisation.

1.9 Qualification of insolvency

Insolvency is subject to qualification, either (i) upon approval of a Settlement which foresees a reduction in excess of one third of the amount of the debts or a delay of payments in excess of three years or (ii) when the debtor enters into liquidation.

Insolvency can be qualified as either fortuitous or guilty.

- (a) An insolvency is considered guilty where the debtor:
 - (i) has breached its accounting obligations;
 - (ii) has filed false or untrue documents with the Application;
 - (iii) has breached the Settlement; or
 - (iv) has concealed assets.
- (b) The qualification of insolvency as guilty may disqualify the individuals who managed the debtor from administering assets for a 15 year period and declare them personally liable for all or part of the debts.

UNITED STATES

Background discussion of applicable law

A. Multiplicity of jurisdictions

Any discussion of the potential liability of officers and directors of an insolvent business entity in the United States must first recognize the multiplicity of jurisdictions whose law may apply to address the various issues.

Generally, the internal affairs of a business entity are governed by the law of its jurisdiction of formation. This proposition is commonly known as the internal affairs doctrine. Accordingly, Delaware law will govern issues pertaining to the internal affairs of a corporation formed under Delaware law, New York law will govern the affairs of a corporation formed under New York law, and so on. The internal affairs of a corporation or limited liability company include issues of governance, capitalization, dividends and the fiduciary duties of its managers.

Other important issues that are discussed in this paper may not fall within the internal affairs doctrine, because the issue is not limited to the internal workings of the entity. For example, what law governs a claim that the transfer of corporate property to its corporate parent for less than fair value should be avoided as a fraudulent transfer where the corporation is formed in Delaware, its main office is in New York, the transferred property is located in California and the complaining creditor brings suit in Texas? The point of the question is that in the United States, choice of applicable law can be a complicated matter and there are fifty-two separate jurisdictions (each of the states, Federal law and the District of Columbia).

Generally, this paper will focus on the corporate law of Delaware, because Delaware remains a popular jurisdiction for incorporation, and on Federal law. Federal law is of importance because many of the issues raised in this paper are litigated and resolved in the United States Bankruptcy Court, not in the state courts. This paper will highlight noteworthy State law decisions other than Delaware when appropriate.

Practice consideration: Counsel must always be aware of the state of incorporation or formation of the relevant business entity. The law of the state of incorporation (or formation in the case of a limited liability company or limited partnership) will govern many important questions relating to the potential liability of an entity's officers and directors.

Statutory references

In 1978 the U.S. Congress passed the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978, replacing the Bankruptcy Act of 1898. The Reform Act is commonly referred to as the United States Bankruptcy Code and is codified at Title 11, of the United States Code. In these materials, the Code refers to the United States Bankruptcy Code. The Code is administered by the United States Bankruptcy Court, a federal court ancillary to the Federal District Court. Many of the issues discussed in these materials are played out in the United States Bankruptcy Court under the Code, either because insolvent business entities voluntarily seek the protection of the Bankruptcy Court or because unpaid creditors of the insolvent entity file an involuntary petition against the debtor under the Code. The Code, of course, is Federal law and is therefore uniform, in theory, throughout the United States. As with all Federal law, however, there are differences among the federal courts in their interpretation and application of the various provisions of the Code.

After the Code, one of the most significant statutory provisions of relevance in the context of an insolvent business entity is the Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act ("UFTA"). UFTA was promulgated by the Commissioners on Uniform Laws and has been enacted in substance in 43 states and the District of Columbia. Most of those states that have not enacted UFTA have an earlier version of the Uniform law known as the Uniform Fraudulent Conveyance Act. Both laws address the circumstances under which creditors of an insolvent entity may avoid (or undo) a conveyance of property or the incurrence of an obligation by the insolvent entity. UFTA is state, not Federal law. Counsel must be aware of local variations in the enactment of UFTA that may be applicable.

Every state has enacted at least some articles of the Uniform Commercial Code ("UCC"), and all have adopted Article 9 of the UCC, as amended in 2000 ("Revised Article Nine"). The UCC is cited in the text in reference to the rights of sellers of goods to an insolvent buyer. Revised Article Nine of the UCC governs the grant and perfection of security interests in certain tangible and intangible personal property.

As noted above, the corporation codes of the various states will also play a significant role in determining the potential liability of the officers and directors of an insolvent business entity.

Business entity nomenclature

Most corporations formed in one of the fifty States and the District of Columbia are governed by a Board of Directors. Some states permit the corporation to be governed directly by the shareholders, but subject to a limit on the number of shareholders in the entity. The Directors are elected by the shareholders of the corporation. The Directors set the basic policy and direction of the entity and usually must approve all material decisions, such as the incurrence of secured debt or the sale of assets. The Directors also adopt and occasionally amend the corporation's by-laws, which are the procedural rules for the governance of the corporation. As will be seen below, a corporation's by-laws may have substantive significance.

The business of the corporation is managed by its officers and executed by its employees and other agents. The officers are elected or appointed by the Directors of the corporation (or the shareholders if the corporation is governed directly by its shareholders). Most states require that a corporation have a President, Treasurer and Secretary. The corporation may have numerous inferior officers, such as Vice Presidents.

The limited liability company is becoming an increasingly popular form of business entity in the United States. Like the corporation, the limited liability company generally shields its owners from liability for the debts of the entity. Also, the limited liability company is a “flow through” entity for U.S. Federal income tax purposes. The income and loss of the entity is passed through to its owners and is not taxed at the entity level. The availability of flow through tax status in the corporate form is more limited under the U.S. Internal Revenue Code and this fact alone accounts for much of the popularity of the limited liability company.

Like a corporation, the limited liability company is formed under the laws of one of the fifty states. The LLC, as it is usually referred to, may be managed by its members or by managers, depending on the terms of its Operating Agreement. The members of the LLC are analogous to the shareholders of a corporation. The managers of the LLC, if any, are analogous to the directors of a corporation. An LLC may also have officers, appointed by the members or the managers.

Practice consideration: Control is the key concept to remember in the context of a discussion of the possible liability of officers, directors and managers. Fiduciary duties and potential statutory liabilities follow control. Whether one is an officer, director, controlling shareholder or even a lender, the risk of liability follows and flows from control of the insolvent entity.

QUESTION 1

1. The start and duration of the “twilight” period

What is the length of the period ending with formal insolvency proceedings during which transactions entered into by a company are vulnerable to attack or are liable to give rise to personal liability on the part of directors and/or others involved in the management of the company?

The “Twilight” period during which the directors or managers of a business entity face substantially increased risk exists for so long as the entity is insolvent. The increased risk of liability also exists in the context of a proposed transaction that may render the entity insolvent.

Courts in the United States generally have two choices in determining whether a corporation is insolvent, unless the choice is determined by an applicable statute. The balance sheet test determines whether a company is insolvent based strictly upon the company's balance sheet. Under the balance sheet test, a company is insolvent if its assets, fairly valued, do not exceed the amount of its liabilities. Under the equity test, an entity is insolvent if it is not meeting its obligations generally as they come due, regardless of the condition of the entities' balance sheet.

For example, under UFTA, a version of which is in effect in 44 jurisdictions, insolvency is defined using the balance sheet test, but is presumed if the equity standard is satisfied. Under the United States Bankruptcy Code, an involuntary petition for relief filed against a debtor shall be granted if the entity is not paying its debts generally as they come due.

The Delaware Chancery Court in two cases, both involving actions brought by shareholders against directors for breach of fiduciary duties, has defined how to determine insolvency. In Francotyp-Postalia Ag & Co. v. On Target Tech., Inc., No. 16330, 1998 WL 928382 (Del. Ch. Ct. Dec. 24, 1998), the court rejected the balance sheet approach and stated that a corporation is insolvent "when a corporation is unable to meet its debts as they fall due in the usual course of business. Id. at *5. The Court rejected the balance sheet approach because it "ignores the realities of the business world in which corporations incur significant debt in order to seize business opportunities. [This approach] could lead to a flood of litigation arising from alleged insolvencies and to premature appointments of custodians and potential corporate liquidations." Id. In Odyssey Partners, L.P. v. Fleming Companies, Inc., 735 A.2d 386 (Del. Ch. 1999), the court adopted the equity approach in defining insolvency without a discussion of any alternatives. These cases indicate that Delaware has determined that one means of demonstrating that a corporation is insolvent is by showing that it is "unable to pay its debts as they fall due in the usual course of business." Id. at 417. That said, whether an entity is insolvent is ultimately a question of fact which may be proved, depending on the circumstances, using various methodologies. See generally Blackmore Partners, L.P. v. Link Energy, LLC, 2005 WL 2709639, at *3 (Del. Ch. Ct. Oct. 14, 2005) (concluding, in the summary judgment context, that the defendant was insolvent, because the only evidence on summary judgment demonstrated insolvency under each of three tests: the balance sheet test, the equity test, and a third, "unreasonably small capital" test, under which a company is insolvent unless it can either (1) successfully issue new equity; or (2) restructure existing debt).

QUESTION 2

2. Actions potentially giving rise to liability for officers and directors

- (a) In respect of which acts during the “twilight” period may a director be held personally liable or which may otherwise have adverse consequences for him?
- (b) In relation to each act identified in (a) above:
 - (i) is any resulting liability against a director civil, criminal or both?
 - (ii) can a director be made personally liable in respect of the whole loss caused to the company or the deficit to creditors?
 - (iii) will liability attach to individual directors in proportion to their specific involvement?
 - (iv) is there a specific period before commencement of a subsequent insolvency procedure within which the relevant act must have been undertaken in order for liability to attach to a director? and
 - (v) what defences, if any, will be available in relation to each offence?

A. The Trust Fund Doctrine; Director fiduciary duties in the vicinity of insolvency and the Business Judgement Rule

(i) Introduction

Counsel representing an insolvent corporation or a corporation about to undertake a transaction that may render it insolvent must now reckon with the judicially recognized duties owed by the corporation's directors to the company's creditors. The duty of directors to creditors in the context of an insolvent entity has long been recognized in the courts. The earlier cases find the duty in the elementary rules of priority: The claims of creditors take priority over the claims of equity. These cases often describe the duty in the context of the Trust Fund Doctrine, discussed further below. More recent precedent, especially that from Delaware or dealing with the internal affairs of Delaware corporations and applying Delaware law, have expressed the obligations of directors in traditional corporate law terms. These courts have identified a fiduciary duty of directors owed to creditors and have applied familiar Delaware corporate law concepts such as the business judgement rule to determine whether liability exists.

(ii) The Trust Fund Doctrine

The trust fund doctrine posits that the assets of an insolvent corporation are held in trust for the creditors and that the directors are the trustees. Cases espousing the doctrine are legion: See cases cited at Fletcher Cyclopedia Corporations, Vol. 15A §7369 - §7371; In re Brockway Mfg. Co., 89 Me. 121, 126 (Me. 1896) (adopting the “plain proposition that the stock and property of every corporation is to be regarded as a trust fund for the payment of its debts, and that its creditors have a lien thereon and the right to priority of payment over any stockholder”); Pepper v. Litton, 308 U.S. 295, 307, 60 S.Ct. 238, 245 (1939) (“While normally [the] fiduciary obligation is enforceable directly by the corporation, or through a stockholders derivative action, it is, in the event of bankruptcy of the corporation, enforceable by the [bankruptcy] trustee.”) See also, Davis v. Woolf, 147 F.2d 629, 633 (4th Cir. 1945) (“The law by the great weight of authority seems to be settled that when a corporation becomes insolvent, or in a failing condition, the officers and directors no longer represent the stockholders, but by the fact of insolvency, become trustees for the creditors . . .”, quoting with approval Arnold v. Knapp, 75 W.Va. 804, 811, 84 S.E. 895, 899 (1915); F.D.I.C. v. Sea Pines Co., 692 F.2d 973 (4th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 103 S.Ct. 2089, 461 U.S. 928 (1982) (same); Automatic Canteen Co. of America v. Wharton, 358 F.2d 587 (2d Cir. 1966) (same applying Indiana law); U.S. v. Spitzer, 261 F.Supp. 754 (D.C.N.Y. 1966) (same applying New York law); Clarkson Co. Ltd. v. Shaheen, 660 F.2d 506, (2d Cir. 1981) cert. denied, 102 S.Ct. 1614, 455 U.S. 990 (under New York law, duty to creditors arises upon solvency, not merely when failure is imminent and foreseeable); Geyer v. Ingersoll Publications Co., 621 A.2d 784, 787-88 (Del. Ch. 1992) (fiduciary duty arises upon insolvency, not upon bankruptcy); Willren’s Fuel Dist., Inc. v. Noreen, 882 P.2d 399 (Alaska 1994) (same); A.R. Teelers & Assoc., Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 836 P.2d 1034 (Ariz. 1992) (same applying Arizona law).

If the common law imposes a trust relationship, that relationship must exist with reference to a res. In this context, the res is the assets of the corporation which constitute a trust fund for the creditors, and the officers and directors are the trustees, whether or not they are ready, willing or able. The duty of the trustees is to manage the assets of the insolvent corporation for the benefit of the creditors, not for the stockholders and certainly not for themselves. In re Hospital General San Carlos, Inc., 76 B.R. 10 (D.C. Puerto Rico 1987); Coleman v. Howe, 154 Ill. 458, 467, 39 N.E. 725, 727 (1895) (“It is the duty of the directors of a corporation to manage its capital stock as a trust fund for the benefit of its stockholders while it exists and of its creditors in case of its dissolution.”); but see Section 2(a)(v), infra (describing how boards of corporations in the “vicinity of insolvency” owe an obligation to the corporate enterprise as a whole).

Practice consideration: Courts in the United States have recognized that the fiduciary obligations of directors “switch” from a duty owed to shareholders to a duty owed to creditors when the entity is insolvent. This means that the first allegiance of directors of an insolvent entity must be to creditors and that creditors may bring an action against the directors for breach of fiduciary duty.

(iii) The Business Judgement Rule

A majority of jurisdictions, including Delaware, provide corporate directors with a safe harbour known as the business judgement rule, which insulates them from liability in connection with certain business decisions. See In re Xonics, 99 B.R. 870, 876 (Bankr. N.D. Ill. 1989). The business judgement rule is a presumption that in making business decisions not involving direct self-interest or self-dealing, corporate directors act on an informed basis, in good faith, and in the honest belief that their actions are in the corporation's best interest. The rule shields directors and officers from liability for unprofitable or harmful corporate transactions if the transactions were made in good faith, with due care, and within the directors' or officers' authority. See Black's Law Dictionary, 192 (7th ed. 1999); See also Aronson v. Lewis, 473 A.2d 805, 812 (Del. 1984). Under a business judgement analysis, although directors of an insolvent corporation owe fiduciary duties to its creditors, they may continue to take ordinary operational risks in trying to save the company through methods they reasonably believe have a good chance of success. See Paramount Communications, Inc. v. Time, Inc., 571 A.2d 1140 (Del. 1989). The application of the business judgement rule shields disinterested directors from liability, in the absence of fraud or illegality, for those business decisions made in good faith for the benefit of the corporation.

Practice consideration: The business judgement rule, applied by a majority of jurisdictions, is the most important legal protection available to the directors of a business entity when their decisions are challenged by those who have been harmed by the consequences of those decisions. To avail themselves of the business judgement rule, directors must:

- Inform themselves with respect to the matter for determination by studying and relying upon information that a reasonable person in similar circumstances would find persuasive; and
- The directors must be free from a conflict of interest with respect to the matter for decision.

FDIC v. Sea Pines Co., 692 F.2d 973 (4th Cir. 1982) illustrates conduct by directors which is not shielded by the business judgement rule. In FDIC v. Sea Pines Co., a parent corporation and subsidiary had interlocking Boards of Directors. Upon the insolvency of the subsidiary, the court found that the directors of the subsidiary breached their fiduciary duty to creditors of the subsidiary, including a failed financial institution, through a series of intercorporate transactions. The court then imposed liability upon the parent corporation based upon the breach of fiduciary duty owed to creditors by the subsidiary and the substantial overlap in the make-up of the two boards of directors. The directors were not shielded by the business judgement rule in this case because the intercorporate transactions were not made in good faith or for the benefit of the subsidiary. The directors were trying to avoid paying the creditors of the subsidiary by transferring its assets to the parent. This type of self-dealing, bad faith transaction violates the duty directors of insolvent corporations owe creditors, and results in the directors being held personally liable for the debts of the corporation.

(iv) The New York Rule

New York adheres to a minority rule: the strict application of the Trust Fund Doctrine. In New York Credit Men's Adjustment Bureau, Inc. v. Weiss, 110 N.E. 2d 397 (N.Y. 1953), the governing case in New York, the trustee in bankruptcy sued two directors of a bankrupt company seeking to impose personal liability on the directors for failure to obtain maximum value in selling the insolvent corporation's assets. See id. at 399. The action was based upon a New York statute which permitted the suit to be brought against directors for neglect or failure to perform their duties. See id. at 397. The defendant directors, after cutting expenses, determined that they were unable to continue their business, so they decided to liquidate the corporation's assets at public auction, which only netted about one third of value of the assets. See id. at 398. Despite a complete lack of evidence indicating fraud or insider benefit by the directors, the court held that the case should not be dismissed and noted that if the corporation was insolvent at the time of the alleged breach of fiduciary duty, "it is clear that [the] defendants, as officers and directors thereof, were to be considered as though trustees of the property for the corporate creditor-beneficiaries." Id. Since the assets could have been sold for more money, the directors could be held liable for the difference, regardless of their good faith or motive in the transaction. This standard would apply even if the corporation was solvent, if insolvency was imminent. See *id.*¹

Strict application of the trust fund doctrine fully protects creditors of an insolvent corporation but the doctrine may make people reluctant to become directors for fear of personal liability. As a result, only a minority of jurisdictions have adopted strict adherence to the trust fund doctrine.

(v) The "At Risk" Transaction

In recent decades, there has been substantial confusion over the obligations, duties, and liabilities for directors of corporations in "the vicinity of insolvency." This uncertainty traces itself back to the Chancery Court's decision in Credit Lyonnais Bank Nederland v. Pathe Communications Corp., 1991 WL 277613 (Del.Ch. December 30 1991) the directors were sued by a shareholder holding 98% of the company's stock for breach of fiduciary duty to the shareholder. The corporation, MGM post leveraged buyout, was operating "in the vicinity of insolvency". The shareholder complained that the directors had failed to approve a sale of assets which the shareholder sought because the proceeds of the sale would have paid down bank debt and returned control of the company from the bank to the shareholder. The directors refused to authorize the sale because they suspected that the sale price was too low and that the shareholder was principally concerned with paying down bank debt to regain control and not maximizing the value of the company's assets. In ruling that the directors had not breached their duty to the shareholder, the Chancellor stated:

¹ In Clarkson Co. Ltd. v. Shaheen, 660 F.2d 506 (2d Cir. 1981), cert. denied, 455 U.S. 990 (1981), a Canadian receiver brought suit against individual directors who approved and participated in loans made by the insolvent corporation to affiliated corporations. Among other things, the directors approved the conversion of the loans from demand instruments to term obligations with no payments due until maturity ten years hence. On appeal, the Second Circuit confirmed that the directors owed a fiduciary duty to creditors that could be enforced by the receiver. The jury verdict affirmed for the most part on appeal, amounted to thirty million dollars apportioned among the directors.

At least where a corporation is operating in the vicinity of insolvency, a board of directors is not merely the agent of the residue risk bearers, but owes its duty to the corporate enterprise. . . . [T]he MGM board or its executive committee had an obligation to the community of interest that sustained the corporation, to exercise judgement in an informed, good faith effort to maximize the corporation's long-term wealth creating capacity. Id. at *34.

The Chancery Court noted that the “possibility of insolvency can do curious things to incentives, exposing creditors to risks of opportunistic behaviour, and creating complexities for directors. Id. at fn 55. The Credit Lyonnais court then went on to provide an intriguing example of the conflicting demands upon a director of a corporation operating in the shadow of insolvency. In the court's example, assume that the sole asset of a corporation is a legal claim for 51 million dollars, with a one in four chance of success. Assume further that the only creditors of the company are bondholders with a 12 million dollar claim. At what dollar amount should the directors settle the legal claim, assuming they have the opportunity to do so? The creditors want to get out at 12 million. The shareholders want more, but their risk taking jeopardizes the rights of creditors. The court stated:

[I]f we consider the community of interests that the corporation represents it seems apparent that one should in this hypothetical accept the best settlement offer available providing it is greater than [the value of the claim divided by the probability of success] and one below that amount should be rejected. But that result will not be reached by a director who thinks he owes duties directly to shareholders only. It will be reached by directors who are capable of conceiving of the corporation as a legal and economic entity. Such directors will recognize that in managing the business affairs of a solvent corporation in the vicinity of insolvency, circumstances may arise when the right (both the efficient and the fair) course to follow for the corporation may diverge from the choice that the stockholders (or the creditors, or the employees, or any single group interested in the corporation) would make if given the opportunity to act. Id.

The court concluded that the directors had not breached duties owed to the 98% shareholder in refusing to authorize a sale of assets at fire sale prices. The director's duty, in the shadow of insolvency, is owed to the entity, not merely to a single constituency.

More recently, in National American Catholic Educational Programming Foundation, Inc. v. Gheewalla, 290 A.2d 92 (De. 2007), the Delaware Supreme Court clarified the rights that corporate creditors have against corporations which are insolvent. Under Gheewalla, creditors have no direct fiduciary duty claims against a corporation, regardless of the solvency of that entity. However, when a corporation is insolvent, creditors effectively stand in the shoes of the shareholders, and thus may maintain derivative claims on behalf of the corporation against the directors for breach of fiduciary duty. Gheewalla did not address whether that same right to bring derivative claims also exist for creditors of corporations which are solvent but in the “zone” or “vicinity” of insolvency.

It is significant to note that neither the Credit Lyonnais case nor its progeny have enunciated any guidelines for when a corporation enters into the “vicinity of insolvency.” See Gregory Scott Crespi, Rethinking Corporate Fiduciary Duties: The Inefficiency of the Shareholder Primacy Norm, 55 S.M.U. L. Rev. 141, 153 n. 33 (2002) (canvassing various law review articles commenting on the ambiguity and difficulty of applying the “vicinity of insolvency” test). Attorneys advising corporate boards should be aware of this uncertainty and advise their clients accordingly. See generally Douglas G. Baird and M. Todd Henderson, Other People’s Money, 60 Stanford L. Rev. 1309, 1325-26 (March 2008) (discussing the distinction and tension between the default rights of creditors and the obligations of a corporate board to the corporation’s shareholders).

Practice consideration: Generally, there is no equivalent liability in the United States for what is referred to as wrongful trading in Great Britain and other jurisdictions. Officers and Directors of an insolvent business entity, however, must carefully examine the totality of the circumstances surrounding the continued incurrence of trade debt to analyze whether the directors will be able to avail themselves of the business judgement rule if they should choose to allow the company to continue to operate. Directors should ask themselves what the likelihood is of a successful turnaround that will enable the company to meet its obligations. Directors should be certain that they are acting reasonably with respect to any financial analyses on which they are relying and they must analyze whether their decision is tainted by a conflict of interest.

Practice consideration: One reason for the popularity of reorganization proceedings under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code is that the Bankruptcy Court must approve, after notice and hearing, any transaction outside of the ordinary course of business for the debtor entity. See 11 U.S.C. § 363. Court approval, following notice to creditors and hearing, ought to insulate corporate directors from liability with respect to the proposed transaction, provided that the transaction and its consequences have been accurately disclosed in the court filings.

Practice consideration: Another reason for the popularity of reorganization proceedings under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code is the reduction or the removal of the risk that the continued accrual of unpaid trade debt will result in liability to the directors of the entity. Upon filing, the debtor is prohibited in most circumstances for paying any pre-filing unsecured debt other than by means of a Plan of Reorganization. The freeze on paying existing trade debt inevitably creates a cash flow benefit that should enable the debtor to meet its current obligations, at least for a time. Continued failure to pay trade debt following a Chapter 11 filing, however, is not permitted and can lead to various consequences, including conversion to Chapter 7.

- (vi) In re Healthco Intern., Inc., 208 B.R. 288 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1997) - Another example.

Healthco involved a business failure following a leveraged buyout. Applying Delaware law, the Bankruptcy Court ruled as follows:

- The bankruptcy trustee has standing to bring a breach of fiduciary duty claim against the directors of the failed company, because the duty is owed to the debtor and breach of that duty is a claim of the debtor. Id. at 300.²
- When a transaction renders a corporation insolvent or brings it to the brink of insolvency, “the rights of creditors become paramount.” Id.
- A duty to both shareholders and creditors is not irreconcilable. The duties are incident to the duties of directors to the corporation. “A distribution to stockholders which renders the corporation insolvent or leaves it with unreasonably small capital, threatens the very existence of the corporation. This is prejudicial to all constituencies, including creditors, employees and stockholders retaining an ownership interest.” Id.
- Unreasonably small capital, within the meaning of the fraudulent transfer statutes, means a condition in which insolvency, in the liquidity sense, is reasonably foreseeable. Id. at 302.
- Under Delaware law, the business judgement rule essentially requires a showing of gross negligence before a director can incur liability for her business decision. Several of the Healthco directors, however, could not rely upon the business judgement rule, because they had a material financial interest in the outcome of the transaction on which they voted. Instead, those directors had the burden of proving that their actions did not render the corporation insolvent or with unreasonably small capital.
- An additional prerequisite to a defence based on the business judgement rule is that the director has adequately informed herself with respect to the matter under consideration. Two Healthco directors, who may not have had a material interest in the outcome of the LBO, nonetheless cannot avail themselves of the business judgement rule because they failed to adequately inform themselves before voting on the transaction. The directors did not even review financial projections with respect to the post buy-out enterprise.
- Advisors and investment bankers risk liability for aiding and abetting a breach of fiduciary duty by directors.

² In a Chapter 7 or straight liquidation proceeding, a trustee is appointed to assemble and liquidate the debtor's assets. In a Chapter 11 or reorganization proceeding, although a trustee can be appointed for cause, the debtor ordinarily retains possession and control of its assets. The debtor-in-possession has the powers of a trustee and is a fiduciary of the bankruptcy estate. The trustee or debtor-in-possession controls the administration of the bankruptcy estate during the proceeding.

B. Director liability under the Uniform Fraudulent Transfers Act

The Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act has been enacted in 44 jurisdictions, with some local variation. UFTA governs those circumstances under which the transfer of property or the incurrence of an obligation by an insolvent entity may be avoided by creditors of the entity. Generally, the officers and directors of an insolvent entity risk liability under UFTA only if they are the transferee of the property of the insolvent entity. However, the directors of an insolvent entity risk liability for breach of their fiduciary duties to creditors (or to the company) if they vote for or permit the insolvent entity to engage in or undertake a fraudulent transfer.

Transfers avoidable by existing creditors - Under UFTA, a transfer of property or the incurrence of an obligation is avoidable by existing creditors of the entity if the transfer was made or the obligation incurred for less than reasonably equivalent value and the debtor was insolvent at the time of the transfer or incurrence of the obligation or was rendered insolvent thereby.

Transfers avoidable by existing and future creditors - Under UFTA, a transfer of property or the incurrence of an obligation is avoidable by existing and future creditors of the entity if:

- (i) The transfer was made or the obligation incurred with actual intent to hinder, delay or defraud creditors; or
- (ii) The transfer was made without receiving reasonably equivalent value and the debtor:
 - (a) was engaged or was about to engage in a business or a transaction for which the remaining assets of the entity were unreasonably small in relation to the business activity to be undertaken; or
 - (b) intended to incur or reasonably should have believed that it would incur debts beyond its ability to pay as those debts came due.

Practice consideration: A majority of the breach of fiduciary duty claims against directors of an insolvent entity relate to the director's authorization of a transaction that is challenged as a fraudulent transfer. These challenged transfers generally take one of two forms:

- (i) The transfer of property from the insolvent entity to a corporate parent, either in the form of the outright conveyance of tangible or intangible property or in the form of a dividend; and
- (ii) The incurrence of a debt by the insolvent entity where the entity receives little or no value on account of the obligation. The classic examples include:
 - (a) The guaranty of the obligations of the parent or an affiliate; and;

- (b) The incurrence of debt in the context of a “leveraged buy out”. In a leveraged buyout, the entity incurs debt and encumbers its assets to enable the acquirer to buy the stock of the selling shareholders.

Directors asked to approve any of the foregoing transactions should be aware that they risk liability to existing and future unpaid creditors of the insolvent entity.

C. Director liability for unlawful dividends and redemptions

Each state’s corporation’s law specifies the circumstances under which the corporation can redeem its outstanding shares or issue and pay dividends. Likewise, each state’s corporations law set forth the penalties that may be imposed on directors that authorize a dividend or a redemption in violation of the applicable standards.

Under Delaware law, directors have liability for the wilful or negligent violation of the applicable provisions of Delaware’s corporations law governing the redemption of stock or the issuance of dividends. In either case, the directors are each jointly and severally liable to the corporation and its creditors for the full amount paid out in dividends or on account of the redemption.

Delaware law provides that a corporation may not redeem outstanding shares when its capital is impaired or would be impaired by the redemption. This means that the corporation may only use capital surplus to effect a redemption. Capital surplus may generally be thought of as the amount by which the total assets of the company exceed its total liabilities. If a promissory note or other debt instrument is given as payment for a redemption, the legality of the redemption is determined at the time the debt instrument is delivered, not at the time it is payable. Delaware law provides generally that dividends also may only be paid from surplus or from net profits of the current or preceding year.

Directors of Delaware corporations should value assets on a current basis to determine if surplus exists to pay a dividend or redeem stock. Directors acting in good faith and subject to a standard of reasonableness are entitled to rely upon reports, appraisals and other information provided to the corporation in determining the value of the corporation’s assets.

The issue of what constitutes a “dividend” is another important consideration. Whether a distribution by a corporation to shareholders constitutes a “dividend” is not controlled by how that distribution is denominated. See generally Fletcher Cyc. Corp. § 5381 (permanent ed.) (“The characterization of a distribution, while relevant to the determination of whether or not it will be treated as a dividend, is not conclusive.”). Rather, courts generally examine the substance of a transaction, rather than its nominal form, in assessing how to properly characterize a given distribution, and will recharacterize improperly styled transactions as being “constructive dividends.” See Rogers v. United States, 58 F.Supp. 2d 1235, 1240-42 (D. Kan. 1999) (tax case discussing the ability of a court to recharacterize a transaction as being a constructive dividend); United States v. Mews, 923 F.2d 67, 68 (7th Cir. 1991) (“By ‘constructive dividend’ the law means simply a corporate disbursement that is a dividend in the contemplation of law though not called such by the corporation making the disbursement.”). Intercorporate transfers which are neither loans, purchases, repayments of corporate debt, charitable expenditures, ordinary and necessary business expenses, or other disbursements made in pursuit of corporate goals or pursuant to corporate duties will, necessarily, be deemed “dividends” by a reviewing court. Mews, 923 F.2d at 68.

Constructive dividends can give rise to director liability. In re: Buckhead America Corp., 178 B.R. 956 (Bankr. D. Del. 1994), the court addressed the question of whether liability under Section 174 of the Delaware General Corporation Law could be properly predicated on an allegedly improper constructive dividend. In rejecting the defendant’s motion to dismiss, the Court noted, inter alia, that the factual record was insufficiently developed to warrant dismissal at that juncture of the proceeding. Thus, the court, at least implicitly, embraced the notion that a claim under section 174 could, in appropriate circumstances, be based on an allegedly improper constructive dividend. See also Crowthers McCall Pattern, Inc. v. Lewis, 129 B.R. 992 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1991) (“If plaintiff’s allegations [regarding constructive improper dividend] are true, as must be assumed on these motions to dismiss, the economic substance of the transactions in question brings them within the purview of the relevant sections of the Delaware General Corporation Law.”).

Practice consideration: A dividend by an insolvent or struggling business entity is obviously suspect and directors who vote for such a dividend may incur personal liability in the amount of the dividend. Counsel must review the relevant State corporation law to study the standards that must be met before the entity may legally make a distribution to its owners. Counsel should also look for any safe harbours that may exist under the State corporation law with respect to actions based upon financial statements prepared by the auditors of the business.

Practice consideration: Counsel must determine whether it is sufficient for a director to merely abstain from a vote in order to avoid liability or if the director must affirmatively vote against the proposed dividend to avoid liability. The result will differ depending upon the jurisdiction of incorporation. See Calkins v. Wire Hardware Co., 257 Mass. 52, 165 N.E. 889 (1929) (although shareholder directors of a corporation did not vote in favour of a dividend, they are found liable as directors for assenting to an unlawful distribution where they actually received the proceeds of the distribution).

D. Liability for “Trust Fund” taxes

Under 26 U.S.C. § 6672(a), any person required to collect, account for, and pay over any federal tax who wilfully fails to do so, or wilfully attempts to evade the tax, is liable for the entire amount of the trust fund tax owed. This liability is in addition to other penalties provided by law. See 26 U.S.C. § 6672(a). Liability may be assessed against more than one person, and each person is liable for the entire amount of unpaid tax. See Harrington v. U.S., 504 F.2d 1306, 1312 (1st Cir. 1974); Gardoury v. U.S., 187 B.R. 816, 823 (D.R.I. 1995); In re Bourque, 153 B.R. 87, 92 (Bankr.D.Mass. 1993). Each person liable under § 6672 enjoys a right of contribution against other liable persons, but an action to recover the excess of one proportion may not be joined or consolidated with federal § 6672 actions or counterclaims. See 26 U.S.C. § 6672(d).

For purposes of § 6672, a “person” is defined statutorily to include not only the taxpaying entity itself, but also “an officer or employee of a corporation, or member or employee of a partnership, who as such officer, employee, or member is under a duty to perform the act in respect of which the violation occurs.” 26 U.S.C. § 6671(b). Statutorily exempt from § 6672(a) are unpaid, volunteer trustees or directors of tax exempt organizations who serve solely in an honorary capacity, do not participate in the organization’s day-to-day or financial operations, and lack actual knowledge of the failure to account for the taxes, unless this exemption would result in no person being liable for the penalty. See 26 U.S.C.A. § 6672(e).

However, the definition of “responsible person” for purposes of § 6672 is limited neither to the statutory enumeration nor to persons performing the “mechanical functions of collection and payment.” Harrington, 504 F.2d at 1312 (citations omitted). Rather, it extends broadly to persons with authority and responsibility to avoid the default. See id. The First Circuit has indicated that factual “[i]ndicia of responsibility include the holding of corporate office, control over financial affairs, the authority to disburse corporate funds, stock ownership, and the ability to hire and fire employees.” Thomsen v. U.S., 887 F.2d 12, 16 (1st Cir. 1989) (citing George v. U.S., 819 F.2d 1008, 1011 (11th Cir. 1987)). Courts look to “whether the person had the power to determine whether the taxes should be remitted or paid or had ‘final word as to what bills should or should not be paid and when’ ” Caterino v. U.S., 794 F.2d 1, 5 (1st Cir. 1986) (quoting Adams v. U.S., 504 F.2d 73, 75 (7th Cir. 1974)). Delegation to other officers or employees of tax compliance duties is no defence against liability. See Thomsen, 887 F.2d at 16.

An outside entity may be deemed a responsible person if the entity exerts sufficient control over the financial affairs of the delinquent taxpayer. See, e.g., Merchants Nat’l Bank of Mobile v. U.S., 878 F.2d 1382 (11th Cir. 1989) (bank exercised almost complete control over corporate taxpayer); Sokaogon Chippewa Community Tribal Council v. U.S., 959 F.Supp. 1032 (E.D.Wis. 1997) (tribe owned business and council oversaw hiring and certain financial transactions).

The federal “trust fund taxes” to which § 6672 applies are all funds collected by the taxpayer from third parties and deemed a special fund in trust for the United States pursuant to 26 U.S.C. § 7501. See Harrington, 504 F.2d at 1311. These most prominently include withheld employee social security taxes (see Harrington, 504 F.2d at 1311 n.2) and withheld employee income taxes (see Thomsen, 887 F.2d at 14), but also include federal excise taxes (see 26 U.S.C. §§ 4001-4682) and collections on gambling winnings (see 26 U.S.C. § 3402(q)), interest and dividend payments subject to backup withholding (see 26 U.S.C. § 3406)), distribution from retirement plans (see 26 U.S.C.A. § 3405(e)), payments of interest and dividends to non-resident aliens and foreign corporations (see 26 U.S.C. §§ 1441-42), and disposition of United States real property interest by foreign persons (see 26 U.S.C. § 1445).

IRS policy permits the taxpayer to designate its tax payments first toward trust fund taxes, in order to eliminate personal liability, where such payments are “voluntary.” See In re Energy Resources Co., Inc. 871 F.2d 223 (1st Cir. 1989) affirmed 495 U.S. 545 (1990); In re Kaplan, 104 F.3d 589, 596 n.16 (3rd Cir. 1997). The IRS traditionally considers payment involuntary where it results from a distraint, levy, or legal proceeding in which the U.S. seeks to collect delinquent taxes. See Energy Resources, 871 F.2d at 228 (citations omitted). Where the taxpayer fails specifically to designate allocation of the voluntary payment, the IRS may allocate it. See Sotir v. U.S., 978 F.2d 29 (1st Cir. 1992). However, where there would have been no recovery of tax funds at all if not for the debtor corporation’s efforts to collect funds owed it by a third party, the court may grant equitable recognition of the debtor’s efforts by directing the IRS to allocate the collected funds toward trust fund obligations. See New Terminal Stevedoring, Inc. v. M/V Belnor, 728 F.Supp. 62 (D.Mass. 1989).

Regardless of whether the payments are voluntary or involuntary, the Supreme Court has held that a bankruptcy court has the authority in a Chapter 11 reorganization to order the IRS to allocate the payments first toward trust fund taxes, if the court deems such designation “necessary for a reorganization’s success.” In re Energy Resources Co., Inc., 495 U.S. 545, 551 (1990). Although the Court neither provided guidelines as to how to determine whether the allocation is “necessary” nor required bankruptcy courts to make specific findings on the question, courts have weighed the importance of the allocation to the responsible person’s incentives and ability to pursue the reorganization. See, e.g. In re Oyster Bar of Pensacola, Inc., 201 B.R. 567 (Bankr. N.D.Fla. 1996) (argument that debtor’s allocation would increase incentive of responsible person to participate in reorganization was insufficient evidence to warrant finding of necessity); U.S. v. R.L. Himes & Assoc., Inc., 152 B.R. 198, 200-01 (S.D. Ohio 1993) (upholding bankruptcy court finding of necessity where debtor’s principal testified that corporate officers’ incentive to pursue successful reorganization would be greatly diminished if they remained liable for trust fund taxes); In re M.C. Tooling Consultants, Inc., 165 B.R. 590 (Bkrcty D.S.C. 1993) (finding necessity where debtor’s principal testified that he had been unable to concentrate on business operations due to IRS harassment over debtor’s trust fund tax liability). Courts have split over whether a bankruptcy court may also direct allocation in a Chapter 11 liquidation plan. See e.g., In re Deer Park, Inc., 10 F.3d 1478 (9th Cir. 1993) (yes, where necessary to the success of the liquidation); In re Kare Kemical, Inc., 935 F.2d 243 (11th Cir. 1991) (no, since there is no “reorganization” for which the allocation is necessary).

Practice consideration: Responsible person liability for unpaid trust fund taxes should be avoided at all costs. The liability cannot be discharged even in a personal bankruptcy proceeding. The lesson is simple (but still routinely ignored): Do not borrow from the United States Internal Revenue Service!

E. Insider preferences

The law of preferences governs those circumstances where a creditor may have to repay money to a debtor or its estate or relinquish a lien on property of the debtor for the purpose of achieving a more equitable distribution of the debtor's property. There are two sources of preference law: the Bankruptcy Code and UFTA.

Insider Preferences Under the Bankruptcy Code. Under the Bankruptcy Code, a transfer of the debtor's property on account of an antecedent debt made to an insider while insolvent and within one year of an order for relief under the Bankruptcy Code is recoverable by the trustee of the debtor for the benefit of the debtor's estate. See 11 U.S.C. § 547. The definition of insider is found at 11 U.S.C. § 101(31) and includes, with respect to corporations, an officer, director, person in control of the debtor, a partnership in which the debtor is a general partner, a general partner of the debtor, and a relative of any of the foregoing. An avoidable preference may exist in the context of the payment of a debt and it may exist if the debtor secures an otherwise unsecured or under-secured debt within the relevant preference period. The preference period for non-insider transferees is ninety (90) days. A debtor is presumed to be insolvent during that 90-day period. For claims against insiders, however, the Trustee must prove that the debtor was insolvent during the period preceding the non-insider 90-day preference period.

Practice consideration: Under the Bankruptcy Code, a preference exists only if the creditor receives more than it would receive in a hypothetical liquidation of the debtor under chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code. Due to this requirement, a properly perfected secured creditor of the debtor whose collateral equals or exceeds in value the amount of its claim cannot receive a preference under the Bankruptcy Code. For this reason, among others, it pays to obtain security for any obligation, including the debt of a corporate subsidiary, and to perfect that security in accordance with all applicable legal requirements.

Insider Preferences under State Law. UFTA provides that a transfer made by a debtor is fraudulent as to a creditor whose claim arose before the transfer was made if the transfer was made to an insider for an antecedent debt at the time the debtor was insolvent and the insider had "reasonable cause" to believe that the debtor was insolvent. UFTA claims are not limited by the one-year look back period that exists in the bankruptcy context. This means that a creditor of the debtor entity can recover the amount of the preference from the insider. As set forth in the Uniform Act, the statute of limitations for such a claim is six years, although practitioners should check each state's version of UFTA to confirm that the 6-year limitations period specified in the Uniform Act applies in that jurisdiction.

F. Director liability under federal securities laws

The Securities Act of 1933 (the “Securities Act”)

The Securities Act governs the registration of a public offering of securities and the disclosures that must accompany that registration. Section 11 of the Securities Act imposes liability on the signers of a registration statement, the issuer’s directors and certain other persons for any untrue statement of a material fact contained in the registration statement and for the failure to state a material fact in the statement. Section 11 allows the purchaser of the security to sue the issuer, the director and others.

The primary defence to Section 11 liability is due diligence. To establish that defence, the director must show that, after reasonable investigation, the director had reasonable grounds to believe, and did believe, that the registration statement did not contain any materially misleading statements or omissions.

Section 12(1) of the Securities Act imposes liability on the seller of an unregistered security that should be registered. A seller may include the officers and directors of the issuer. Section 12(2) of the Securities Act imposes liability on a person that offers to sell a security by means of an oral communication or a prospectus that contains material misstatements or that fails to contain material information.

Section 15 of the Securities Act imposes liability on a person that “controls” a person that violates sections 11 or 12 of the Act. Section 15 is yet another means by which an individual may incur liability for violations of the Securities Act of 1933. Section 17(a) of the Securities Act contains a prohibition against fraud in the offer or sale of securities.

Securities Exchange Act of 1934

The Exchange Act contains a general antifraud provision at section 10(b) which, when combined with Rule 10b-5 promulgated by the Securities Exchange Commission, prohibits the employment of any device, scheme or artifice to defraud, the making of any untrue statement of material fact or the omission of material facts which are necessary to make a statement not misleading in connection with the purchase or sale of a security. Section 10(b) and Rule 10b-5 applies to any purchase or sale of a security that involves any means of interstate commerce, the use of the United States mails or a national exchange and is not limited to claims relating to the content of a registration statement or the failure to register an offering. Since 1946, federal courts have recognized a private right of action in favour of the purchaser or the seller of a security under Section 10(b) of the Exchange Act.

Merely negligent conduct by an officer or director will not give rise to liability under Section 10(b) of the Exchange Act. The United States Supreme Court has ruled that a plaintiff must prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant acted with “scienter”, a mental state that encompasses knowing or intentional deception, manipulation or fraud.

The Sarbanes-Oxley Act of 2002

The Sarbanes-Oxley Act, Public Law No. 107-204, was adopted in 2002 with the intent of improving corporate accountability and transparency. It applies primarily to public companies registered under the Exchange Act of 1934, although certain provisions extend to non-public entities. Among other things, the Sarbanes-Oxley Act increases penalties for violations of securities laws and regulations, and may define or inform the duties owed by corporate officers and directors to corporations and corporate shareholders. For a good overview of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act's effect on corporate directors and officers, see Dan A. Bailey and J. David Washburn, Now it's Personal: The Real Impact of Sarbanes-Oxley on Directors and Officers, 6(4) Wall Street Lawyer 9 (2002).

G. Liability under federal environmental laws

The United States courts have been willing to impose personal liability on owners, officers or directors of corporations that have violated certain federal environmental laws. The most common laws posing the risk of personal liability are the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980, as amended by the Superfund Amendments and Reauthorization Act of 1986, commonly known as CERCLA. CERCLA provides responsibility and remedies for the disposal and cleanup of uncontrolled hazardous waste sites. One other regime that may result in personal liability is the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act (RCRA), which governs the handling, storage, treatment, transportation and disposal of solid waste, including hazardous waste. Many states have also adopted state-law counterparts to the Federal environmental statutes.

Owners, officers or directors risk personal liability under CERCLA or RCRA when they personally engage in the conduct of the business entity that violates the relevant statute. For example, if the officer directed the offending activities, that officer risks personal liability. Some courts have imposed personal liability on officers where the officers had authority over the disposal activities of the company, but did not exercise that authority and did not participate in the illegal conduct. In that instance, the officer has liability because the officer could have prevented the illegal conduct.

Practice consideration: Any officer, director or owner that actively participates in conduct by a business entity that violates CERCLA, RCRA and other federal and state environmental laws risks personal civil and criminal liability. Enforcement authorities in the United States have not hesitated to seek to impose personal liability due to involvement in the violation of remedial environmental laws. The United States Department of Justice has a separate unit devoted exclusively to prosecuting criminal violations of the federal environmental laws. The risk of personal liability is undoubtedly greater where the business entity has failed, because the entity cannot practically ameliorate the harm or pay a fine.

Traditional arguments for disregarding the corporate form (veil piercing) have also been used to impose liability on individual officers, directors and owners of business entities.

H. Liability for misappropriation of corporate opportunities

Misappropriation of corporate opportunities is a special form of self-dealing that can result in individual liability to officers and directors. In Equity Corp. v. Milton, 221 A.2d 494 (Del. 1966), the supreme court of Delaware stated the standards for when an opportunity must be presented to the corporation: "When there is presented to a corporate officer a business opportunity which the corporation is financially able to undertake, and which, by its nature, falls into the line of the corporation's business and is of practical advantage to it, or is an opportunity in which the corporation has an actual or expectant interest, the officer is prohibited from permitting his self-interest to be brought into conflict with the corporation's interest and may not take the opportunity for himself."

Practice consideration: Business entities in financial distress are seldom in a position to take advantage of a new business opportunity, but that will not prevent a representative of the failed company's creditors from seeking damages from an officer or director that misappropriates a corporate opportunity. An insider of a struggling business entity risks liability (or at least the cost of defending a suit) if his basis for appropriating a corporate opportunity is the financial ill health of the corporation that he serves.

QUESTION 3

3. Other persons involved with the debtor's affairs that may have liability in respect to their actions during the twilight period

- (a) In addition to the formally appointed directors of the company, can others be held liable in respect of the company's activities during the "twilight" period if the company were to become subject to a formal insolvency procedure?
- (b) In respect of which acts may other persons be held liable and to what extent does the liability of third parties differ from that for directors identified in question 2 above?
- (c) Will liability be limited to that resulting from involvement with a particular transaction or more generally in relation to the overall loss suffered by creditors?

A. Lender liability and equitable subordination

Lender liability is the generic term used to describe those circumstances under which a lender to the debtor may incur liability on account of its conduct. Lender liability claims run the gamut, from breach of contract to slander. In the context of an insolvent business entity, a lender's risk is more specific: Equitable subordination due to misconduct. The Bankruptcy Court has the power under Code § 510(c) to readjust the priorities of claims and therefore subordinate one claim to another due to misconduct by the creditor.

- (i) Equitable Subordination of Non-Insider Claims: Lender's claims against an insolvent entity are not frequently subordinated. Those instances leading to subordination usually involve misconduct by the lender to the detriment of the debtor's unsecured creditors. Some courts have suggested that such misconduct must be tantamount or similar to fraud on the part of the lender. The classic example involves a situation where the debtor operates solely for the purpose of liquidating the secured creditor's collateral and the debtor fails to pay its trade debt during the period of liquidation.

Practice Consideration: Counsel for secured creditors are well advised to require that a liquidating debtor produce an operating budget which accounts for all operating expenses during the period of liquidation. The lender can then approve or disapprove the budget proposed by the debtor. A lender should not, however, prepare its own budget or exercise a "line item veto" over the debtor's budget. A lender should permit and/or require that the debtor pay ordinary operating expenses during the period of liquidation.

Practice Consideration: Occasionally, creditors of a debtor find themselves on the Board of Directors of the debtor. This may happen when the creditors have swapped some or all of their claims for equity in the Debtor as part of a reorganization. Creditors in this situation wear two hats and are well advised to resign as a Director if the debtor is failing.

- (ii) Equitable Subordination of Insider Claims. Insider creditors are especially prone to principles of equitable subordination because the insider has special knowledge of the debtor's circumstances, the insider may have control over the debtor and the insider may owe fiduciary obligations directly to the debtor's creditors.

Practice Consideration: Insider creditors risk preference liability if their claims are unsecured and subordination if they control the subsidiary and use that power to their advantage and to the detriment of the debtor's general unsecured creditors. If representatives of the insider creditor serve on the Board of Directors of the insolvent entity, they risk affirmative liability for breach of fiduciary duty if they put the interests of the insider creditor ahead of the interests of the Debtor.

B. Aiding and abetting liability

As discussed in section 4 above, the directors of an insolvent entity risk liability for breach of fiduciary duty if they put their own interests or those of a corporate parent ahead of the interests of the debtor's creditors. Likewise, those who assist the directors, such as counsel, accountants and investment bankers, risk liability for aiding and abetting a breach of fiduciary duty.

C. Shareholder liability: The corporate disregard doctrine (Piercing the corporate veil)

The corporate disregard doctrine is alive and well, although "the legal standard for when it is proper to pierce the corporate veil is notably imprecise and fact intensive." Crane v. Green & Freedman Baking Co., 134 F.3d 17, 21 (1st Cir. 1998). Counsel to a failing business entity must be aware of the risk that unsatisfied creditors of the business entity may attempt to impose liability upon the individual or corporate owner(s) of the entity. All counsel should be aware of the factors courts evaluate in determining whether to impose entity liabilities upon owners of the entity. As corporate counsel we cannot control in detail the activities of our business clients, but we can counsel them as to what is high risk conduct and we can take steps to mitigate the risk that a business entity will be disregarded if it is unable to satisfy its obligations.

Courts generally look at the following factors in determining whether to impose liability on the owners of a business entity. Many of the factors have greater relevance depending upon whether the owner is an individual(s) or another business entity. The factors are as follows:

1. common ownership among the parent entity and the subsidiary or among affiliates;
2. pervasive control by the parent entity;
3. confused intermingling of business activity, assets or management among the parent and subsidiary or among the entity and its shareholder(s);
4. thin capitalization;
5. non-observance of corporate formalities;
6. absence of corporate records;
7. no payment of dividends;
8. insolvency at the time of the litigated transaction;
9. siphoning away of corporate assets by the dominant shareholders;

10. non-functioning of officers and directors;
11. use of the corporation for transactions of the dominant shareholders;
and
12. use of the corporation in promoting fraud.

The language and role of fraud in cases addressing corporate veil piercing has created confusion. Recent cases, however, indicate that a finding of fraud is not necessary. Applying New York law, the Second Circuit Court of Appeals has ruled as follows: "Liability therefore may be predicated either upon a showing of fraud or upon complete control by the dominating corporation that leads to a wrong against third parties." Wm. Passalacqua Builders v. Resnick Developers, 933 F2d 131, 138 (2nd Cir. 1991). The Maine Supreme Judicial Court has ruled that the corporate veil may be pierced where (i) the shareholder misused the corporate form and (ii) "an unjust or inequitable result would occur if the court recognized the separate corporate existence." Johnson v. Exclusive Properties Unlimited, 720 A.2d 568, 571 (Me. 1998).

Practice consideration: The practice of establishing a new subsidiary or affiliate entity to undertake a new venture has many advantages. One of the most significant benefits is that if the subsidiary is failing, it can be closed and the parent will lose only its investment in the subsidiary enterprise, but will not ordinarily be liable for the obligations of the failed enterprise. Counsel must help their clients retain the benefits of parent / subsidiary relationship by, among other things, assuring that the separateness of the two entities is maintained by adherence to all applicable corporate formalities and by advising that the entities deal with one-another on an arm's length basis in all circumstances.

QUESTION 4

4. Counterparties dealing with the debtor during the Twilight Period

- (a) From the point of view of a counterparty dealing with the company during the "twilight" period, what are the potential heads of challenge which may lead to transactions with the company being set aside?
- (b) What defences, if any, to the areas of vulnerability identified above will be available to a counterparty seeking to protect a transaction from being attacked?

A. Trade creditors

Trade creditors are well advised to do business on a cash-on-delivery only basis if they have reason to believe that they are selling to an insolvent entity. A C.O.D. transaction is never a preference under the Bankruptcy Code. UCC section 2-702 expressly authorizes a seller of goods to refuse delivery to an insolvent buyer other than upon cash payment. Recent amendments to the Bankruptcy Code give trade creditors an administrative priority claim (meaning it is entitled to be paid as a post-petition expense) equal to the value of goods received by the debtor within 20 days before the commencement of the case, if those goods were sold to the debtor in the ordinary course of business. 11 U.S.C. § 503(b)(9)

B. Rights of reclamation

Goods sold to an insolvent entity may be reclaimed upon demand made within ten days after delivery of the goods pursuant to UCC section 2-702. Recent amendments to the Bankruptcy Code provide a new, 45-day reclamation right in the bankruptcy context, although such rights are expressly subject to the prior rights of secured creditors, and thus will be quite limited in most contexts. A seller's right to reclamation under the UCC is subject to the rights of a buyer in the ordinary course or other good faith purchaser. Most courts have ruled that the seller's right to reclamation is inferior to the rights of a lender with a "floating" lien on the Debtor's inventory.

Practice consideration: A seller should always make demand for reclamation in writing. Even following a filing under the Bankruptcy Code by the buyer, a timely claim for reclamation gives the seller valuable rights in the buyer's bankruptcy proceeding.

C. purchaser of assets other than in the ordinary course

A purchaser of substantially all assets of an insolvent or failing enterprise must have several concerns:

- (i) Can the Seller convey clear title to the assets?
- (ii) Will the buyer have liability for any of the Seller's obligations, such as trade debt, tax liabilities, employment-related liabilities or warranty or tort liabilities?
- (iii) If the buyer strikes too good a deal, might the transaction be avoided as a fraudulent conveyance?

Practice consideration: Buyer's of the assets of a failing enterprise often require that the Seller file under chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code so that the transaction can be consummated in the Bankruptcy Court. Although this procedure results in higher transactional costs, the buyer is far safer with an order of the Bankruptcy Court conveying the assets of the seller to the buyer free and clear of liens, claims and encumbrances, because the transfer will not be susceptible to subsequent avoidance by the bankruptcy trustee.

QUESTION 5

5. Enforcement

By whom may action be brought against directors (and/or others identified in question 3 above)?

Enforcement actions may involve civil or criminal proceedings and may be based upon Federal or state law or both. For example, criminal penalties exist for certain violations of the Federal environmental and securities laws. Most enforcement actions under these laws, however, is civil. Civil remedies may involve a judgment for damages, injunctive relief or both. Liability for breach of fiduciary duty, fraudulent transfers, unlawful dividends and redemptions and misappropriation of corporate opportunities is civil and may be enforced by the creditors of the insolvent entity, by its shareholders in certain instances and by a bankruptcy trustee of the insolvent entity. The specific rules of liability and enforcement will depend upon the applicable state law. Liability for failure to pay "trust fund" taxes is enforced by the respective taxing entity. Rights of enforcement are discussed in more detail in section 6 (Remedies; order available to the domestic court) immediately below

QUESTION 6

6. Remedies; orders available to the domestic court.

In respect of the offences identified in questions 2, 3 and 4 above, what remedies are available in the domestic court?

- (a) Breach of fiduciary duty: Persons damaged due to a director's breach of fiduciary duty are entitled to a money judgment against the defendant in the amount of their damages.
- (b) Fraudulent conveyance under UFTA: The remedies available to creditors who demonstrate that the debtor has engaged in a fraudulent transfer are as follows:
 - (i) Avoidance of the transfer (return of the property);
 - (ii) Attachment of the property transferred;
 - (iii) Execution on the asset transferred, if the creditor already has a judgment;
 - (iv) Injunction against further disposition of property by the debtor;

- (v) Appointment of a receiver to take control of the property transferred; and
- (vi) Damages in an amount up to two times the value of the property transferred.
- (c) Unlawful Dividends or Redemptions: Under Delaware law, the directors who vote for an unlawful dividend or redemption face joint and several personal liability for the amount unlawfully distributed by the corporation
- (d) Trust Fund Taxes: A responsible person is liable for the full amount of trust fund taxes that the corporation fails to remit to the Internal Revenue Service.
- (e) Receipt of a Preference: A person that receives a voidable preference is liable to repay the amount received. The liability of a recipient of a preference is reduced to the extent that the recipient has provided new value to the debtor following receipt of the preference, provided that the recipient has not received a preferential transfer on account of such new value.
- (f) Misappropriation of Corporate Opportunities: Misappropriation of corporate opportunities is an action sounding in tort. A defendant may be liable for all damages proximately caused by the tortious conduct.
- (g) Indemnification of officers and directors: A corporation may elect to include in its bylaws permissive or mandatory indemnification of its officers and directors. Counsel must review the specific state corporation law with respect to indemnification, because the authority of the corporation to indemnify, and the scope of the potential indemnity, varies among jurisdictions.

The authority of a Delaware corporation to indemnify its officers and directors is found at Del. Code Ann. tit. 8, § 145. Section 145 authorizes indemnification against expenses, including attorney's fees, judgments, fines and amounts paid in settlement actually and reasonably incurred "if the person acted in good faith and in a manner the person reasonably believed to be in or not opposed to the best interests of the corporation and, with respect to any criminal action or proceeding, had no reasonable cause to believe the person's conduct was unlawful."

Practice consideration: Mandatory indemnification should probably be limited to directors and officers of the corporation, and not extended to employees and other agents. The bylaw provision should also separately mandate the advancement of expenses, because Delaware courts have ruled that mere indemnification does not require the advancement of expenses.

- (h) Involuntary Proceedings under the Bankruptcy Code: Unsecured creditors of an insolvent business entity sometimes resort to the commencement of an involuntary proceeding under the Bankruptcy Code against the debtor. If the debtor has fewer than 12 unsecured creditors, one or more unsecured creditors with claims aggregating $13,475 may commence an involuntary petition against the debtor. If the debtor has twelve or more creditors, three or more unsecured creditors whose claims aggregate $13,475 may commence the involuntary proceeding. Claims that are in bona fide dispute are not eligible as petitioning claims. 11 U.S.C. § 303.

Unsecured creditors are most likely to commence an involuntary petition in those circumstances where they suspect that the debtor has been engaged in fraudulent conveyances or other misconduct.

The Bankruptcy Court will enter an order for relief under the Bankruptcy Code if it finds that the debtor is not generally paying its debts when they come due, unless such debts are in bona fide dispute. 11 U.S.C. § 303(h).

An involuntary petition may be filed against a debtor under chapter 7 or chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. Chapter 7 is a straight liquidation where a trustee is appointed to assemble and liquidate the debtor's property. Chapter 11 is discussed in the following section of the materials.

New Bankruptcy Code chapter 15 provides a mechanism by which United States Bankruptcy Courts can be used to administer assets subject to the jurisdiction of United States courts.

Practice consideration: A foreign corporation may be a debtor under chapter 7 or chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code if it has a place of business in the United States or if it has property in the United States.

Practice consideration: A debtor has the absolute right to convert an involuntary case under Chapter 7 of the Bankruptcy Code to a case under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code.

QUESTION 7

7. Duty to Co-operate

- (a) To what extent are directors (and others identified in question 3 above) obliged to co-operate with an investigation into the company's affairs following its insolvency?
- (b) Are any human rights laws applicable in the domestic jurisdiction in relation to any such obligations?

(a) In the Bankruptcy Court

Schedules: Bankruptcy Code section 521(a)(1) requires that the debtor file a list of creditors, and unless the court orders otherwise, a schedule of assets and liabilities, a schedule of current income and current expenditures and a statement of the debtor's financial affairs. Official forms are prescribed for each of these filings. Absent a court order extending the deadline, the filings must be made within fifteen days of the order for relief under the Bankruptcy Code. In the case of a filing involving a corporation, the Court may order the appropriate corporate officers, directors, or other persons in control of the corporation to complete the schedules. Fed. R. Bankr. P. 9001(5).

Co-operation: Bankruptcy Code section 521(a)(3) requires that the debtor cooperate with any trustee to enable the trustee to discharge his duties under the Bankruptcy Code. In a liquidation case, that co-operation will ordinarily relate to informing the trustee of and assisting in locating property of the estate in the possession of third parties. Co-operation may also involve assisting the trustee in evaluating claims against the debtor or claims in favour of the debtor. If the debtor is an entity, the duty to cooperate may be compelled from a corporate officer. Matter of Ron San Realty, Inc., 457 F. Supp. 994 (S.D.N.Y. 1978).

Turnover: Bankruptcy Code section 521(a)(4) requires that the debtor surrender to the trustee all property of the estate and any recorded information, including books, documents, records, and papers related to property of the estate.

Practice consideration: The knowing failure to disclose property of the debtor to the trustee or the knowing withholding of recorded information may constitute a crime under Title 18 of the United States Code.

Appearance. Bankruptcy Code section 343 requires that the debtor appear at an examination under oath conducted by the trustee (in a chapter 7 case) or by the United States Trustee (in a case under chapter 11). Creditors of the debtor are also entitled to attend the examination.

(b) Protection from self-incrimination

Bankruptcy Code section 344 provides that immunity may be granted under Title 18 of the United States Code to persons required to submit to examination, to testify or to provide information in a bankruptcy case. Immunity granted pursuant to this section is intended to preserve an individual's right against self-incrimination as set forth in the 5th Amendment to the United States Constitution.

QUESTION 8

8. Appeals and limitation periods

- (a) What limitation period, if any, will apply to actions brought against the directors (and/or others identified in question 3) in connection with the offences identified in question 2?
- (b) Please indicate whether an appeal is available from the decision of the lower courts.

Limitations periods vary from state to state, so practitioners should review limitations issues on a case-specific basis. As a general rule, however, with respect to cause of action arising under state law, under the so-called Erie doctrine, federal courts apply the statute of limitations that the forum state would apply. See Guar. Trust Co. v. York, 326 U.S. 99, 109-10 (1946). Typically, when a conflict arises between two states' statutes of limitations, the limitations period of the forum state will apply, even if the action is barred in another jurisdiction. See Restatement (Second) of Conflicts of Law § 142(2). Practitioners should confirm the application of those general principles to their particular case. Also, even if the statute of limitations of the forum jurisdiction applies, that does not foreclose the application of the laws of another jurisdiction to the substantive issues in the case. As noted earlier in this chapter, conflict of laws questions are complicated, and the rules vary among jurisdictions, so practitioners should think carefully about how conflict-of-law rules apply to a particular case, including limitations issues.

QUESTION 9

9. Foreign corporations

Do the legal provisions and procedures outlined above apply to both domestic and foreign corporations?

A foreign corporation or other foreign business entity may be a debtor under the United States Bankruptcy Code if it has a place of business in the United States or if it has assets in the United States. Accordingly, a foreign corporation doing business in the United States may seek relief under chapter seven (liquidation) or chapter 11 (reorganization) of the Code and creditors of the entity may file an involuntary petition under the Code against the foreign entity. 11 U.S.C. sec. 109. Bankruptcy Courts in the United States have exercised jurisdiction over foreign debtors when the nexus with the United States was as little as a bank account or a clearing account.

Entities that are the subject of a foreign insolvency proceeding or their representative may also seek relief under the Code to administer assets in the United States. 11 U.S.C. sec. 304. Such relief may include issuance of an injunction to prevent creditors in the United States from executing on assets of the debtor located in the United States. In determining whether to exercise jurisdiction over the assets of a foreign debtor, the Bankruptcy Court considers the interests of creditors in a timely distribution of assets of the debtor, the convenience or difficulty in establishing claims against the debtor in the foreign proceeding, the prevention of preferences and fraudulent conveyances and the distribution priorities applicable under the foreign insolvency scheme.

A representative of a foreign entity undergoing insolvency proceedings in a foreign jurisdiction may also seek dismissal of a bankruptcy proceeding under the Code on the basis that the factors listed above (the interests of creditors in a timely distribution of assets of the debtor, the convenience or difficulty in establishing claims against the debtor in the foreign proceeding, the prevention of preferences and fraudulent conveyances and the distribution priorities applicable under the foreign insolvency scheme) weigh in favor of the single insolvency proceeding pending in the foreign jurisdiction. 11 U.S.C. sec. 305.

If the Bankruptcy Court asserts jurisdiction over a foreign debtor or its assets, the Court may permit the application of the Bankruptcy laws respecting the recovery of preferences, fraudulent conveyances and the turnover of the debtor's property. Application of these laws in the United States proceeding relating to a foreign debtor will likely depend on the size and sophistication of the United States creditor body, the status of a foreign insolvency proceeding, if any, and the substantive law that will apply in the foreign proceeding. If as a practical matter the ability of United Creditors to be paid depends upon the application of U.S. laws respecting preferences, fraudulent conveyances and/or turnover of estate property, the Bankruptcy Court is likely to allow application of these laws. In that event, officers and directors of foreign entities will be subject to the same substantive law that applies to officers and directors of domestic business entities. For this reason, officers and directors of foreign business entities should expect that unpaid creditors of the foreign entity in the United States will have access to the same rights and remedies against officers and directors as they would have against officers and directors of domestic business entities.

Officers and directors of foreign business entities doing business in the United States should also understand that state and federal laws regulating the affairs of businesses generally will apply to the foreign entity and to its officers and directors. Accordingly, state and federal laws with respect to environmental regulation and protection, anti-trust, employment, wage hour laws workplace safety, consumer protection, the issuance of securities and other laws will all apply with equal force to a foreign business engaged in commerce in the United States.

QUESTION 10

10. Insurance

Is directors' and officers' insurance available in your jurisdiction? If so, to what extent will the availability of such insurance provide effective protection to directors against personal liability which may arise in connection with the issues raised in questions 1-9 above?

Insurance for officers and directors

Most state corporations' statutes authorize the corporation to purchase insurance for its officers and directors. This is known as a D&O Policy. Insurance is very helpful, especially in those circumstances when the corporation is unable to satisfy its indemnification obligations due to insolvency.

A D&O Policy is an indemnity reimbursement policy. Typically, the carrier does not provide counsel and does not defend the claim. The carrier reimburses the insured at the conclusion of the action, up to the policy limits. D&O policies are typically claims made policies, applying only to actions notice of which was given during the term of the policy.

Following notice of a claim, the issuer of a D&O policy will ordinarily issue a reservation of rights letter to protect itself. A reservation of rights is common in the context of a claim under a D&O policy and does not mean necessarily that the insurer will deny coverage.

Certain exclusions are standard in all D&O policies:

- nuclear accident*
- pollution and environmental liability*
- dishonesty
- personal profit
- unlawful remuneration
- other insurance
- claims noticed under a prior policy
- claims arising under ERISA and retirement, welfare and benefit plans*
- bodily injury and property damage*
- libel and slander*; and
- violation of § 16(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934.

*These excluded risks are usually insured against under separate policies.

Litigation surrounding D&O policies focuses on the application for coverage, payment of interim defence costs and interpretation of the policy exclusions. Since the D&O policy is claims made, the insurer will require that the insured dictate all known claims and potential claims in the insurance application. If a claim later arises based on conduct prior to the date of the application, the insurer will likely deny coverage.

A policy application is ordinarily signed by the President of the company.

Courts have held that innocent directors without knowledge of facts relating to a possible claim will nonetheless lose coverage if the corporation's President had knowledge of such a claim and failed to disclose it on the policy application. To protect against this eventuality, the company may purchase a policy with a severability provision. A policy with a severability provision means that the insurer takes a separate application from each insured officer and director and that the failure of any single officer or director to reveal facts pertaining to a potential claim will not void the coverage of an innocent insured.

QUESTION 11

11. How safe is it for directors and others to incur further credit during the twilight period?

Chapter 11 of the United States Bankruptcy Code

First, some levity. A businessman was in a great deal of trouble. His business was failing, he had put everything he had into the business, he owed everybody — it was so bad he was even contemplating suicide. As a last resort he went to a priest and poured out his story of tears and woe.

When he had finished, the priest said, "Here's what I want you to do: Put a beach chair and your Bible in your car and drive down to the beach. Take the beach chair and the Bible to the water's edge, sit down in the beach chair, and put the Bible in your lap. Open the Bible; the wind will rifle the pages, but finally the open Bible will come to rest on a page. Look down at the page and read the first thing you see. That will be your answer, which will tell you what to do."

A year later the businessman went back to the priest and brought his wife and children with him. The man was in a new custom-tailored suit, his wife in a mink coat, the children shining. The businessman pulled an envelope stuffed with money out of his pocket, gave it to the priest as a donation in thanks for his advice.

The priest recognized the benefactor, and was curious. "You did as I suggested?" he asked.

"Absolutely," replied the businessman.
"You went to the beach?"
"Absolutely."
"You sat in a beach chair with the Bible in your lap?"
"Absolutely."
"You let the pages rifle until they stopped?"
"Absolutely."
"And what were the first words you saw?"
"Chapter 11."

(a) Sources of law: Introduction

The Bankruptcy Code is found at Title 11 United States Code. Chapter 11 refers to sections 1101, et seq. of Title 11. Chapter 11 contains the specific rules for business reorganization. However, the provisions of Chapters 1, 3, 5 and 7 apply to proceedings under Chapter 11.

Although the bankruptcy code is federal law, state law plays an important role in bankruptcy cases. The property interests of the Debtor and the interests of the Debtor's secured creditors in the property of the Debtor are, for the most part, governed by state law. State law will provide the rule of decision with respect to numerous other issues that may arise in a reorganization proceeding.

The provisions of the Bankruptcy Code are interpreted and applied by the Judges of the United States Bankruptcy Court. Their published decisions and the respective appellate rulings comprise a sizable body of case-law to assist counsel.

This section of the materials is intended to provide only an overview of Chapter 11. The purpose is to assist counsel in understanding the circumstances where a filing under Chapter 11 may be a viable alternative for the client. Accordingly, these materials are not intended as an exhaustive analysis of the many detailed and complicated provisions of Title 11 that pertain to business reorganizations. Nor do these materials attempt to amass or collate the considerable case law that has developed with respect to practice and procedure under the Bankruptcy Code in general or Title 11 in particular.

The terms Debtor and Debtor in Possession are used interchangeably in these materials. Reference to the Code means Title 11 of the United States Code.

(b) Who and what can seek relief under Chapter 11?

Individuals and business entities can seek relief under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code. Code sections 109(d) and 101(41). An entity must be properly authorized to file a petition by appropriate board, shareholder, member or partner action.

Practice consideration: An individual should always consider eligibility under chapter 13, which relates to individual debt adjustment, before resolving on a filing under chapter 11.

Practice consideration: An entity satisfying the eligibility requirements for filing under chapter 11 is not precluding from seeking such relief because it is a not-for-profit business entity.

Practice consideration: The timing of a filing can matter a great deal. The Trustee or Debtor-in-possession can recover certain payments made by the Debtor on account of an existing debt to an unsecured or under-secured creditor made within ninety (90) days receding the filing, or within one year with respect to insiders. Recovery of preferences can help fund a Plan of Reorganization, in appropriate cases. The threat of the recovery of preferences can help the Debtor negotiate more favourable Plan terms. The recovery of preferential payments is governed by 11 U.S.C. sections 547 and 550.

(c) Why might a business entity file for relief under Chapter 11?

- If a secured creditor is taking enforcement action to take possession of assets or to foreclose liens in real or personal property of the Debtor, the automatic stay imposed by Code § 362 will stop such action.
- If the Debtor is unable to pay its unsecured creditors in accordance with terms and creditors are commencing collection actions and/or seeking to attach assets, Code § 362 will force creditors to stop their collection actions.
- If the Debtor is facing costly litigation due to a product failure or warranty claims.
- If the Debtor wishes to consummate a going-concern sale of assets, but attachments or the threat of attachments makes the buyer unwilling or unable to close.
- If the Debtor needs working capital financing, but its existing secured creditors will not make the loan and will not subordinate to new money.
- If the Debtor has a failing division and needs a venue within which to liquidate the division and restructure the financial obligations that arise out of the failure of the division.

(d) Why file under Chapter 11 rather than Chapter 7 or Chapter 13?

- Chapter 13 is only available to individuals and then only individuals whose secured and unsecured debts do not exceed a stated level. See Code § 109(e). Business entities may not use Chapter 13.
- Chapter 7 results in the appointment of a trustee whose job is to liquidate the assets of the Debtor and distribute the proceeds in accordance with the priorities set forth in the Code. A Chapter 7 trustee is not ordinarily interested in operating a business. If the goal is to maintain ongoing business operations, Chapter 7 is probably not a viable option.
- Chapter 11 affords a business an opportunity to restructure its debts into a more feasible payment schedule.
- Chapter 11 affords a business an opportunity to sell its assets in a setting superior to a foreclosure.
- Absent special circumstances, a Chapter 11 debtor remains in possession and control of its property. Such a debtor is known as a debtor-in-possession.

Practice consideration: If the principals of the Debtor have engaged in serious pre-petition fraudulent conduct, on motion of a party in interest, the Court may appoint a trustee to take possession and control of the Debtor's business in the Chapter 11 proceeding pursuant to Code section 1104. Counsel are well advised to inform their clients of this possibility. Counsel are also well advised to review the other grounds for appointment of a trustee set forth in Code section 1104 in a chapter 11 proceeding.

(e) Examples of debt restructure that may be obtained under Chapter 11, subject to compliance with the requirements of Chapter 11.

- A term loan to a bank which has been accelerated is put back onto a monthly payment schedule.
- A line of credit which has matured is restructured to an amortizing term loan.
- Unsecured debt is paid from future profits of the Debtor's operations.

(f) Other obligations/assets may be preserved by a timely filing under Chapter 11.

- Defaults under a lease of an important site may be cured and the leasehold preserved, provided the petition is filed before the lease is terminated.

- Defaults under a significant license, franchise or similar arrangement may be cured and the contractual rights preserved, provided the petition is filed before the contractual rights are terminated.

Practice consideration: Counsel must study the terms of an important contract, license, distribution agreement or lease very carefully. If the Debtor's rights under the agreement are terminated in accordance with the terms of the agreement before the Debtor files in bankruptcy, the filing may be unable to alter the termination or restore the Debtor's rights. Haste, even great haste, is sometimes necessary in this context.

- (g) Chapter 11 affords an opportunity to sell the assets of a going-concern free and clear of liens and claims

One of the principal benefits and uses of chapter 11 is the ability to obtain a Bankruptcy Court Order under 11 U.S.C. § 363 authorizing the sale of a Debtor's assets free and clear of liens and claims. In this manner, a going-concern business can consummate a sale of assets free of the claims of secured and unsecured creditors. Such a Court Order may be required by a buyer so that the buyer knows that its use and possession of the Debtor's assets will not be disturbed by unsatisfied creditors of the seller. Moreover, such a Court Order may be a practical necessity to clear the assets of consensual or non-consensual liens.

Practice consideration: The benefit of Code section 363 is that it allows a transaction to proceed that could not be accomplished absent the special power of the Bankruptcy Court. Valid liens and attachments attach to the proceeds of the sale in the same order of priority as they had on the assets themselves. In this manner, the property interest of the lien holder is respected: the lien is transferred from the asset to the proceeds of the asset. The lien holder, however, cannot prevent the Debtor from selling the asset. But see the next Practice Consideration.

Practice consideration: Lenders often cooperate with and benefit from a sale under Code section 363. After all, a secured creditor's remedy is the sale of the collateral and if the Debtor will do the job for the Bank, so much the better. However, occasionally, the Lender will argue that the purchase price for the sale of the Debtor's assets is too low. In that context, the Court may permit the Lender to credit-bid for the assets. See Code § 363(k). A successful credit-bid by the Lender will, of course, prevent the going concern sale from proceeding. The burden is on the Debtor and its counsel to convince the Lender that the price offered for the assets is more than the Lender would receive if the Lender foreclosed its liens.

- (h) Chapter 11 affords an opportunity to obtain financing on a senior secured basis

Under Code section 364, a debtor may borrow money and grant a lien that takes priority over the lien of existing secured creditors. The Bankruptcy Court will only authorize a priming lien if the Debtor demonstrates that the interests of existing creditors in the collateral are adequately protected.

If the Debtor has equity in its existing assets or if the Debtor requires debt to acquire new assets post-petition, the combination of Code section 552 which cuts off floating liens and Code section 364 which permits post-petition secured borrowing can enable a Debtor to achieve its short term goals of access to debt financing notwithstanding a lack of cooperation from existing lenders.

- (i) Chapter 11 confirmation issues

The Plan of Reorganization (the "Plan") is the legal document that describes the treatment of the pre-petition claims against the Debtor. The Plan groups the claims against the Debtor into classes and then describes the treatment afforded the various classes. The creditors vote by class on whether to accept the treatment offered in the Plan. Before the Plan can be distributed to the creditors, however, the Court must approve a Disclosure Statement or prospectus that will be transmitted with the Plan to the creditors. This section of the materials discusses the following topics:

- Classification and voting;
- The disclosure statement; and
- Plan confirmation issues.

A. Classification and voting

Code section 1122 provides that the Debtor's Plan may divide the pre-petition claims and equity interests into classes of like claims and interests. Only "substantially similar" claims or interests may be included within a single class. A class may contain a single claim or it may contain hundreds of claims. In a reorganization proceeding of an operating company, for example, general unsecured creditors of the Debtor often comprise a single class. Accordingly, the Plan describes the various classes of claims and the treatment afforded those classes by the Debtor.

The classification process is important because (i) all claims or interests in the class receive the same treatment (See Code section 1123(a)(4)) and (ii) voting on the Plan is undertaken by class. Under the special voting rules of chapter 11, a class is deemed to have voted in favour of a Plan (and all claims in the class are bound by the Plan) if, of those who actually cast ballots, a majority of the holders of claims in the class vote in favour of the Plan and the holders of claims totalling two-thirds in dollar amount vote in favour of the Plan. See Code section 1126(c) and (d). The need to have only substantially similar claims in the same class follows from the ability of less than all class members to bind the entire class with respect to the proposed treatment in the Plan. Because the minority can be compelled to accept the Plan treatment approved by the majority, it is essential that the legal rights of class members be substantially similar. Similarity is based on the nature of the claim or interest, not the identity of the holder of the claim or interest.

The following are common classification schemes in a Plan:

- A separate class for each secured creditor;
- A separate class for each group of creditors holding priority claims under Code section 507;
- A class of general unsecured claims;
- A class of de minimis unsecured claims (See section 1122(b));
- A class of insider claims; and
- A class of equity holders.

The following classifications are objectionable and will not ordinarily be approved by the Court:

- A class consisting of secured and unsecured creditors (note that the unsecured portion of a secured creditor's claim may be classified with other unsecured claims);
- A class consisting of unsecured creditors and interest holders;
- A class consisting of priority and general unsecured claims; or
- A class consisting of preferred and common interest holders.

B. The Disclosure Statement

Code section 1125 provides that an acceptance or rejection of a Plan cannot be solicited from a holder of a claim or interest unless, at or before such solicitation, there is transmitted to the holder of the claim or interest a court approved Disclosure Statement. The Court shall approve the Disclosure Statement only if it contains "adequate information".

Section 1125(a) defines “adequate information” as follows:

“Adequate information” means information of a kind, and in sufficient detail, as far as is reasonably practicable in light of the nature and history of the debtor and the condition of the debtor’s books and records, including a discussion of the potential material Federal tax consequences of the plan to the debtor, any successor to the debtor, and any hypothetical investor typical of the holders of claims or interests in the case, that would enable such a hypothetical investor of the relevant class to make an informed judgement about the plan, but adequate information need not include such information about any other possible or proposed plan and in determining whether a disclosure statement provides adequate information, the court shall consider the complexity of the case, the benefit of additional information to creditors and other parties in interest, and the cost of providing additional information.

The Disclosure Statement typically contains a discussion of the following topics:

- The history of the debtor and the circumstances surrounding its filing under Chapter 11;
- Material events occurring during the course of the Chapter 11 proceeding, such as a Cash Collateral Agreement, Debtor-in-Possession financing, rejection of certain executory contracts or the sale of certain assets;
- The financial performance of the Debtor while in Chapter 11;
- A description of the various classes of claims and interest holders and the treatment afforded those classes;
- A statement as to whether the holders of claims or interests in the respective classes are impaired (See below in connection with sections 1129(a)(7) and 1129(a)(10));
- A discussion of the means by which the Debtor will effectuate the Plan;
- A comparison of the treatment afforded claims and interests under the Plan with the treatment of those claims and interests were the Debtor liquidated under Chapter 7 of the Code (See below in connection with section 1129(a)(7));
- An estimate of anticipated administrative claims, including attorney’s and accountant’s fees and the means to pay those obligations;
- Disclosure respecting ownership and control of the Reorganized Debtor;
- The value of avoidance actions and the Debtor’s intentions with respect to the collection of avoidance actions.

As a general rule, objections to the confirmation of a Plan should not be raised in the context of the Court hearing on the adequacy of the Disclosure Statement. The Court naturally prefers to consider objections to confirmation at the hearing on confirmation and not at the hearing on the adequacy of the Disclosure Statement. However, considerations of economy and efficiency weigh in favour of considering objections to a Disclosure Statement on the basis that the Plan described in the Disclosure Statement is facially non-confirmable. The following objections, therefore, may be considered by the Court in the context of a hearing on the Disclosure Statement:

- Claims or interests are improperly classified in the Plan;
- The Plan will violate the Absolute Priority Rule because creditors or interest holders will retain value under the Plan when senior claims or interests will not consent to the Plan;
- The Plan attempts to release parties other than the Debtor from liability for a claim;
- The Plan relies upon assumption of an executory contract that can no longer be assumed;
- The Plan terms do not comply with other applicable laws.

Even if the Court declines to hear the objection in the context of the Disclosure Statement hearing, the objection process will educate the Court with respect to likely contested issues in the context of confirmation.

C. Confirmation requirements

1. General requirements

Code section 1129 contains numerous requirements that must be satisfied as a condition to confirmation of a Plan of Reorganization. The purpose of this section of the materials is to highlight some of the most generic requirements, because these requirements are applicable in every case and because familiarity with these requirements will assist counsel in recognizing those Debtor proceedings that some promise of success and those that do not.

Section 1129(a)(7) provides that with respect to each impaired class of claims, each holder of a claim in that class must have accepted the Plan or each such holder will receive on account of the Plan at least as much as it would receive in a Chapter 7 proceeding involving the Debtor. This is known as the “best interests” of creditors test. The Plan must treat creditors at least as favourably as would a liquidation of the Debtor. Accordingly, the Plan or, as is more common, the Disclosure Statement, must contain a hypothetical Chapter 7 liquidation of the Debtor so that the treatment under the Plan can be compared to the treatment in the event of liquidation.

Section 1129(a)(8) provides that each class of claims must either have accepted the Plan or such class may not be impaired under the Plan. These requirements are critical. First, impairment means that the legal rights of the holders of the claims are adversely affected. The simplest example is that of an ordinary unsecured creditor. The legal right of that creditor is to be paid in full, in cash. If the Plan does anything other than pay that creditor in full, in cash, the holder of the claim is impaired within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Code. Accordingly, creditors are almost always “impaired”, because the Plan adversely affects their rights. If creditors are impaired, therefore, they must accept the Plan as a class or the Plan cannot be confirmed absent use of the exceptions contained in Section 1129(b). There is no easy way out of the box created by Section 1129(a)(8) as can be seen with respect to the discussion of the absolute priority rule in the next section.

Practice tip

Because impaired classes must vote to accept the Plan, the make-up of the various classes and the voting rules of Chapter 11 are of utmost importance. Debtor’s counsel has some discretion in the design of the classes, although the basic rule is set forth in Code section 1122 that “substantially similar” claims must be classified together. Because the unsecured creditor class is almost always impaired, Debtor’s counsel is actually assisted by the existence of a Creditors’ Committee with whom the Debtor may negotiate. A Plan approved and endorsed by the Committee will likely achieve the affirmative vote of the unsecured creditor class.

Section 1129(a)(9)(A) contains the requirement that the Plan must provide for the payment of administrative claims (and certain other specialized claims) in cash on the effective date of the Plan. Administrative claims are the ordinary and necessary expenses of operating the Debtor during the post-petition period. Administrative claims also include the claims of professionals, as allowed by the Court.

Section 1129(a)(9)(B) contains the requirement that if the class or classes containing certain specified priority unsecured claims rejects the Plan, those claims must be paid in full in cash on the effective date of the Plan or if the class or classes containing those claims accepts the Plan, those claims must nonetheless receive payments under the Plan of a present value equal to the allowed amount of such claim.

Section 1129(a)(9)(C) contains the requirement that certain pre-petition, unsecured tax claims against the Debtor, including income, sales and withholding taxes, must be paid in full under the Plan, with interest, over no more than five years.

Section 1129(a)(10) contains the requirement that if a class of claims is impaired under the Plan, at least one class of impaired creditors (excepting insiders) has approved the Plan. This is the “somebody has to think the Plan is a good idea test”.

Section 1129(a)(11) contains the requirement that the Court determine that the confirmation of the Debtors Plan is not likely to be followed by the further financial reorganization of the Debtor. In other words, the Court must determine that the Plan is feasible.

2. The Absolute Priority Rule

Section 1129(a)(8) required that each impaired class accept the Plan. Section 1129(b), however, sets forth those circumstances under which the Court may confirm a Plan notwithstanding the Debtor's failure to satisfy the requirement of 1129(a)(8). Section 1129(b) provides that the Court may confirm the Plan notwithstanding the failure to comply with (a)(8) provided the Plan is fair and equitable and does not discriminate unfairly.

Fair and Equitable with respect to a class of secured claims, means that the Plan cannot be confirmed over the objection of an impaired class of secured claims unless (i) the secured creditor retains its interest in the property of the Debtor and (ii) the secured creditor receives under the Plan deferred cash payments with a present value at least equal to the value of the secured creditor's interest in the Debtor's property.

Assume a class containing a single claim held by a secured creditor with a first priority lien on the Debtor's machinery and equipment. Assume the claim is in the amount of $500,000 and the property of the Debtor is worth more than that amount. Assume also that the claim is impaired because the Debtor is going to increase the term of the payout. If the holder of the claim votes against the Plan, the Debtor may still confirm the Plan provided that the Plan provides that (i) the secured creditor retains its lien on the property and (ii) the Debtor will pay an amount over time equal to the present value of the secured creditor's interest in the property. This means simply that the Debtor must provide the creditor a stream of payments worth $500,000. The only way this can be done is with a market rate of interest added to the $500,000 payment.

Assume now that the creditor's claim is $500,000, but the value of the collateral is only $300,000. In this context, the Plan may be confirmed over the objection of the creditor holding the secured claim by means of a Plan that (i) allows the creditor to retain its lien and (ii) pays the creditor an amount over time with a present value of $300,000. However, in this example the creditor still holds an unsecured claim for $200,000 and that claim must also be classified and dealt with under the Plan.

Practice Tip

Confirmation of a Plan over the objection of a non-consenting, impaired secured class is relatively easy. It merely requires that the Plan pay the secured creditor the present value of the amount of the secured creditor's claim and that the Plan leave the secured creditor's lien intact. Since secured debt is often paid over time with interest, this requirement is often consistent with the Debtor's business plan. In this arena, the battle will often be over whether the Debtor's Plan is feasible such that the creditor can reasonably expect the Debtor to fulfill the Plan terms. The parties may also disagree over the applicable interest rate necessary to achieve the correct present value.

3. The 1111(b) election

The Bankruptcy Code gives the under-secured, secured creditor one more trick, however. Under Code section 1111(b), the under-secured, secured creditor can elect to have its entire claim remain secured by the property that serves as collateral, even if the collateral presently has a value of less than the amount of the claim. If the secured creditor makes this election, it gives up its deficiency, unsecured claim in the reorganization proceeding. If the under-secured creditor makes the election, the Debtor must now pay the creditor the full amount of its claim over time, but the present value of that payment stream need only equal the current value of the collateral securing the creditor's claim. The creditor's lien remains on the property and the creditor can benefit from any future appreciation in the value of the collateral.

The 1111(b) election is not available if the secured creditor holds a recourse claim against the Debtor and the Debtor proposes to sell the property pursuant to a Plan or under Code section 363. The election is not available in these circumstances because the secured creditor can credit bid the full amount of its claim in the context of any such sale.

Fair and Equitable with respect to a class of unsecured claims, means that unless the claims in the class are paid in full under the Plan or the class votes to accept the Plan, the Plan cannot be confirmed over the objection of an impaired class of unsecured claims if the equity holders of the Debtor may retain or receive anything of value under the Plan. Code Section 1129(b)(2)(B).

In other words, the owners of the Debtor cannot retain ownership in the reorganized Debtor unless the unsecured creditors are paid in full under the Plan or each class of unsecured creditors consents to the treatment afforded under the Plan.

Notwithstanding this powerful legal blocking position held by unsecured creditors acting as a class, the unsecured creditors frequently consent to Plans in which they are not paid in full and in which the Debtor's insiders retain ownership of the Debtor. The reason this occurs is entirely practical: In many cases, if the Debtor's insiders do not retain ownership of all or most of the equity in the reorganized Debtor, there will be no reorganization at all. Instead, the insiders may give up hope of reorganization and allow the Debtor to be liquidated. Liquidation often leaves nothing for the unsecured creditors.

Viewed in a more positive light, unsecured creditors may allow the Debtor's insiders to retain ownership because they want the insiders to be motivated to work hard and make the Debtor successful. This is especially relevant in the majority of cases where unsecured creditors will receive payment only from the future profits of the Debtor. In other words, the "bargain" struck by unsecured creditors and insiders is that the insiders can retain ownership (and, frequently, jobs) as long as a portion of the Debtor's future profits are paid to the unsecured creditors. In most instances, it makes little economic sense for the unsecured creditors to attempt to block reorganization altogether, although the unsecured can be expected to hold out for the best treatment they can negotiate.

4. The new value exception to the Absolute Priority Rule

The federal courts are split as to whether an exception for new value exists to the Absolute Priority Rule as it relates to a non-consenting class of unsecured creditors. The new value exception would permit existing equity owners to retain ownership in the reorganized debtor notwithstanding the negative vote of a class of unsecured creditors who are not paid in full. The "exception" to the absolute priority rule existed under Pre-Code case law and practice. Uncertainty exists as to whether the exception survived enactment of the Bankruptcy Code and codification of the Absolute Priority Rule in section 1129(b)(2)(B). Since Congress chose to codify the Absolute Priority Rule in section 1129(b)(2)(B), but did not codify the new value exception to the rule, the argument goes, Congress must have intended not to permit the new value exception to survive codification of the Bankruptcy Code. This analysis is too simplistic, however.

Those courts that have recognized the exception to the Absolute Priority Rule have set forth the following requirements:

- Old equity must make a new contribution (i) in money or money's worth, (ii) that is reasonably equivalent to the value of the new equity interests to be acquired in the reorganized debtor, and (iii) that is necessary for implementation of a feasible plan of reorganization.

The requirement that the contribution be money or money's worth has been more strictly applied by the Courts. Without deciding whether the new value exception exists, the Supreme Court ruled in Norwest Bank v. Ahlers, 485 U.S. 197 (1988) that post confirmation services provided by an insider will not suffice as new value. The Seventh Circuit has ruled that the contribution must be "an up front infusion of money or money's worth". In re Snyder, 967 F.2d 1126, 1131 (7th Cir. 1992).

The court must also conduct a valuation hearing to determine if the proffered new value is reasonably equivalent to the value of the interests in the Debtor to be retained. Notably, some courts have ruled that equivalence does not exist where the contribution to the Debtor will not redound to the benefit of creditors, but will simply increase the value of the equity to be acquired. See In re One Times Square Associates Ltd. Partnership, 159 B.R. 695 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1993), aff'd 165 B.R. 773 (S.D.N.Y.), cert denied, 513 U.S. 1153 (1995); In re Miami Center Associates, Ltd., 144 B.R. 937 (Bankr. S. D. Fla. 1992).

Some courts have construed the necessity requirement narrowly and have required that the proposed new value be necessary to enable the reorganized debtor to operate successfully post confirmation. In re Tucson Self Storage, Inc., 166 B.R. 892, 899 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 1994); In re Sovereign Group, 142 B.R. 702, 708 (E. D. Pa 1992). Other courts have ruled that the necessity requirement is satisfied merely by showing that the old equity holders are "the most feasible source" of fresh capital. In re Potter Material Services, 781 F.2d 99, 102 (7th Cir. 1986; Bonner Mall Partnership v. U.S. Bancorp Mortgage Co., 2 F.3d 899, 911 (9th Cir. 1993).

The United States Supreme Court has declined the opportunity to rule expressly whether the new value exception remains good law in three recent cases, the most recent of which is Bank of America NT & SA v. 203 North LaSalle Street Partnership, 526 U.S. 434 (1999). In 203 North LaSalle, the Court subsumed the new value analysis with an analysis of the statutory requirements of Code section 1129(b)(2)(B). The Court focused on the meaning of the text in section 1129(b)(2)(B) providing that old equity cannot receive or retain any property "on account of" its old equity interest in the Debtor. The Court suggested three possible meanings for the language:

1. Old equity may not receive or retain anything of value under the Plan under any circumstances if a senior class is not paid in full or does not consent;
2. Old equity may not exchange its old equity for new equity, unless it makes a substantial new value contribution; and
3. Old equity may not retain equity in the reorganized debtor if the price paid by old equity is at a price that is less than "the greatest possible addition to the bankruptcy estate".

The Court rejected the first interpretation since it would always preclude insiders from retaining equity in the reorganized debtor and "old equity may well be in the best position to make a go of the reorganized enterprise and so may be the party most likely to work out an equity for value reorganization." 119 S. Ct. at 1421. The Court implicitly rejected the second formulation on the basis that it is incomplete: If old equity is to retain an interest in the reorganized debtor it must not only "pay" for it with new value, but it must be demonstrably clear to the Bankruptcy Court that no other person would pay more.

The Court wrote approvingly of the third meaning given to the statutory requirement that insiders cannot retain an interest "on account of" of their old equity position, but the Court refused to adopt such a rule because it found that the Plan at issue in the case failed the third test even if it were good law. The Plan at issue failed the test because of the Plan provisions that "vested equity in the reorganized business in the Debtor's partners without extending an opportunity to anyone else either to compete for that equity or to propose a competing reorganization plan." 119 S.Ct. at 1422.

The most that can be said with respect to the “new value exception”, therefore, is that the Supreme Court may accept a Plan under which old equity retains an interest in the reorganized debtor over the objection of a class of creditors who are not paid in full only if it is clear that all parties in interest have had an equal opportunity to bid on the equity and that, notwithstanding such opportunity, no other party would pay more than the amount offered by old equity. As a practical matter, therefore, insiders faced with a non-consenting class of unsecured creditors must either be prepared to terminate exclusivity to permit any party to file a Plan with respect to the Debtor or the Debtor must promulgate a Plan under which the equity in the Debtor will be auctioned to the highest bidder.
